AIR 1971 SUPREME COURT 1
(V 58 C 1)

(From: Madras)*

J. C. SHAH, V. RAMASWAMI AND
A. N. GROVER JJ.

M/s. V/O. Tractoroexport, Moscow, Appellant v. M/s. Tarapore and Co.,
Madras and another, Respondents

Civil Appeals Nos. 1208, 1209, 1833 and 1834 of 1969, D/- 28-10-1969.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), Preamble — — Interpretation of Statutes — Interpretation should not be inconsistent with established International Law.

There is a presumption that Parliament does not assert or assume jurisdiction which goes beyond the limits established by the common consent of nations and statutes are to be interpreted provided that their language permits, so as not to be inconsistent with the comity of nations or with the established principles of International Law. But this principle applies only where there is an ambiguity and must give way before a clearly expressed intention. If statutory enactments are clear in meaning, they must be construed according to their meaning even though they are contrary to the comity of nations or International Law. (Para 16)

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), Preamble — Interpretation of Statutes — Domestic

* O. S. Appeals Nos. 25 and 23 of 1968 and Applns. Nos. 105 and 106 of 1968 in C. S. No. 118 of 1967 D/- 14-12-1968 and 12-4-1968 (Mad).

legislation to carry out International conventions.

In this country, as is the case in England, the treaty or International Protocol or convention does not become effective or operative of its own force as in some of the continental countries unless domestic legislation has been introduced to attain a specified result. Once the Parliament has legislated, the Court must first look at the legislation and construe the language employed in it. If the terms of the legislative enactment do not suffer from any ambiguity or lack of clarity they must be given effect to even if they do not carry out the treaty obligations. But the treaty or the Protocol or the convention becomes important if the meaning of the expressions used by the Parliament is not clear and can be construed in more than one way. The reason is that if one of the meanings which can be properly ascribed is in consonance with the treaty obligations and the other meaning is not so consonant, the meaning which is consonant is to be preferred. Even where an Act had been passed to give effect to the convention which was scheduled to it, the words employed in the Act had to be interpreted in the well-established sense which they had in municipal law. (1933) AC 402, Ref. (Para 17)

(C) Foreign Awards (Recognition and Enforcement) Act (1961), Section 3 — Expression "submission" in section means actual submission or completed reference and does not mean an agreement to refer or an arbitral clause — "Agreement" does not mean a commercial contract but an agreement to refer or an arbitral clause—Genesis and the background of the Act considered. Per Shah and Grover, JJ. (Ramaswami, J. Contra) (Para 23)

(D) Foreign Awards (Recognition and Enforcement) Act (1961), S. 3 — Suit in India not liable to be stayed when there is absence of actual submission of dispute to arbitration in foreign country — Foreign firm, a party to suit will be restrained from proceeding with arbitration in foreign country — Principles of Section 35 Arbitration Act 1940 will be applied.

(Per Shah and Grover JJ.) — With regard to foreign proceedings, the Court will restrain a person within its jurisdiction from instituting or prosecuting suits in a foreign Court whenever the circumstances of the case make such an interposition necessary or proper. This jurisdiction will be exercised whenever there is vexation or oppression. In England Courts have been very cautious and have largely refrained from granting stay of proceedings in foreign Courts. The injunction is, however issued against a party and not a foreign Court.

Although it is a moot point whether Section 35 of the Arbitration Act, 1940, will be applicable to such a case, the principle embodied in that section cannot be completely ignored while considering the question of injunction. (Para 27)

Where the suit is not being stayed under Section 3 of the Foreign Awards (Recognition and Enforcement) Act it would be contrary to the principle underlying Section 35 not to grant an injunction restraining the foreign Firm from proceeding with the arbitration at foreign country. The principle essentially is that the arbitrators should not proceed with the arbitration side by side in rivalry or in competition as if it were a civil Court.

Ordinarily, a party which has entered into a contract of which an arbitral clause forms an integral part should not receive the assistance of the Court when it seeks to resile from it. But where a suit is being tried in the Courts of this country, which cannot be stayed under Section 3 of the Foreign Awards (Recognition and Enforcement) Act in the absence of an actual submission of the disputes to the arbitral tribunal in foreign country prior to the institution of the suit, the only proper course to follow is to restrain the foreign Firm which has gone to the foreign Tribunal for adjudication of the disputes from getting the matter decided by the tribunal so long as the suit here is pending and has not been disposed of.

Moreover, the arbitration proceedings in foreign countries if allowed to be continued, it will be ex parte where due to restrictions on availability of foreign exchange, put by Government of India of which Courts will take judicial notice, it would be impossible for Indian firms to take its witnesses to the foreign country before the arbitral tribunal and to properly conduct the proceedings there.

The following Judgments of the Court were delivered by GROVER, J. (For himself and Shah J.)—These connected appeals which involve points of importance and interest in international commercial arbitration arise out of a suit instituted on the original side of the High Court of Judicature at Madras by M/s. Tarapore & Co. against M/s. V. O. Tractoroexport, Moscow.

2. Initially the claim was for a permanent injunction restraining the Russian firm from realizing the proceeds of a Letter of Credit opened on June 9, 1965, with the Bank of India, Ltd., Madras, which had also been impleaded as a defendant. Subsequently by an amendment of the plaint the plaintiff has confined relief to recovery of damages.

3. The facts chronologically are as follows: A contract was entered into on February 2, 1965, between the Indian and the Russian firms for the supply of earth-moving machinery for a value of Rupees 66,09,372.00. The machinery was required by the Indian firm for executing the work of excavation of a feeder canal as part of the Farraka Barrage Project. On June 9, 1965, the Indian firm opened a Letter of Credit with the Bank of India Ltd., for the entire value of the machinery in favour of the Russian firm. The consignments started arriving at Calcutta in October, 1965. On February 22, 1966, the Indian firm wrote to the Russian firm saying that there was something wrong with the design and working of motorised scrapers which had been supplied and which formed one of the items of machinery covered by the contract. On June 6, 1966 came the devaluation of the Indian rupee by 57.48 per cent. as a result of which the amount that became payable by the Indian firm to the Russian firm under the contract increased by Rs. 25 lakhs or so. On June 20, 1966, the Russian firm demanded an increase in the Letter of Credit owing to the devaluation. On August 1, 1966, the Indian firm served a notice on the Russian firm containing the main allegations relating to breach of contract on the part of the Russian firm. The latter was called upon to remedy the breaches and pay compensation. It was made clear that until this was done the Russian firm would not be entitled to encash the Letter of Credit for the balance amount. On August 4, 1966, the Indian firm filed a suit on the original side of the Madras High Court and obtained an ex parte order of injunction in respect of the operation of the Letter of Credit. On August 14, 1966, the parties arrived at a settlement at Delhi after mutual discussion.

4. Pursuant to the agreement the suit was withdrawn by the Indian firm but no amicable settlement, as contemplated, took place. The Indian firm instituted a suit (No. C. S. 118 of 1967) on the original side of the Madras High Court on August 14, 1967. It also filed an application for an interim injunction in the matter of the operation of the Letter of Credit. On October 26, 1967, another application was filed for an interim injunction against the encashment of the devaluation drafts. On November 4, 1967, the Russian firm instituted proceedings in terms of the arbitral clause in the contract before the Foreign Trade Arbitration Commission of the U. S. S. R. Chamber of Commerce, Moscow. On November 14, 1967, the Russian firm entered appearance under protest before the Madras High Court in the suit filed by the Indian firm. On the same date the Russian firm filed an application under S. 3 of the Foreign Awards (Recognition and Enforcement) Act (XLV of 1961), hereinafter called the Act. A prayer was made for stay of the suit. On January 15, 1968, the Indian firm filed an application for an interim injunction restraining the Russian firm from taking any further part in the arbitration proceedings at Moscow. We are not concerned with the branch of the litigation which came up to this Court at a prior stage in respect of the interim injunctions granted by the single Judge with regard to the operation of the Letter of Credit and the subsequent arrangement made for payment as a result of devaluation. It is sufficient to mention that the appeals brought to this court were allowed on November 26, 1968, and the temporary injunction granted by the learned single Judge relating to the operation of the Letter of Credit was vacated.

5. The application which had been filed by the Russian firm for stay of the suit under Sec. 3 of the Act was dismissed by Ramamurthi, J., on April 12, 1968. The application of the Indian firm for an interim injunction restraining the Russian firm from taking any further part in the arbitration proceedings at Moscow was, however, granted. The Russian firm preferred appeals against the orders of the learned single Judge before a Division Bench. The bench maintained the orders of Ramamurthi, J. The present appeals have been brought by the Russian firm by special leave both against the order of the Division Bench and against the judgment of the learned single Judge. This was presumably done because there was some controversy about the finality of the orders which had been made by the single Judge of the High Court.

6. The questions which have to be determined in these appeals are quite narrow. The first question is whether the words "a submission made in pursuance of an agreement" mean an actual or completed reference made pursuant to an arbitration agreement or they mean an arbitration agreement that has come into existence as a result of a commercial contract. According to the appellant firm whenever there is an arbitration agreement or an arbitral clause in a commercial contract of the nature mentioned in the Convention the Court is bound to stay the suit provided the other conditions laid down in Section 3 are satisfied. On this approach the word "submission" is to be understood as an arbitration agreement or arbitral Clause relating to existing or future differences and the word "agreement" means an agreement of a commercial or business character to which the Convention applies. The respondent firm maintains that the critical words "submission" and "agreement" must be given their natural and grammatical meaning and the word "submission" made in pursuance of an agreement can only mean an actual submission of the disputes to the arbitral tribunal. The word "agreement" can have reference to and can be construed only in the sense of an arbitration agreement or an arbitral clause in a commercial contract. It cannot mean a commercial contract because an arbitration agreement cannot be stated to have been made pursuant to a commercial contract. In other words, if submission has to be taken in the sense of an arbitration agreement it would render the words "submission made in pursuance of an agreement" meaningless and unintelligible. The second question relates to the jurisdiction of the Courts in this country to grant an injunction restraining a party which is in Moscow from proceeding with the conduct of arbitration before a tribunal there. Even if the Courts have jurisdiction to grant an injunction, it is said, it would not be a proper exercise of that jurisdiction in the circumstances of the present case to give an injunctory relief. The learned single Judge has decided certain other controversial issues but the Division Bench did not go into them nor do we propose to deal with them unless the decision on the true and correct interpretation of Section 3 of the Act goes in favour of the appellant firm.

7. The Act has been enacted to enable effect to be given to the Convention on the recognition and enforcement of foreign arbitral awards done at New York on June 10, 1958, to which India is a party. In the Statement of Objects and Reasons it has been pointed out that the procedure for settlement through arbitration of disputes arising from international trade was first regulated by the Geneva Protocol on Arbitration Clauses 1923 and the Geneva Convention on the Executive of Foreign Arbitral Awards to which India was a party and which was given effect to in India by the Arbitration (Protocol and Convention) Act, 1937.

8. The provisions of the Act may be noticed. Sections 2 and 3 are in these terms:

Section 2. "In this Act unless the context otherwise requires "foreign award" means an award on differences between persons arising out of legal relationships, whether contractual or not, considered as commercial under the law in force in India made on or after the 11th day of October, 1960—

(a) In pursuance of an agreement in writing for arbitration to which the Convention set forth in the Schedule applies; and

(b) In one of such territories as the Central Government being satisfied that reciprocal provisions have been made may, by notification in the Official Gazette, declare to be territories to which the said Convention applies."

Section 3. "Notwithstanding anything contained in the Arbitration Act, 1940, or in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, if any party to a submission made in pursuance of an agreement to which the Convention set forth in the Schedule applies, or any person claiming through or under him commences any legal proceedings in any Court against any other party to the submission or any person claiming through or under him in respect of any matter agreed to be referred any party to such legal proceedings may, at any time after appearance and before filing a written statement or taking any other step in the proceedings, apply to the Court to stay the proceedings and the Court unless satisfied that the agreement is null and void, inoperative or incapable of being performed or that there is not in fact any dispute between the parties with regard to the matter agreed to be referred shall make an order staying the proceedings."

The Schedule contains the Convention on the recognition and enforcement of foreign arbitral awards. Article II may be reproduced with advantage.

Article II

1. Each Contracting State shall recognise an agreement in writing under which the parties undertake to submit to arbitration all or any differences which have arisen or which may arise between them in respect of defined legal relationship, whether contractual or not concerning a subject-matter capable of settlement by arbitration.

2. The term "agreement in writing" shall include an arbitral clause in a contract or an arbitration agreement, signed by the parties or contained in an exchange of Letters or telegram.

3. The Court of a Contracting State, when seized of an action in a matter in respect of which the parties have made an agreement within the meaning of this article, shall, at the request of one of the parties, refer the parties to arbitration, unless it finds that the said agreement is null and void, inoperative or incapable of being performed."

9. In order to resolve the controversy on the first question the history of the International Protocols and Conventions as a result of which legislation had to be enacted in England and India as also the relevant provisions of the Arbitration law may be set out. The Geneva Protocol on Arbitration Clauses 1923 recognised the validity of an agreement between each of the Contracting States whether relating to existing or future differences between parties subject respectively to the jurisdiction of different Contracting States by which the parties to a contract agreed to submit to arbitration all or any differences that might arise in connection with such contract relating to commercial matters or to any other matter capable of submission by arbitration whether or not the arbitration was to take place in a country to whose jurisdiction none of the parties was subject. Article 4 of the Protocol was as follows:

"The tribunals of the Contracting Parties, on being seized of a dispute regarding a contract made between persons to whom Article applies and including an arbitration agreement whether referring to present or future differences which is valid in virtue of the said Article and capable of being carried into effect, shall refer the parties on the application of either of them to the decision of the arbitrators....."

In order to give effect to this Protocol the Arbitration Clauses (Protocol) Act, 1924 was enacted in England. Section 1 (1) of that Act contained provisions similar to Section 3 of the Act with certain differences. When the aforesaid Act of 1924 was enacted the meaning of "submission" as contained in Section 27 of the English Arbitration Act, 1889, was "a written agreement to submit present or future differences to arbitration whether an arbitrator was named therein or not."

10. The Arbitration (Foreign Awards) Act, 1930, was enacted to give effect "to a certain convention on the execution of arbitral awards and to amend sub-section (1) of Section 1 of the Arbitration Clauses (Protocol) Act, 1924, which provision was described in Section 8 as one "for staying of legal proceedings in a Court in respect of matters to be referred to arbitration under agreements to which the Protocol applies". The Arbitration Act, 1889, was amended by the Arbitration Act of 1934 which also provided for other matters relating to arbitration law in England. In sub-section (2) of Section 21 the expression "arbitration agreement" was defined to mean "a written agreement to submit present or future differences to arbitration whether an arbitrator was named therein or not".

11. Although the definition of the expression "arbitration agreement" was introduced by the amendment made by the Arbitration Act of 1934 the definition of the word "submission" contained in Section 27 of the Arbitration Act of 1889 remained unaffected and unchanged. To complete the history of legislation in England mention may be made of the Arbitration Act, 1950, which repealed the earlier enactments. Section 4 (2) of this Act provided for stay when legal proceedings were commenced in Court by any party "to a submission to arbitration made in pursuance of an agreement to which the protocol set out in the First Schedule to this Act applies". The Schedule to this Act contained the Geneva Protocol on Arbitration Clauses of 1923 and the Geneva Convention on the execution of foreign arbitral awards of 1927. In this Act the definition of "submission" contained in the Act of 1889 was omitted. By Section 32 "arbitration agreement" was defined to mean "a written agreement to submit present or future differences to arbitration, whether an arbitrator is named therein or not".

12. In India the Arbitration (Protocol and Convention) Act, 1937, was enacted for the first time to give effect to the Protocol and the Convention of 1923 and 1927 respectively. This was done as the Government wanted to meet widely expressed desire of the commercial world that arbitration agreements should be ensured effective recognition and protection. Section 3 of the 1937 Act employed the same language as is contained in Section 3 of the Act except with some minor differences. Both the Geneva Protocol of 1923 and the Convention of 1927 were appended as Schedules to this Act. So far as the ordinary arbitration law was concerned, prior to the enactment of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1940, there were two sets of laws applicable to what were called Presidency towns and areas which did not fall within those towns. The Indian Arbitration Act, 1889, applied to cases where the subject matter submitted to arbitration was of a nature that if a suit were to be instituted it could be instituted in a Presidency town. Section 4 (b) contained the definition of the word "submission" which was similar to the definition in the English Act of 1889. In the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, Part V dealt with arbitration. These provisions were applicable to such areas which were outside the Presidency towns. When the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, was enacted it contained in the IIInd Schedule similar provisions for arbitration. There was, however, no definition of "submission" or "arbitration agreement". The Arbitration Act, 1940, was meant to consolidate and amend the law relating to arbitration in India. The word "submission" was not defined but the word "arbitration agreement" in Section 2 (a) was stated to mean a written agreement to submit present or future differences to arbitration whether the arbitrator was named therein or not.

13. The phraseology which has been employed in the English statute and the Indian enactment for giving effect to the Protocol and the Conventions relating to arbitration is practically the same. In the English Act of 1924 the words used were identical with the words to be found in Section 3 of the Act, namely, "a submission made in pursuance of an agreement". The only change which has been effected in the English Arbitration Act of 1950 in Section 4 (2) is that the words "to arbitration" have been inserted within the words "submission" and "made". Among the authoritative text book writers there has been a good deal of divergence of opinion on the meaning of the above phraseology. In the 8th Edn. of the Conflict of Laws by Dicey and Morris, Rule 182 has been formulated which is based on Section 4 (2) of the English Arbitration Act, 1950. Referring to Section 4 (2) and the meaning of the words "a submission to arbitration made in pursuance of an agreement to which the protocol applies" the authors are of the view that this condition is satisfied if the parties have agreed to submit present or future disputes to arbitration. The Court is, according to them, under a duty to stay proceedings although no arbitrators have been appointed. The word "submission" must be regarded as synonymous with the term "arbitration agreement" in the Protocol and the term "agreement to which the Protocol applies" is used "to identify the commercial or business contract between the parties." This statement is based on the judgment of Scarman, J., in Owners of Cargo on Board the Merak v. The Merak (Owners), (1965) 2 WLR 250. Even before the pronouncement of this judgment preference for the view which later on came to be expressed by Scarman, J., had been indicated in the 7th Edn. of the same book. (See pages 1075 to 1076). According to the well-known work of Russell on Arbitration, 17th Edn., the English translation of the Protocol is most obscure. This is what has been stated at p. "9:

"The words of the section, however, would seem to limit its operation to cases where some sort of "agreement to submit" is followed by an actual "submission" made "pursuant to" it. (Presumably, the word "submission" here bears its natural meaning, of "a submission (written or not) of an actual dispute to the authority of an arbitral tribunal," rather than the statutory meaning which it bore under the 1889 Act and is now borne by the phrase "arbitration agreement"). Thus the common case, of an agreement to refer which is never followed by a submission because the claimant prefers to sue instead, is apparently outside the section, although the Protocol clearly meant it to be covered; see the French text of Article 4".

The English translation of the French text in the 1950 Act has been stated to be a mistranslation. It has been suggested that the Parliament may have enacted not the true text of the Protocol but a very limited interpretation of the false translation. In Halsbury's Laws of England, Third Edn., Cumulative Supplement 1968, Vol. II, Arbitration, page 2, reference has been made to the decision of Scarman, J., in The Merak which was affirmed on appeal and which has been followed in Unipat A. G. v. Dowty Hydraulic Units, 1967 R. P. C. 401 the statement in the text being that this provision of law applies although no actual submission to arbitration has been made.

14. In the Merak, (1965) 2 WLR 250, Scarman, J., read Section 4 (2) of the Act of 1950 with the translation of the Protocol in the First Schedule to the Act. According to him the Protocol was concerned with two agreements — one, a contract commercial in character or giving rise to a difference relating to matters that were either commercial or otherwise capable of settlement by arbitration between parties subject to the jurisdiction of different contracting States; the other an arbitration agreement whereby the parties to such a contract agreed to submit their differences to arbitration. (The arbitration agreement might be itself included in and simultaneous with the commercial or business contract). Section 4 (2) of the Act was intended to make the same distinction between the parties' business contract and their arbitration agreement. He proceeded to say:

"It uses the term "submission to arbitration" to identify the protocol's agreement to submit their differences to arbitration and the term "agreement to which the protocol applies" to identify the commercial or business contract between the parties. Section 4 (2), in my opinion, applies to agreements to submit to arbitration made in pursuance of a contract to which, because of its character and the character of its parties, the protocol applies. The words "in pursuance of" merely establish the link that there must be between the agreement to submit present or future differences to arbitration and the agreement of a commercial or business character between parties of a certain class to which the protocol applies. They have in this context no temporal significance."

15. One of the main reasons which prevailed in The Merak, 1965-2 W.L.R. 250 was that by construing "submission to arbitration" as an actual submission of an existing dispute to a particular arbitrator, it would make "nonsense of the Protocol".

16. Now, as stated in Halsbury's Laws of England Vol. 36, p. 414, there is a presumption that Parliament does not assert or assume jurisdiction which goes beyond the limits established by the common consent of nations and statutes are to be interpreted provided that their language permits, so as not to be inconsistent with the comity of nations or with the established principles of International Law. But this principle applies only where there is an ambiguity and must give way before a clearly expressed intention. If statutory enactments are clear in meaning, they must be construed according to their meaning even though they are contrary to the comity of nations or International Law.

17. We may look at another well-recognised principle. In this country, as is the case in England, the treaty or International Protocol or convention does not become effective or operative of its own force as in some of the continental countries unless domestic legislation has been introduced to attain a specified result. Once, the Parliament has legislated, the Court must first look at the legislation and construe the language employed in it. If the terms of the legislative enactment do not suffer from any ambiguity or lack of clarity they must be given effect to even if they do not carry out the treaty obligations. But the treaty or the Protocol or the convention becomes important if the meaning of the expressions used by the Parliament is not clear and can be construed in more than one way. The reason is that if one of the meanings which can be properly ascribed is in consonance with the treaty obligations and the other meaning is not so consonant, the meaning which is consonant is to be preferred. Even where an Act had been passed to give effect to the convention which was scheduled to it, the words employed in the Act had to be interpreted in the well established sense which they had in municipal law (See Barras v. Aberdeen Steam Trawling and Fishing Co. Ltd., 1933 AC 402.)

18. The approach in "The Merak" appears to have been dominated by the Protocol of 1923 and the question to be examined is whether the language of Section 4 (2) of the English Act of 1950 and Section 3 of the Act contains any such ambiguity or suffers from any such lack of clarity as would justify the use of the Protocol to the extent made in the English case. The term 'submission' as defined in the English Act of 1889 and the Indian Act of 1899, was meant to cover both an arbitration clause by which the parties agreed that if disputes arose they would be referred to arbitration and also an actual submission of a particular dispute or disputes to the authority of a particular arbitrator. For the sake of convenience, a distinction could be made by calling the first "an agreement to refer" and the second "a submission". The term — "arbitration agreement" as defined by the English Act of 1950 and the Indian Act of 1940 also covers both "an agreement to refer" and "an actual submission". Turning to the words used in Section 3 of the Act "submission made in pursuance of an agreement to which the convention set forth in the schedule applies", the first critical expression "submission" can have both the meanings in view of the historical background of the legislation which was enacted to give effect to the Protocol and the Conventions. If this term is to be given the larger meaning of including of "an agreement to refer" as also "an actual submission" of a particular dispute, it has to be determined which meaning would be appropriate in the context in which the term "submission" has been used in Section 3 of the Act. If "submission" means "agreement to refer" or an "arbitral clause" in a commercial contract, it makes the entire set of words unintelligible and completely ambiguous. It is difficult to comprehend in that case why the Legislature should have used the words which follow the term "submission", namely, "made in pursuance of an agreement." This brings us to the true import of the expression "agreement." If by "agreement" is meant a commercial contract of the nature mentioned in the "Merak", the words "made in pursuance of" convey no sense. Another anomaly which militates against the established rule of interpretation would arise if by the word "agreement" is meant a commercial contract. It cannot, even by stretching the language, bear that meaning in the second part of Sec. 3 which reads:

".....The court unless satisfied that the agreement is null and void, inoperative or incapable of being performed or that there is not in fact any dispute between the parties with regard to the matter agreed to be referred shall make an order staying the proceedings."

Here "agreement" can have reference to and mean not the commercial contract to which the convention set forth in the Schedule applies but only the agreement to refer or the arbitral clause. Unless the context so compels or requires, the same meaning must ordinarily be attributed or given to the same words used in the section. The above difficulties completely disappear if "submission" is given the second meaning of an actual submission of a particular dispute or disputes to the authority of a particular arbitrator. The words which we are construing then have a clear, consistent and intelligible meaning, namely, an actual submission made in pursuance of an arbitration agreement or arbitral clause to which the convention set forth in the Schedule applies. The words "in pursuance of" are also thus saved and not rendered otiose. The courts have to be guided by the words of the statute in which the legislature of the country has expressed its intention. If Section 3 cannot be so read as to permit the meaning of the word "submission" to be taken as an arbitral clause or an agreement to refer, the courts would not be justified in so straining the language of the section as to ascribe the meaning which cannot be warranted by the words employed by the legislature. We are aware of no rule of interpretation by which rank ambiguity can be first introduced by giving certain expressions a particular meaning and then an attempt can be made to emerge out of semantic confusion and obscurity by having resort to the presumed intention of the legislature to give effect to international obligations.

19. It is true that by taking the above view the purpose and object behind the Protocol and the conventions may not be fully carried out. The intention underlying Article 4 of the Protocol of 1923 and Art. 2 of the Convention of 1958 undoubtedly appears to be that whenever the parties have agreed that their differences arising out of a commercial contract be referred to an arbitration the Court of a contracting State when seized of an action in the matter, shall refer the parties to an arbitration unless it finds that the agreement is null and void or is inoperative or incapable of being performed. We apprehend it would hardly be conducive to international commercial arbitration not to have legislation giving full and complete effect to what is provided by the Protocol and the Conventions. We also share in full measure the anxiety and the effort of those who desire to respect the terms of international Protocols and Conventions in letter and spirit. But we are bound by the mandate of the legislature. Once it has expressed its intention in words which have a clear signification and meaning, the Courts are precluded from speculating about the reasons for not effectuating the purpose underlying the Protocol and the conventions. The consistent view of the Indian Courts on the interpretation of the critical words in Section 3 of the Act of 1937 has not been in favour of what prevailed in the "Merak". In the leading case in W. Wood & Son Ltd. v. Bengal Corporation, AIR 1959 Cal 8, Chakravarti C. J. while delivering the judgment of the court, examined the various aspects of the question including the terms of the Protocol of 1923 and the Convention of 1927 and said:

"If the agreement to which the Protocol applies is an agreement for arbitration, there cannot possibly be an agreement in pursuance of that agreement. Section 3 must, therefore, be construed as contemplating a case where not only is there an arbitration agreement in force between the parties but there has also been an actual reference to arbitration."

20. The learned Single Judge has given some reasons why in England as also in India the Statutes insist upon an actual submission before a stay of the suit can be granted. It has been pointed out that in different countries the law relating to arbitration is naturally different. Actual submission has been made a condition precedent for granting stay but the court has been left with no discretion in England and in India. In some of the other countries the order for stay of a suit contrary to the arbitral clause is discretionary, there being no difference between the municipal arbitration and arbitration under the Protocol. It was presumably for this reason that the Parliament insisted upon a real dispute between the parties and an actual reference or submission to an arbitration to resolve the particular point or points in dispute as a condition for stay. We do not consider that it would be right to speculate about the reasons which prevailed with the Parliament in enacting Sec. 3 of the Act in the language in which it has been done. It is abundantly clear that the Parliament did not employ language which would indicate an unequivocal intention that in the presence of an agreement to refer to an arbitral clause in a commercial contract, the provisions for granting stay under the section would immediately become applicable irrespective of an actual submission or a completed reference. As it was open to the legislature to deviate from the terms of the Protocol and the Convention it appears to have given only a limited effect to the provisions of the 1958 Convention. A clear deviation from the rigid and strict rule that the courts must stay a suit whenever an international commercial arbitration as contemplated by the Protocol and the Conventions, was to take place, is to be found in Sec. 3. It is of a nature which is common to all provisions relating to stay in English and Indian arbitration laws, the provisions being that the application to the court for stay of the suit must be made by a party before filing a written statement or taking any other step in the proceedings. If the condition is not fulfilled, no stay can be granted. It cannot thus be said that Sec. 3 of the Act or similar provisions in the prior Act of 1937 or the English Statutes were enacted to give effect in its entirety to the strict rule contained in the Protocol and the Conventions.

21. Another significant feature which cannot escape notice is that the Parliament in England and India must be presumed to have been aware when the English Act of 1950 and the Act were enacted that the expression 'submission' had been abandoned in the Arbitration Acts and, instead, the term 'arbitration agreement' had come to be defined as meaning what submission meant according to the definitions in the English Act of 1889 and Indian Arbitration Act of 1899. Notwithstanding this, the expression 'submission' was employed in Section 4 (2) of the English Act of 1950 and Section 3 of the Act. If the intention was to have the wider meaning the proper and correct term to use was "arbitration agreement" and logically those words would have been employed. It is more plausible that the Parliament by retaining the expression 'submission' wanted to give it the meaning of an actual submission, as by then there had been firm expression of opinion in the well-known work of Russell on Arbitration and by jurists like Prof. Arthur Nassbaum in an article "Treatise on Commercial Arbitration" in Vol. 56 of the Harvard Law Review, pointing to that meaning being given to 'submission'. In India the High Courts had uniformly and in unequivocal terms taken that view (See W. Wood & Son Ltd., AIR 1959 Cal 8 (Supra)).

22. The language in the relevant article of the Convention of 1958 had also undergone a change. According to Article II, the term "agreement in writing" was to include an arbitral clause in a contract or an arbitration agreement and that term was stated to mean something by which the parties undertook to submit to arbitration all or any differences which had arisen or which might arise between them in respect of any defined legal relationship whether contractual or not concerning a subject matter capable of settlement by arbitration. Thus, the term "agreement in writing" embraced an arbitral clause or an agreement simpliciter to refer to arbitration as also an actual submission of the disputes to the arbitrator. It was equivalent to 'Arbitration Agreement' as defined in the Act. By not using that term and by employing the expression 'submission' in Section 3 the Parliament appears to have indicated an intention to restrict the meaning of that expression to an actual submission or a complete reference.

23. Whatever way Section 3 of the Act is looked at, it is difficult to reach the conclusion that 'submission' means an agreement to refer or an arbitral clause and does not mean an actual submission or completed reference, and that the word "agreement" means a commercial contract and not an agreement to refer or an arbitral clause.

24. The next question is whether the High Court was justified in granting an interim injunction restraining the Russian Firm from proceeding with arbitration at Moscow. The position of the Russian firm is that neither it nor the Foreign Trade Arbitration Commission of the U.S.S.R. Chamber of Commerce which is seized of the arbitration proceedings is amenable to the jurisdiction of the courts in India. The presence in India of the party sought to be enjoined is a condition pre-requisite for the grant of an injunction. Alternatively, the Indian Firm has been guilty of breach of the agreement to refer the matter to arbitration at Moscow and therefore it has disentitled itself to the exercise of the Court's discretion in its favour in the matter of granting an injunction.

25. Now, it is common ground that the point about the Russian Firm having no representative in India was not agitated before the High Court. The position taken up in the plaint was that the Russian Firm was carrying on business in the U.S.S.R. and at Madras. The controversy before the High Court appears to have been confined only to what is stated in Para. 5 of the counter-affidavit of the Russian Firm, namely, that in the presence of the Arbitration agreement in the contract entered into between the parties, the only proper remedy for the Indian Firm was to submit the disputes to the arbitration tribunal at Moscow.

26. The rule as stated in Halsbury's Laws of England Vol. 21, at page 407, is that with regard to foreign proceedings, the court will restrain a person within its jurisdiction from instituting or prosecuting suits in a foreign court whenever the circumstances of the case make such an interposition necessary or proper. This jurisdiction will be exercised whenever there is vexation or oppression. In England, Courts have been very cautious and have largely refrained from granting stay of proceedings in foreign Courts (Cheshire's Private Industrial Law, 7th Ed. pages 108-110). The injunction is, however, issued against a party and not a foreign Court.

27. Although it is a moot point whether Section 35 of the Arbitration Act, 1940, will be applicable to the present case, (Shiva Jute Baling Ltd. v. Hindley and Co., Ltd., (1960) 1 SCR 569 = (AIR 1959 SC 1357), it was assumed that Section 35 applied to protocol arbitration), the principle embodied in that section cannot be completely ignored while considering the question of injunction. According to that section no reference nor award can be rendered invalid by reason only of the commencement of legal proceedings upon the subject of the reference, but when legal proceedings upon the whole of the subject matter of the reference have been commenced between all the parties to the reference and a notice thereof has been given to the arbitrators or umpire, all further proceedings in a pending reference shall, unless a stay of proceedings is granted under Section 34, be invalid.

28. If the venue of the arbitration proceedings had been in India and if the provisions of the Arbitration Act of 1940, had been applicable, the suit and the arbitration proceedings could not have been allowed to go on simultaneously and either the suit would have been stayed under Section 34 or if it was not stayed, and the arbitrators were notified about the pendency of the suit, they would have had to stay the arbitration proceedings because under Section 35 such proceedings would become invalid if there was identity between the subject-matter of the reference and the suit. In the present case, when the suit is not being stayed under Section 3 of the Act it would be contrary to the principle underlying Section 35 not to grant an injunction restraining the Russian Firm from proceeding with the arbitration at Moscow. The principle essentially is that the arbitrators should not proceed with the arbitration side by side in rivalry or in competition as if it were a Civil Court.

29. Ordinarily, a party which has entered into a contract of which an arbitral clause forms an integral part should not receive the assistance of the Court when it seeks to resile from it. But in the present case a suit is being tried in the Courts of this country which, for the reasons already stated, cannot be stayed under Section 3 of the Act in the absence of an actual submission of the disputes to the arbitral tribunal at Moscow prior to the institution of the suit. The only proper course to follow is to restrain the Russian Firm which has gone to the Moscow Tribunal for adjudication of the disputes from getting the matter decided by the tribunal so long as the suit here is pending and has not been disposed of.

30. In this context, we cannot also ignore what has been represented during the arguments. The current restrictions imposed by the Government of India on the availability of foreign exchange of which judicial notice can be taken will make it virtually impossible for the Indian Firm to take its witnesses to Moscow for examination before the Arbitral tribunal and to otherwise properly conduct the proceedings there. Thus, the proceedings before that tribunal are likely to be in effect ex parte. The High Court was, therefore, right in exercising discretion in the matter of granting an interim injunction in favour of the Indian Firm.

31. The appeals fail and are dismissed but in view of the peculiar nature of the points involved, there will be no order as to costs.

RAMASWAMI, J.—32. I regret I am unable to agree with the judgment pronounced by Grover, J.

33. The first respondent had entered into a contract with the Government of India for the excavation work in the feeder canal of the Farakka

Barrage project. To fulfil this contract with the Government of India and for the excavation work the first respondent required certain construction machinery such as scrapers, both towed and motorised crawlers, tractors and bulldozers. The respondent No. 1 agreed to purchase them from the appellant and the latter agreed to supply and deliver and the terms and conditions of the contract were embodied in a document dated February 2, 1965 signed by both the parties. In pursuance of the contract the first respondent opened a confirmed irrevocable and divisible letter of credit with the second respondent for the entire value of the equipment, that is, Rs. 66,09,372 in favour of the appellant negotiable through the Bank of Foreign Trade of the U.S.S.R. Moscow. Under the said letter of credit the second respondent was required to pay to the appellant on production of the documents particularised in the letter of credit along with the drafts. One of the conditions of the letter of credit was that 25 per cent of the amount should be paid on the presentation of the specified documents and the balance of 75 per cent within one year from the date of the first payment. On the strength of the contract the appellant supplied all the machinery which it undertook to supply by about the end of December, 1965. After the machinery was used for some time the first respondent complained that the machinery did not conform to the terms and conditions of the contract and consequently it had incurred and continued to incur considerable loss. Meanwhile the Indian rupee was devalued on June 6, 1966 and in consequence the price of the machinery went up by about 57.48 per cent. The increase in the price of the machinery was in accordance with the gold clause of the contract entered into between the parties. Clause 13 of the Contract read as follows:

"The sellers and the buyers shall take all measures to settle amicably any disputes and differences which may arise out of or in connection with this contract. In case of the parties being unable to arrive at an amicable settlement, all disputes are to be submitted without application to the ordinary Courts for the settlement by Foreign Trade Arbitration Commission at the U.S.S.R. Chamber of Commerce

In Moscow in accordance with the Rules of Procedure of the said Commission. The Arbitration award will be final and binding upon both parties."

Ignoring this clause the first respondent instituted a suit C. S. 134 of 1966 in the Madras High Court and obtained an ex parte injunction against the appellant and the second respondent restraining them from negotiating the letter of credit. The appellant protested that the first respondent should not have instituted a suit in violation of the arbitration clause in the contract. By a subsequent agreement dated August 14, 1966 the appellant and the first respondent agreed to settle the matter amicably in accordance with the contract. The appellant consented to extend the payment of letter of credit by one year and the first respondent thereupon withdrew the suit in C. S. 134 of 1966. The respondent No. 1 is said to have accepted the devaluation drafts representing increase in the price of the machinery consequent on the devaluation of the Indian rupee in accordance with the clause in the contract. Though correspondence was going on between the parties, no settlement could be arrived at. When the time came for the payment of the balance of 75 per cent of the letter of credit the first respondent instituted a suit C. S. 118 of 1967 in the Madras High Court in violation of the arbitral clause and obtained an ex parte injunction against the appellant from operating the letter of Credit. On November 5, 1967 the appellant instituted arbitral proceedings before the Foreign Trade Arbitration Commission of U.S.S.R. Chamber of Commerce, Moscow in accordance with Clause 13 of the contract for payment of the price of the machinery. Notice was issued to the first respondent to choose its nominee to represent it in the Arbitration Commission and the date of hearing was also notified by the first respondent. But the first respondent failed to appear before the Foreign Trade Arbitration Commission. Thereafter the appellant entered appearance in C. S. 118 of 1967 under protest and filed an application No. 2604 of 1967 before the High Court under Sec. 3 of the Foreign Awards (Recognition and Enforcement) Act, 1961 (45 of 1961) for the stay of the suit. The first respondent also filed an application No. 106 of 1968 before the High Court praying that the appellant should be restrained from taking part in the arbitration proceedings at Moscow. After hearing the parties Ramamurthi J., dismissed the application of the appellant No. 2604 of 1967. The learned Judge allowed the application of the first respondent and granted an injunction restraining the appellant from taking part in the arbitral proceedings at Moscow. The appellant preferred appeals O.S.A. 25 and 26 of 1968 against the orders of Ramamurthi J. The appeals were dismissed by a Division Bench of the High Court on December 16, 1968.

34. The question involved in this case is: What is the true interpretation and effect of Section 3 of the Foreign Awards (Recognition and Enforcement) Act 1961, (45 of 1961) (hereinafter referred to as the Act). Section 3 of the Act states:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in the Arbitration Act, 1940 or in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, if any party to a submission made in pursuance of an agreement to which the Convention set forth in the Schedule applies, or any person claiming through or under him commences any legal proceedings in any Court against any other party to the submission or any person claiming through or under him in respect of any matter agreed to be referred any party to such legal proceedings may, at any time after appearance and before filing a written statement or taking any other step in the proceedings, apply to the Court to stay the proceedings and the Court unless satisfied that the agreement is null and void, inoperative or incapable of being performed or that there is not in fact any dispute between the parties with regard to the matter agreed to be referred shall make an order staying the proceedings."

35. Section 3 refers to the Convention which is set forth in the Schedule. It is an international protocol to which this country was a signatory and which was effected at New York on June 10, 1968. Article 2 of this Convention has three clauses and reads as follows:

"1. Each Contracting State shall recognise an agreement in writing under which the parties undertake to submit to arbitration all or any differences which have arisen or which may arise between them in respect of defined legal relationship, whether contractual or not, concerning a subject-matter capable of settlement by arbitration.

2. The term 'agreement in writing' shall include an arbitral clause in a contract or an arbitration agreement, signed by the parties or contained in an exchange of letters or telegrams.

3. The Court of a Contracting State, when seized of an action in a matter in respect of which the parties have made an agreement within the meaning of this article, shall, at the request of one of the parties, refer the parties to arbitration, unless it finds that the said agreement is null and void, inoperative or incapable of being performed."

The argument of the first respondent is that Section 3 of the Act can be invoked by the appellant only if it had implemented the arbitration agreement by actually submitting the dispute to the arbitrator or arbitrators prior to the institution of the suit. In the present case if there was any such reference to arbitration it was only on November 4, 1967, that is, about three weeks after the suit had been filed in the High Court. The contrary view point was put forward by Mr. Mohan Kumaramangalam on behalf of the appellant. It was said that Section 3 of the Act should be interpreted in the context of the articles of the Convention set out in the schedule and it was not necessary that there should be an actual submission to arbitration before the institution of the suit. If there was an arbitral clause whether this was followed by reference to arbitration by any of the parties or not the very existence of this clause in the commercial agreement would render stay of the suit mandatory under Section 3 of the Act. The argument was that Article 2 of the Convention makes it clear that under the Convention the Court of contracting State must, when seized of such an action refer the parties to arbitration. Section 3 of the Act must be read in consonance with this obligation. Any interpretation of that section which will restrict this obligation could be justified only if the plain words necessitate such a reading. The argument of the appellant is that the words "if any party to a submission made in pursuance of an agreement to which the convention set forth in the schedule applies" really means that the submission is the arbitral clause itself and the agreement is a commercial agreement which includes or embodies that clause.

36. It is necessary in this connection to refer to the legislative history of the section. The reason is that both the expressions "submission" and "agreement of arbitration" have got a special meaning because of the evolution of the statute law. The English Arbitration Act of 1889 (52-53 Vic. c. 49) is the first amending and consolidating statute relating to arbitration. Section 27 of the Act defined submission as follows:

"Submission means a written agreement to submit present or future differences to arbitration whether an arbitrator is named therein or not." There is no definition of "agreement" as such, and no difference is made between a mere arbitral clause that is an agreement to refer to an arbitration and an actual submission to arbitration after the disputes have arisen. A submission defined by Section 27 comprehends both meanings. Section 4 of the 1889 Act provided that if any party to a submission commenced any legal proceedings against any other party to a settlement the latter may apply to the Court concerned to stay the proceedings and the Court if it is satisfied that there is no reason why the matter should not be referred in accordance with the submission may make an order staying the proceedings. In the Indian Arbitration Act of 1899, Section 4 (b) defines "submission" in exactly the same terms as Section 27 of the English Act of 1889, that is, a submission means a written agreement to submit present or future differences to arbitration whether an arbitrator is named or not. In the Arbitration Clauses (Protocol) Act of 1924 (14 and 15 Geo. V c. 39) we have the phrase "submission made in pursuance of an agreement" and the phrase "submission" appears to be employed in the special statutory sense. Section 1 of this Act states:

"Staying of Court proceedings in respect of matters to be referred to arbitration under commercial agreements.—(1) Notwithstanding anything in the Arbitration Act, 1889, if any party to a submission made in pursuance of an agreement to which the said protocol applies or any person claiming through or under him, commences any legal proceedings in any Court against any other party to the submission, or any person claiming through or under him, in respect of any matter agreed to be referred, any party to such legal proceedings may at any time after appearance, and before delivering any pleadings or taking other steps in the proceedings, apply to that Court to stay the proceedings, and that Court or a Judge thereof, unless satisfied that the agreement or arbitration has become inoperative or cannot proceed, shall make an order staying the proceedings."

Clause I of the Schedule states:

"Each of the contracting States recognises the validity of an agreement whether relating to existing or future differences between parties, subject respectively to the jurisdiction of different Contracting States by which the parties to a contract agree to submit to arbitration all or any differences that may arise in connection with such contract relating to commercial matters or to any other matter capable of settlement by arbitration, whether or not the arbitration is to take place in a country to whose jurisdiction none of the parties is subject.

Each contracting State reserves the right to limit the obligation mentioned above to contracts as commercial under its national law. Any Contracting State which avails itself of this right will notify the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, in order that the other contracting States may be so informed."

37. In 1930 the Arbitration (Foreign Awards) Act, 1930 (20 Geo. 5, c. 15) was enacted in order to give effect to the 1927 Geneva Convention on the execution of arbitral awards. Section 8 of this Act explains the phrase "arbitration agreement" by reference to the 1924 Act.

38. The next statute in England is the Arbitration Act, 1934 (24-25 Geo. V c. 14). Section 8 read along with the First Schedule dealt with the powers of the Court among other matters, to pass various orders such as interim injunction, appointment of receiver, orders for preservation of properties or for protecting rights of parties, etc. Section 21 of this Act defines the expression "arbitration agreement" to mean a written agreement to submit present or future differences to arbitration whether an arbitrator is named or not. Nothing was said about the definition of "submission" in Section 27 of the Act of 1889. Virtually the effect is that in the place of the word "submission" the phrase "arbitration agreement" is substituted and has a synonymous meaning.

39. In India the Arbitration Act, 1899 was repealed and replaced by the Arbitration Act of 1940. The Act dealt with only municipal or local arbitrations and so far as foreign arbitration was concerned, the Indian Protocol Act of 1937 (Act 6 of 1937) was enacted. Section 3 of this Act states:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in the Arbitration Act, 1899 (1940), or in the Civil P. C., 1908, if any party to a submission made in pursuance of an agreement to which the protocol set forth in the First Schedule as modified by the reservation subject to which it was signed by India applies, or any person claiming through or under him, commences any legal proceeding in any Court against any other party to the submission or any person claiming through or under him in respect of any matter agreed to be referred, any party to such legal proceedings may, at any time after appearance and before filing a written statement or taking any other steps in the proceedings, apply to the Court to stay the proceedings: and the Court unless satisfied that the agreement or arbitration has become inoperative or cannot proceed, or that there is not in fact any dispute between the parties with regard to the matter agreed to be referred, shall make an order staying the proceedings."

The First Schedule of this Act contains articles of the 1923 Convention of which Article 1 reads as follows:

"Each of the contracting States recognises the validity of an agreement whether relating to existing or future differences between parties subject respectively to the jurisdiction of different Contracting States by which the parties to a contract agree to submit to arbitration all or any differences that may arise in connection with contract relating to commercial matters or to any other matter capable of settlement by arbitration, whether or not the arbitration is to take place in a country to whose jurisdiction none of the parties is subject."

"In the territories of any High Contracting Party to which the present Convention applies, an arbitral award made in pursuance of an agreement, whether relating to existing or future differences (hereinafter called 'a submission to arbitration') covered by the Protocol on Arbitration Clauses opened at Geneva on September 24, 1923, shall be recognised as binding and shall be enforced in accordance with the rules of the procedure of the territory where the award is relied upon, provided that the said award has been made in a territory of one of the High Contracting Parties to which the present Convention applies and between persons who are subject to the jurisdiction of one of the High Contracting Parties.

To obtain such recognition or enforcement, it shall further be necessary:

(a) That the award has been made in pursuance of a submission to arbitration which is valid under the law applicable thereto;

(b) That the subject-matter of the award is capable of settlement by arbitration under the law of the country in which the award is sought to be relied upon;

(c) That the award has been made by the Arbitral Tribunal provided for in the submission to arbitration or constituted in the manner agreed upon by the parties and in conformity with the law governing the arbitration procedure;

(d) That the award has become final in the country in which it has been made, in the sense that it will not be considered as such if it is open to opposition, appeal or pourvoi en cassation (in the countries where such forms of procedure exist) or if it is proved that any proceedings for the purpose of contesting the validity of the award are pending;

(e) That the recognition or enforcement of the awards not contrary to the public policy or to the principles of the law of the country in which it is sought to be relied upon."

It should be noticed that Article 1 of the 1927 Convention defines an "arbitration agreement" as "a submission to arbitration".

40. The next event in the legislative history is the New York Convention adopted at the United Nations Conference in June, 1958 on International and Commercial Arbitrations. It was felt that the international conventions up-till then reached did not effectuate a speedy settlement of disputes and did not meet the requirements of international trade and commerce and disputes arising therefrom and that there should be some modification and the Convention was agreed to by almost all the countries. India accepted the same and enacted the Foreign Awards (Recognition and Enforcement) Act, 1961, to implement the conventions so far as India was concerned. This Act of 1961 repealed the Protocol Act of 1937. With regard to Section 3, the provision concerning stay of proceedings in a Civil Court in violation of the arbitral clause, the language is the same as in the Protocol Act of 1937.

41. The question presented for determination is what is the true meaning and effect of the words "if any party to a submission made in pursuance of the agreement to which the said protocol applies"? in Section 3 of the Act. Even at the time of the Act of 1899 the word "submission" had received a special meaning as including a mere agreement to refer to arbitration as well as an actual reference or submission to arbitration and this special meaning was given statutory recognition in the Act of 1899 by defining "submission" in this special manner. In the Arbitration Clauses (Protocol) Act, 1924, the phrase "submission made in pursuance of the agreement" is used and the word "submission" is employed in the statutory sense. In the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, Section 4 (b) defines submission in exactly the same terms as Section 27 of the English Act of 1889. In the English Arbitration Act of 1934 the word 'agreement' is defined in Section 21 (2) as a "written agreement to submit present or future differences to arbitration whether the arbitrator is named therein or not". It is clear, therefore, that the expression "arbitration agreement" and the word "submission" are synonymous and connote the same idea. In my opinion the expression "submission made in pursuance of an agreement" in Section 3 of the Act must be construed in its historical setting. The word "submission" must, therefore, be interpreted to mean the arbitral clause itself and the word "agreement" as the commercial or the business agreement which includes or embodies that clause. In other words the word "submission" in the opening words of the section means an agreement to refer to arbitration and the words "the agreement to which the Convention set forth in the schedule applies" mean the business agreement or contract containing the arbitral clause. It follows, therefore, that if there is an arbitral clause whether this is followed by actual reference to arbitration or not, the very existence of this clause in the commercial agreement would render the stay of the suit mandatory under Section 3 of the Act.

42. The view that I have expressed is also consistent with the rule of construction that as far as practicable the municipal law must be interpreted by the Courts in conformity with international obligations which the law may seek to effectuate. It is well settled that if the language of a section is ambiguous or is capable of more than one meaning the protocol itself becomes relevant for there is a prima facie presumption that Parliament does not intend to act in breach of international law, including specific treaty obligations. In the words of Diplock L. J. in Salomon v. Commrs. of Customs and Excise, (1966) 3 All ER 871 at pages 875-876:

"If the terms of the legislation are clear and unambiguous they must be given effect to whether or not they carry out Her Majesty's treaty obligations, for the sovereign power of the Queen in Parliament extends to breaking treaties (See Ellerman Lines Ltd. v. Murray, (1930) 1 All ER 503) and any remedy for such a breach of an international obligation lies in a forum other than Her Majesty's own Courts. If the terms of the legislation are not clear, however, but are reasonably capable of more than one meaning, the treaty itself becomes relevant, for there is a prima facie presumption that Parliament does not intend to act in breach of international law, including therein specific treaty obligations; and if one of the meanings which can reasonably be ascribed to the legislation is consonant with the treaty obligations and another or others are not, the meaning which is consonant is to be preferred. Thus, in case of lack of clarity in the words used in the legislation, the terms of the treaty are relevant to enable the Court to make its choice between the possible meanings of these words by applying this presumption."

Applying this principle to the present case it is manifest that Article 2 of the Convention which is contained in the Schedule to the Act imposes a duty on the Court of a contracting State when seized of such an action to refer the parties to arbitration. Section 3 of the Act must, therefore, be read in consonance with this international obligation and any interpretation of Section 3 which would restrict the obligation or impose a refinement not warranted by the Convention itself will not be justified.

43. This view is also borne out by the reasoning of Scarman, J., in 1965-2 WLR 250 at pages 262-263. In that case the plaintiffs' timber was shipped aboard the Merak under bills of lading which stated that the voyage was "as per charter dated April 21, 1961" and contained a clause incorporating "all the terms, conditions, clauses...including Clause 30 contained in the said charterparty". Clause 30 was irrelevant to a bill of lading and was inserted in mistake for the arbitration Clause 32. The incorporation clause was followed by a clause giving paramount effect to the Hague Rules. In the course of the voyage the cargo was damaged and just within 12 months of the final discharge of the cargo the plaintiffs, as indorsees of the bills of lading, issued a writ claiming damages from the Merak's owners, who relying on the arbitration clause, moved for a stay of the proceedings under Section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1950. The plaintiffs opposed the motion on the grounds that the arbitration clause was not incorporated in the bills of lading; that the dispute did not arise out of the April charterparty or any bills of lading issued thereunder; and that the arbitration clause must in any event be rejected because it was repugnant to the paramount clause giving effect to the Hague Rules, which by Article III, Rule 6 provided for bringing 'suit' and not for arbitration. Scarman, J., holding that Section 4 (2) of the Arbitration Act, 1950, gave effect to the intention of the protocol on arbitration clauses to which the sub-section related, rejected the plaintiffs' contentions and, stayed the proceedings. In the course of his judgment Scarman, J., observed as follows :

'In my opinion, the sub-section must be read together with the protocol as it stands translated into the English of the First Schedule to the Act. Article 1 of the translated protocol provides for the recognition of the validity of an agreement whether relating to existing or future differences whereby the parties to a contract agree to submit to arbitration differences arising in connection with that contract, and expressly reserves to contracting states the right to limit the obligation of recognition to contracts which are considered commercial. Article 4 provides that the tribunals of the contracting states, on being seized of a dispute regarding a contract which includes an arbitration agreement whether referring to present or future differences, shall refer the dispute to arbitration. Thus the protocol is concerned with two agreements — one, a contract, commercial in character or giving rise to a difference relating to matters that are either commercial or otherwise capable of settlement by arbitration, between parties subject to the jurisdiction of different contracting states; the other, an arbitration agreement whereby the parties to such a contract agree to submit their differences to arbitration. It is clear from the protocol that the arbitration agreement may itself be included in and simultaneous with the commercial or business contract between the parties. In my opinion Section 4 (2) of the Act is intended to make the same distinction between the parties' business contract and their arbitration agreement, and no other distinction. It uses the term "submission to arbitration" to identify the protocol's agreement to submit their differences to arbitration and the term "agreement to which the protocol applies" to identify the commercial or business contract between the parties. Section 4 (2) in my opinion, applies to agreements to submit to arbitration made in pursuance of a contract to which, because of its character and the character of its parties, the protocol applies. The words "in pursuance of" merely establish the link that there must be between the agreement to submit present or future differences to arbitration and the agreement of a commercial or business character between parties of a certain class to which the protocol applies. They have in this context no temporal significance.

I see no reason for having to construe 'submission to arbitration' as an actual submission of an existing dispute to a particular arbitrator. The Act of 1950 does not say that I must. It makes nonsense of the protocol so to do. The Act of 1924 which first introduced the sub-section, was an Act to give effect to the protocol and there is respectable, though now antiquated, authority, namely, the repealed Section 27 of the Act of 1889, for giving a wider meaning to 'submission' in the context so requires. The term 'submission to arbitration' is not now defined by statute, and must, in my opinion, be given a meaning appropriate to its context. While, no doubt, it is often convenient to use the term to distinguish an actual reference of a particular dispute to arbitration from an 'arbitration agreement' it would be wrong so to do in construing this particular sub-section. Accordingly, I find myself able to say that the sub-section gives effect to the intention of the protocol, the intention clearly being that when there is a business contract between parties subject to different contracting states those parties are to be referred to arbitration if they have so agreed, whether their agreement relates to present or future differences."

The same view is expressed in Dicey & Morris, The Conflict of Laws, 8th edn., p. 1075:

"Section 4 (2) of the Act imposes upon the court a duty to stay the proceedings if a party relies on 'a submission to arbitration made in pursuance of an agreement to which the Protocol applies'. This condition is satisfied if the parties have agreed to submit present or future disputes to arbitration. The term 'submission' includes an agreement to refer. The Court is therefore under a duty to stay the proceedings although no arbitrators have been appointed, and the fact that an arbitration clause is included in the contract between the parties suffices for the application of Section 4 (2). There is thus no discrepancy between the section and Article 4 of the Protocol to which it purports to give effect. According to Article 4 the court must "refer the parties to the decision of the arbitrators" if the contract between the parties includes "an arbitration agreement whether referring to present or to future differences." The word "submission" used in Section 4 (2) must be regarded as synonymous with the term 'arbitration agreement' in the Protocol and the term 'agreement to which the protocol applies' is used in the section 'to identify the commercial or business contract between the parties'. The controversy surrounding the interpretation of Section 4 (2) (to which reference was made in the previous edition of this book) was left undecided in Radio Publicity Ltd. v. Compagnie Luxembourgeoise de Radiodiffusion, 1936-2 All ER 721 at p. 726. It was however, settled by the decision of Scarman, J., in the Merak (1965) 2 WLR 250 at pp. 262-263 and the point was not disputed in the Court of Appeal."

44. If the opposite view for which respondent No. 1 contends is adopted and if it is held that the section only applies if the parties have submitted an actual dispute to arbitration the purpose of Section 3 of the Act and of the ratification of the New York Protocol of 1958 by India would have been largely frustrated. Such an interpretation would be contrary to the avowed object and intention of the Act which is "to give effect to the Convention on the recognition and enforcement of foreign arbitral awards" done at New York on June, 10, 1958. When there is ambiguity in the language of the section it is the duty of the court to adopt that construction which will effectuate the object of the Act and not nullify the intention of Parliament and make the provision devoid of all meaning.

45. On behalf of the first respondent it was said that there was a presumption that the legislature in re-enacting a section of the law must be presumed to have been aware of the intervening judicial interpretation and to have given its approval to it. The classic statement of the rule is that of

"Where once certain words in an Act of Parliament have received a judicial construction in one of the Superior Courts, and the Legislature has repeated them without any alteration in a subsequent statute, I conceive that the legislature must be taken to have used them according to the meaning which a Court of competent jurisdiction has given them."

But the rule is better and more moderately stated by the Judicial Committee in Webb v. Outrim, 1907 AC 81 at p. 89, where the words of Griffith C. J. in the Australian case D'Emden v. Pedder, (1904) 1 CLR 91, are adopted: "When a particular form of legislative enactment, which has received authoritative interpretation, whether by judicial decision or by a long course of practice is adopted in the framing of a later statute, it is a sound rule of construction to hold that the words so adopted were intended by the Legislature to bear the meaning which has been so put upon them". Even in this qualified form, however, the rule has not been acknowledged without protest (see the speech of Lord Blanesburgh in 1933 AC 402). The presumption is weak and is passed on an optimistic fiction. The rule has been criticised by Dr. C. K. Allen:

"The second petrifying factor is the real or supposed rule (now, however, questioned) that once a word or phrase has been given a certain judicial meaning, it is doomed to bear that meaning not only in all subsequent cases, but in all subsequent statutes. This is an offshoot of the somewhat optimistic assumption that the legislature must be presumed to know the actual state of the law. Consequently, if a word has once been given a particular meaning in any case of authority, however obscure, in connection with any statute, however, recondite, the draftsman who uses that word in a later enactment is, so to speak, 'affected with notice' of the judicial interpretation, however remote it may be from the matter in hand. It need hardly be said that in the huge mass of our case law this assumption is a transparent fiction". (Law in the Making pp. 508-09).

46. Mr. Raman referred to the decisions of the Calcutta High Court and of the Bombay High Court in Bajrang Electric Steel Co. v. Commrs. for Port of Calcutta, AIR 1957 Cal 240, AIR 1959 Cal 8 and K. E. Corporation v. S. De Traction, AIR 1965 Bom 114. It was held in these cases that before the Court stays proceedings under Section 3 of the Act there must be an actual submission by both the parties to arbitrators of the particular point in dispute. It was argued that in enacting Section 3 Parliament was not content with a mere readiness of the parties to go to arbitration but it insisted on something more, that is, the actual implementation of the arbitration agreement by the parties concerned by setting up the machinery of arbitration in motion. I am unable to accept this line of reasoning. It is not said that there is a long course of practice or a series of decisions of various High Courts taking a particular view of Sec. 3 of the Act. The decisions referred to by the respondent are not numerous and it is unsafe and unrealistic to draw the presumption that Parliament in re-enacting Sec. 3 of the Act was aware of the intervening judicial interpretation and set its seal of approval upon it. In Pa v. Bow Road Domestic Proceedings Court, (1968) 2 All ER 89 at p. 91, Lord Denning pointed out that though the decision in R. v. Blane, (1849) 13 QB 769, stood for over 100 years, if it was quite an erroneous precedent, the fact that Parliament had re-enacted the provisions of the statute, did not authorise the erroneous interpretation.

47. It is, however, maintained by the respondent that the words "submission" and "agreement" must be given their natural and grammatical meaning and the word "submission" made in pursuance of an "agreement" can only mean an actual submission of the disputes to the arbitral tribunal. So the word "agreement" can have reference to and can be construed only in the sense of an arbitration agreement or arbitral clause in a commercial contract. It cannot mean a commercial contract because an arbitration agreement cannot be stated to have been made pursuant to a commercial contract. The contention is that if submission has to be taken in the sense of an arbitration agreement it would render the words "submission made in pursuance of an agreement" meaningless and unintelligible. In my opinion the argument proceeds on a fallacy. A statute should not be construed as a theorem of Euclid but the statute must be construed with some imagination of the purpose which lies behind the statute. The doctrine of literal interpretation is not always the best method for ascertaining the intention of Parliament. The better rule of interpretation is that a statute should be so construed as to prevent the mischief and advance the remedy according to the true intent of the makers of the statute. The principle was for example, applied by Lord Halsbury in Eastman Photographic Co. v. Comptroller General of Patents, 1898 AC 571, where the question was whether the word 'solio' used as a trade mark, was an invented or a descriptive word. In examining this question Lord Halsbury said: "Among the things which have passed into canons of construction recorded in Heydon's case we are to see what was the law before the Act was passed, and what was the mischief or defect for which the law had not provided, what remedy Parliament appointed and the reason of the remedy". At page 575 Lord Halsbury proceeded to state:

"Turner L. J. in Hawkins v. Gathercole, (1855) 6 De M & G 1, and adding his own high authority to that of the Judges in Stradling v. Morgan, (1584) 1 Plowd 201 (204), after enforcing the proposition that the intention of the Legislature must be regarded, quotes at length the judgment in that case: that the Judges have collected the intention 'sometimes by considering the cause and necessity of making the Act...sometimes foreign circumstances' (thereby meaning extraneous circumstances), so that they have ever been guided by the intent of the Legislature, which they have always taken according to the necessity of the matter, and according to that which is consonant to reason and good discretion. And he adds: "We have therefore, to consider not merely the words of this Act of Parliament but the intent of the Legislature to be collected from the cause and necessity of the Act being made, from a comparison of its several parts, and from foreign (meaning extraneous) circumstances so far as they can justly be considered to throw light upon the subject."

48. For the reasons expressed I hold that the appellant is entitled under Sec. 3 of the Act for an order of stay of the proceedings in C. S. 118 of 1967 pending in the Madras High Court on the ground that in terms of the contract dated February 2, 1965 the parties expressly agreed that all disputes arising out of the contract should be settled by arbitration by the Foreign Trade Arbitration Commission of the U.S.S.R. Chamber of Commerce at Moscow.

49. It is not, however, possible to decide these appeals finally because the respondent has opposed the application for stay on other grounds also. Ramamurti J., found that the arbitral clause in the contract of February 2, 1965 had ceased to be effective as between the parties as a result of the agreement dated August 14, 1966 Ex. P-32 "and that it will be wholly unrealistic...to hold that the moment an amicable settlement as provided in Ex. P-32 proved futile, the entire contract, Ex. P-4 revived....." On the further aspect that admittedly Sec. 3 itself contains an exception that the mandatory obligation to stay is not incumbent on the Court if the Court is satisfied that "the agreement is null and void, inoperative or incapable of being performed" Ramamurti J. was apparently of the view that the alleged nullity of the contract on the basis of mutual mistake was a matter that the Court has to examine further after recording evidence and that was a ground on which proceedings cannot be stayed under Section 3.

50. I consider, therefore, that C. A. 1209 and 1834 of 1969 should be set down for further hearing on these points.

51. Civil Appeals Nos. 1208 and 1833 of 1969 arise out of the application No. 106 of 1968 filed by the first respondent for injunction to restrain the first respondent from taking further part in the arbitration proceedings in Moscow. Ramamurti J., took the view that since the application No. 2604 of 1967 for stay of the proceedings in the pending suit C. S. 118 of 1967 had been dismissed the first respondent's injunction petition should be allowed on the ground that the two forums were mutually exclusive. In the connected appeals I have taken the view that the appellant would be entitled to an order of stay of the proceedings in C. S. 118 of 1967 under Sec. 3 of Act 45 of 1961. Even assuming that Sec. 3 of the Act is not applicable this is not a proper case in which the High Court should have issued an injunction restraining the appellant from proceeding with the arbitration. As a rule the Court has to exercise its discretion with great circumspection for it is imperative that the right of access to the tribunals of a country should not be lightly interfered with. It is not sufficient merely to show that two actions have been started for it is not prima facie vexatious to commence two actions about the same subject-matter, one here and one abroad. [See McHenry v. Lewis, (1882) 22 Ch D 397 (401).] The reason of this reluctance to exercise the jurisdiction is that owing to a possible difference between the laws of the two countries, the stay of one of the actions may deprive the plaintiff of some advantage which he is justified in pursuing. Thus he may have a personal remedy in one country and a remedy only against the goods in another; or a remedy against land in one State but no such remedy in another. The rule, therefore, is that a plea of Lis alibi pendens will not succeed and the Court will not order a stay of proceedings unless the defendant proves vexation in point of fact. He must show that the continued prosecution of both actions is oppressive or embarrassing, an onus which he will find it difficult to discharge if the plaintiff can indicate some material advantage that is likely to result from each separate action. Each case, therefore, depends upon the setting of its own facts and circumstances. In the facts of the present case I am of opinion that no case for injunction has been made out and the order of Ramamurti J., dated April 12, 1968 allowing the application of respondent No. 106 of 1968 should be set aside. I would accordingly allow the appeals Nos. 1208 of 1969 and 1833 of 1969 with costs.

ORDER:—52. In accordance with the opinion of the majority the appeals are dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

Appeals dismissed.

MITTER, J. : These five appeals are by special leave from the judgment and order of the Industrial Tribunal, Punjab dated September 1, 1965. The Tribunal dismissed the appellant's applications under Section 33 of the Industrial Disputes Act for grant of permission to dismiss five employees of the company. They arose in the following circumstances.

2. The appellant is a public limited company engaged in the manufacture of cement with its registered office at Charkhi Dadri, District Mohindergarh. The respondents are all workmen employed by the appellant. One of them, Murari Lal Bikaneria, respondent in Appeal No. 968 of 1966 was suspended by way of punishment for four days from May 26, 1964 by the appellant on the ground of serious acts of misconduct relating to falsifying the records of the company. This was referred for adjudication to the Industrial Tribunal Punjab and the appellant's action was upheld by an award dated May 24, 1965 published in the Punjab Government Gazette on June 11, 1965. On May 27, 1964 the then Prime Minister of India expired and on receipt of the news, the appellant closed the cement factory in the general shift as a mark of respect and called a condolence meeting of the workers and staff of the factory at 3.30 p. m. on the same day.

3. According to the appellant, after the conclusion of the condolence meeting while the Works Manager of the appellant was in discussion with other officers including one Ishwar Nath, Power House and Mill House Superintendent, the respondent appeared in their midst all of a sudden and demanded that work in the entire factory should cease and all production should stop. The said Superintendent remarked that in a continuous process industry like a cement factory total production in all the shifts could not be stopped. The respondent became insolent and used insulting language to the said Superintendent. He also threatened to call the workmen on strike and stop the factory within a minute if his demand was not acceded to. The Works Manager consulted the Delhi office of the appellant over the telephone and came to learn that other sister factories were not going to stop their plants completely and that only the work in the office and in the general shift was to be stopped and that the same procedure should be adopted by the appellant's factory. The Works Manager called the representatives of the three unions of workers and communicated to them his decision on the basis of the advice received. Notice to this effect was put up on the notice board of the appellant on the night of May 27, 1964. On the day following when the work in the general shift was closed and work in the shift from 2 a. m. to 10 a. m. was going on, the respondent came to the factory at about 8 a. m. with a number of workers and asked the Works Manager who was then in the company of the said Superintendent about their decision regarding the closure of the continuous process units. On coming to learn from the Manager of the decision arrived at the previous night the respondent said that it was not acceptable to him or to his followers. The respondent and three other workers called upon the Works Manager to address the workers and explain their standpoint. When this was done the respondent shouted to the workers that the Works Manager was a traitor, that they should not listen to what was said by him and that they should close the factory and stop work in all the units. The respondent in company with the said other persons went to the packing section and prevailed upon the workers to desist from working. After visiting different departments he went to the boiler fireman, Banwari Lal (respondent in one of these appeals) and made him blow on the whistle three times as a signal to workmen all over the factory to leave off work. Banwari Lal blew the whistle as directed. The respondent along with other workers then picketed the time office entrance and stopped workmen from going inside to their duty at the change of shift. As a result of this, the kiln had to be stopped at 10-10 A. M. and could only get re-started at 2-10 P. M. Charge sheets were issued to the respondent and others including the said Banwari Lal. The first charge sheet to be issued was that on Banwari Lal on the 2nd June followed by that against Murari Lal and others on June 4.

4. The charge against Murari Lal in the charge-sheet dated June 4, 1964 was that he had not only misbehaved with Ishwar Nath, the Superintendent but also incited and instigated workmen to disobey the orders of the management in connection with the working of the factory on May 28, and further that he had incited the above strike during the pendency of proceedings before the Industrial Tribunal. His acts were said to be subversive of discipline and amounted to indulgence in riotous and disorderly behaviour, specially during the period of his suspension when he was not supposed to enter the factory premises.

5. While Banwari Lal submitted his explanation on June 3, Murari Lal delayed filing it on one ground or other e.g., asking for Hindi translation of letters, taking objection to his being addressed in his personal capacity and not as the President of the Union etc. He even threatened the Works Manager with legal action for the alleged incorrect way of addressing him. Ultimately he submitted his reply to the charge-sheet of the 4th June on July 15. He did not deny therein that he had demanded the closure of the factory but disputed that he had collected the workmen on the morning of 28th May. He admitted having asked for a complete holiday and said that the charge sheet against him of attempting closure of the entire plant and getting Banwari Lal to blow the whistle was false. He went further and charged the Special Officer of the appellant, one Kapoor, with having distributed sweets to the workers on the day of demise of the former Prime Minister. The appellant took exception to this and submitted another charge-sheet to him for making false allegations against an officer of the company. A reply to this was submitted only on August 25. On the 29th August the Works Manager enclosed copies of charge-sheets to the respondents in the five appeals and stated that as he himself was a witness to some of these incidents he was forwarding the papers for necessary action to higher authorities.

6. According to the appellant as a number of officers were in some way or other involved in the charges against the respondent and some of them might have to figure as witnesses in the enquiry it was felt proper to appoint an outsider, S. N. Bhandari, an advocate of Delhi, to conduct the enquiry. The Enquiry Officer issued notices fixing the date of the enquiry and adjourned the same from time to time; but notices of adjournment were all returned with the endorsement 'refused' by Murari Lal and the other respondents except Banwari Lal who attended the proceedings.

7. The report of the Enquiry Officer shows that he issued a notice on 9th September to each of the workmen to whom a charge-sheet had been given informing him that the enquiry would be held on the 16th September at 10.30 a. m. in the general office of the factory. On September 15 he received two telegrams asking for postponement one of which was from the respondent and the other from the respondents other than Banwari Lal. By his telegram the respondent asked for postponement of the enquiry by a month on the ground of serious illness of his wife while the telegram from the other workers contained a similar request in view of the respondent's inability to take part in the enquiry. On the 16th September the other workmen including Banwari Lal appeared before the Enquiry Officer. After hearing Vidya Sagar, the Management's representative the Enquiry Officer adjourned the matter till the 25th September as he did not think that a month's postponement was called for. He sent registered letters to the employees including the respondent about his decision. The second meeting was held on the 25th September in the Directors' Office of the cement factory but not one of the workmen who had been given a charge-sheet turned up at the appointed hours. An employee of the factory was sent out to contact the nine workmen including the respondent. The respondent in this appeal and the respondents in other appeals excepting Banwari Lal refused to come on the ground that they could not participate in the enquiry before disposal of their letter of objection regarding the personnel of the Enquiry Officer. The Enquiry Officer made another attempt on the same day to go on with the proceedings and fixed 3.30 p. m. for the purpose and tried to notify the concerned workmen about it. The messenger who was sent out on this occasion reported that the respondent and the said three other workmen had refused to come. The Enquiry Officer directed that evidence should be recorded in the absence of these workmen and that if they desired to take part in the proceedings they could do so at the next meeting fixed for the 1st October. On that day workmen other than these four appeared. After recording the evidence adduced, the Enquiry Officer submitted his finding on October 17, 1964 taking the view that the respondent and the said three other workmen had behaved rudely with the manager and showed insolence to him. Murari Lal was described as the ring leader. The Enquiry Officer found on the evidence before him that the closing of the factory by Banwari Lal blowing the whistle three times was done at the instance of Murari Lal. He held Banwari Lal guilty of an act of insubordination in so acting under the direction of the respondent. Murari Lal's action was held to be all the more reprehensible because he was not supposed to enter the factory on the 27th or 28th of May when he was under suspension. According to the Enquiry Officer these four workmen had combined together to stop the working of the factory and had actually stopped certain sections of it by their coercive tactics. In the result he held that the charges against Murari Lal had been proved. He also went into the evidence with regard to the allegation of distribution of sweets by the management and found against Murari Lal.

8. The appellant had yet another grievance against the respondent in that while the above enquiry was pending, the respondent Murari Lal put in an application to the management for half a day's sick leave on September 30, 1964. This was granted by the Chief Chemist but the respondent absented himself from duty for the whole of that day. On the Head Time-keeper pointing this out to him, Murari Lal wanted to have a look at his application and on the same being produced made changes thereon unauthorisedly and initialled the same so that he could get a full day's leave on the basis of the amended application.

9. The Head Time-keeper made a report of the incident to the Manager whereupon a further charge-sheet was issued on the 5th October 1964. In his reply thereto Murari Lal stated that he had got his leave application scribed by another person who had through mistake mentioned leave for half a day when he himself wanted a full day's leave. He admitted having taken the application from the custody of the Head Time-keeper and made some alteration thereon, at the same time stating that he had committed a mistake. He however, alleged that he had done so at the instance of Head Time-keeper. Not satisfied with the reply the Manager of the factory appointed S. N. Bhandari i.e., the same person as the Enquiry Officer and asked the respondent to attend thereat. Murari Lal again refused to participate in the enquiry. The Enquiry Officer who recorded the statements of witnesses in support of the charges found Murari Lal guilty. The second finding of the Enquiry Officer was rendered on October 20, 1964.

10. The findings of the Enquiry Officer were forwarded to the Director-Secretary along with the record of the proceedings. The note by the Director-Secretary thereupon forwarded to the Works Manager shows that he had considered the report of the Enquiry Officer, had gone through the proceedings thereof and was satisfied that the charges had been brought home against the five workmen and that they should be dismissed from service. The report of the Enquiry Officer and the recommendation of the Director/Secretary were both sent to the Works Manager. By order dated 28th October 1964 the said Manager recorded that the charges proved against the respondent were of a grave nature and that considering all the circumstances of the case his dismissal from service had been decided upon.

11. As the appellant felt some doubt whether Murari Lal was a protected workman it submitted an application for permission to dismiss him under the provisions of Section 3E (3) of the Industrial Disputes Act before the Industrial Tribunal. The other respondents were dismissed from service and tendered one month's wages. Applications for approval of the action taken against them were moved before the Industrial Tribunal on the same day.

12. Banwari Lal filed a reply confessing his guilt and did not take part in the proceedings.

13. The main grievance put forward in the reply of Murari Lal dated November 11, 1964 was that the appointment of an outsider as an Enquiry Officer was unprecedented and that the Enquiry Officer was biased against the workers and wanted to conclude the enquiry hastily without giving a reasonable opportunity to the workers to conduct their case. Murari Lal complained that all this was done with a view to victimise him because he was president of a recognised Union affiliated to the I. N. T. U. C. namely, Dalmia Dadri Cement Factory Men's Union. His further case was that the enquiry conducted ex parte was perverse and held in disregard of principles of natural justice.

14. Before the Tribunal a number of witnesses were examined including the enquiry officer, S. N. Bhandari, Vidya Sagar, the Chief Chemist, Damodardas Vyas, the Factory Manager, Vishnu Kumar, the Director-Secretary and Murari Lal. The points urged on behalf of the workmen were:

(1) That the enquiry was vitiated in that the rules of natural justice were not observed and the workmen concerned were not given any real opportunity to contest the case.

(2) The enquiry was unauthorised inasmuch as the person who could legally decide to hold enquiry did not take any decision about it.

(3) The Works Manager of the concern did not apply his own mind to the case and did not come to any independent finding but had abdicated his authority in favour of someone else and accepted the latter's recommendations blindly.

At the hearing before the Tribunal the appellant did not lead any independent evidence about the guilt of the workmen but relied solely on the domestic enquiry and the report of the Enquiry Officer who was examined as a witness.

15. The Tribunal held the Management guilty of delay in the issue of charge-sheets to Murari Lal and some of the other workmen. It also commented on the fact that though the charges were sent by the Works Managers the orders for holding the enquiry were not passed by him but by Vishnu Kumar, Director-Secretary as late as August 29, 1964. He took exception to the Director-Secretary's approval of the report of the Enquiry Officer and his recommendation of the dismissal of the workmen. He was of the view that this should have been done by the Works Manager himself and although the orders of dismissal were nominally passed by the Works Manager, he had not applied his mind to the conclusions arrived at by the Enquiry Officer independently. Apparently he was impressed by the text of the order of the Works Manager and took the view that on the Enquiry Officer submitting his report to the Director the latter had accepted the findings and recommended the workmen's dismissal from service. The order of dismissal issued by the Works Manager in the case of the employees other than the respondent recorded inter alia:

"The papers have been forwarded to me for necessary action. Having regard to the fact that the appropriate authorities have found you guilty of the charges and the fact that the charges proved against you are sufficiently grave.....it has been decided to dismiss you. And you are accordingly dismissed from service with immediate effect."

The Tribunal read the above as meaning that the Works Manager had not brought his independent decision to bear on the question but had merely accepted the recommendation of the Director/Secretary. According to the Tribunal this vitiated the order of dismissal. It may be noted that the Tribunal was not right in thinking that the Works Manager had used the same formula as quoted above in all the cases. The text of the order of dismissal in the respondent's case is entirely different; the material portion thereof reads—

"I have gone through the enquiry proceedings and accept the findings of the Enquiry Officer. I am satisfied that proper opportunity was given to you to defend yourself and the charges have been duly proved in the enquiry."

16. The Tribunal also took exception to the appointment of an outsider as the Enquiry Officer. He noted that the Enquiry Officer was an advocate practising at Delhi and was a junior lawyer at times engaged to appear in cases with Anand Prakash, counsel for the appellant. He remarked that the Enquiry Officer was

"at pains to prepare a very legalistic record which may ostensibly show that a very proper enquiry was made."

The Tribunal went further and observed:

"The manner in which the record has been prepared puts me in doubt that this was the record of a genuine enquiry. The record as a whole gives me an impression that this was carefully prepared for the purpose of showing that an enquiry was ostensibly held and some of the workmen were also made to sign or make their thumb mark on the said record."

In this connection he noted that two of the witnesses, R. Ws. 3 and 4 had stated before him that they were made to sit outside the office for some days and were made to affix their signatures or thumb impression on the record of the proceedings although they were not present in the enquiry room and although no enquiry was ever held in their presence. It is worthy of note that it was R. W. 3 alone who had stated that he was made to sit outside the enquiry office. The Tribunal did not find any reason to disbelieve these two persons and on the strength of this took the view that the enquiry was a farce and a made-up affair.

17. The Tribunal also accepted the evidence of Sahib Dayal, R. W. 6, Sham Sundar, R. W. 7, and Ravi Dutt, R. W. 8 that they had been threatened by the Enquiry Officer on the very first date of hearing and that the said officer's attitude was hostile to the workmen. According to the Tribunal the manner in which the orders of the Enquiry Officer had been passed lent support to the statement of the said three persons. The Tribunal inferred therefrom that the enquiry was conducted in an atmosphere in which the workmen could not possibly expect any justice.

18. The Tribunal did not think it necessary to record any findings on the second and the third charges against Murari Lal. With regard to the last charge contained in the charge-sheet dated October 5, 1964 it took the view that the evidence of Vidya Sagar and the two other witnesses examined on behalf of the appellant before the Enquiry Officer was fantastic and perverse. It was not satisfied that the enquiry on this charge was genuine and concluded that at the worst there had been some misunderstanding about the alterations in the leave application of the respondent by changing it to a full day in place of half a day but whatever was done by the respondent was concurred in by the management. It was therefore disposed to accept the version of Murari Lal that the management was out to victimise him by issuing charges on lapses of a technical character. It further found that the Works Manager was biased against Murari Lal because of the insult alleged to have been offered to him and the noting by the manager in support of the last charge was that "this was not the first occasion on which Murari Lal had been indulging in tampering with records" was not borne out and no opportunity had been given to the respondent to show that the allegation was false.

19. We find ourselves unable to accept the conclusions arrived at by the Tribunal. The Tribunal seems to have been greatly impressed by the fact that instead of appointing someone in the appellant's factory itself as the Enquiry Officer the Works Manager had brought in an outsider who was no other than a junior advocate occasionally assisting Anand Prakash, their counsel in some matters. The Tribunal's view that this was wholly unwarranted and done with the purpose of loading the dice against the workmen appears to be unreasonable. Merely because the Enquiry Officer was a junior advocate and that he had on occasions been engaged by the appellant, it is not possible to take the view that he would necessarily be biased against the workmen. Evidently some of the workmen had behaved rudely to some members in the managerial cadre and it would not have been at all difficult for the Works Manager to appoint as Enquiry Officer some person of the factory itself over whom he was likely to have greater influence than on an outsider. As he himself was going to be a witness in the enquiry he entrusted the appointment of the Enquiry Officer to the Director of the Company. We find nothing unfair in this and are unable to take any exception to the course adopted.

20. The other grounds mentioned by the Tribunal for holding that the enquiry was not a bona fide one appear to be equally unsustainable. The Enquiry Officer, as already noted, was a lawyer and if he made a report which bore the stamp of a Lawyer's work it would not be unexpected. The circumstances do not justify the conclusion that he had acted unduly hastily. He started the enquiry on the 9th September and concluded it nearly a month thereafter. He held several sittings; he adjourned the case to 25th September to suit the convenience of Murari Lal whose request for adjournment for a month to the middle of October does not appear to have been based on any genuine ground. He sent for the workmen when they failed to turn up and noted what the messenger deputed to summon them had stated. We have referred in some detail to the correspondence which passed prior to the enquiry merely to show that Murari Lal's attitude throughout was to delay the proceedings and to frustrate them if possible. His excuse for not appearing in the proceedings was frivolous. He purposely delayed giving his reply to the charges and raised all sorts of frivolous objections from time to time to hold up the enquiry. Moreover the delay in the holding of the enquiry, if any was not made a ground of complaint by Murari Lal and the Tribunal's comment in regard thereto appears to be unjustified.

21. We do not accept the view of the Tribunal that the Works Manager did not apply his mind to the facts before ordering dismissal of the workmen and that he was simply following the suggestion of "the approved authorities". The order passed by the Works Manager does not bear that interpretation and the mere fact that he had referred to the opinion of others in some of the orders did not exclude his having formed an opinion of his own and when his own view was the same as that of the Director no exception could be taken to the fact that he had also referred to such opinion.

22. In Saran Motors v. Vishwanath, (1964) 2 Lab LJ 139 (SC), this Court rejected the objection as to bias of the enquiry officer upheld by the Tribunal on the ground that the enquiry officer had at times been engaged by the appellant as a lawyer in industrial matters and had been entrusted with the work of holding enquiries on some previous occasions observing that the mere fact of a person's occasional employment as a lawyer by the employer did not render him incompetent to hold a domestic enquiry.

23. In our view there was sufficient evidence before the enquiry officer to come to the conclusion arrived at by him. Banwari Lal admitted that he had blown the whistle at the instance of Murari Lal leading to the stoppage of work in the factory. Such an act of indiscipline on the part of a worker could hardly be expected to be tolerated by any employer who attaches any value to discipline in his factory whatever be the reason for the demand for cessation of work. The more so, because Murari Lal was then under orders of suspension and was not supposed to enter the factory premises. Leaving out of account the second and the third charges which were not pressed before the Tribunal, there was ample evidence before the Enquiry Officer to arrive at the conclusion he did. There was certainly a prima facie case established by the employer which could be controverted by Murari Lal adducing evidence to the contrary.

24. It was argued before us that the Tribunal's finding ought not to be upset in view of the fact that Murari Lal had been in service of the appellant for 27 years without any blemish on his record and that the incidents of 27th and 28th May, 1964 even if proved, were not of such a grave nature as called for dismissal and the management might have overlooked the fault, if any, committed by Murari Lal. In the evidence before the Tribunal, Murari Lal had stated that some charge-sheets had been issued to him during the years 1947-50 and also thereafter and that he could produce the charge-sheets if given an opportunity to do so. He could not however state the nature of the charges contained therein. Counsel for the appellant appears to have stated that the management had never issued charge-sheets to the respondent except on two occasions to which the dispute related and wanted Murari Lal to produce any charge-sheets particularly any after 1960. From the record of the case it is not possible to come to any conclusion whether any charge-sheets had in fact been issued to the respondent before 1964. We cannot hold that the issue of four charge-sheets in the year 1964 between 4th June and early in October was evidence of motive to victimise. The charge regarding the incidents of 27th and 28th of May was sufficiently serious for the management to have proceeded in the way it did and merely because the respondent admitted that he had himself made the amendment to his leave application it cannot be said that the appellant should not have pressed that charge. It was said that for an incident like this no greater punishment than withholding of a day's pay was called for. There would have been much to be said in favour of the workman if that was the only charge on which he was being proceeded against.

25. In the result we hold that the Tribunal was not justified in coming to the conclusion on the facts of the case that there was no reason for according permission to the management for dismissing Murari Lal Bikaneria as a result of the enquiry held against him. We set aside the order and allow Appeal No. 968/1966. In the circumstances we make no order as to costs.

26. With regard to the other appeals, it is sufficient to state that the respondents have expressed regret for the part played by them as mentioned in the charge-sheets issued to them and the appellant is satisfied therewith and does not want to proceed with these appeals. The said appeals Nos. 969 to 972/1966 will therefore stand disposed of as not pressed without any order as to costs.

Appeals Nos. 969 to 972 of 1966 not pressed.

SIKRI, J.: These Appeals, by special leave, are directed against the judgment of the High Court at Calcutta whereby the High Court (A. K. Das and K. K. Mitra, JJ.) set aside the order of acquittal and convicted the appellants before us under S. 23 (1A) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act (VII of 1947)—hereinafter referred to as 'the Act'. The appellant, Girdharilal Gupta and the appellant Puranmall Jain, were sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for six months each and to pay a fine of Rs. 2,000 each, in default, to rigorous imprisonment for a further period of three months each. The appellant, Bhagwandeo Tewari was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for three months and to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000, in default, to rigorous imprisonment for two months. The firm was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 2,000. It does not appear that any special leave was obtained on behalf of the firm.

2. In order to appreciate the contentions made before us it is necessary to state the relevant facts. On October 25, 1958, Customs Preventive Officer B. Roy examined a parcel (wooden case) which purported to contain Rasogolla, Achar, Papar and dried vegetable, booked for Hongkong, to be taken by the Swiss Air of which the Indian Airlines Corporation had been the cargo-handling agent. The articles were declared to be worth Rs. 20 but the freight which had been paid came to Rs. 127-73 nP. This excited the suspicion of the Customs Preventive Officer, B. Roy, and on opening the parcel and breaking down the case, five hundred ten currency notes of the denomination of hundred rupees each, valuing Rs. 51,000, were found. The name of the consignor was Ramghawan Singh at Karnani Mansion, Park Street, Calcutta, but on enquiry no trace could be found of this Ramghawan Singh at Karnani Mansion. In the course of further investigation suspicion fell on M/s. Agarwala Trading Corporation of which the appellants Girdharilal Gupta and Puranmall Jain were the partners and the appellant Bhagwandeo Tewari was an employee. On January 22, 1959, the office of the firm at 191, Mahatma Gandhi Road and the alleged residence of the partners at 11-B, Jatindra Mohan Avenue were searched. The appellant, Bhagwandeo Tewari, on being identified by the Traffic Assistant of the Indian Airlines Corporation, Ambar Nath Sen, P.W. 4, and one loader of Thai Airways, S. K. Battu, P.W. 26, was arrested. Certain incriminating documents, including account slips and cash-books of the firm were seized.

3. On June 3, 1959, a complaint was lodged at the instance of the Assistant Collector of Customs, Calcutta. After stating the above facts it was alleged in the complaint that sending out money in Indian currency was prohibited under S. 8 (2) of the Act and any attempt to do the same was punishable under S. 23-B of the Act.

4. At the trial a number of witnesses were examined. B. Roy, Customs Preventive Officer, gave evidence regarding the discovery of Rs. 51,000 in Indian currency notes, apart from Rasogollas, pickles, etc., on October 25, 1958. No cross-examination was directed to show that this did not happen on October 25, 1958.

5. S. A. D. Moira, Traffic Assistant of the Indian Airlines Corporation, P.W. 2, who checks freight and does other transshipment work in course of his duties at Dum Dum Airport, deposed that he received the relevant documents on October 25, 1958, from Calcutta office. He said that the documents were in the handwriting of N. Sen of the Freight Section of the Calcutta Office. Armed with the letter of authority, he took the parcel to the Customs Officer and P.W. 1, B. Roy, asked him to open the parcel and currency notes of the value of Rs. 51,000, along with other things were discovered.

6. R. R. Mukherjee, Traffic Office of the Indian Airlines Corporation, P.W. 3, is another witness to the recovery of the currency notes. P.W. 4, Amba Nath Sen, was the Traffic Assistant in the Indian Airlines Corporation, who had typed out the consignment note in respect of this parcel after seeing the shipping bill (Ext. 1). He identified the appellant, Bhagwandeo Tewari, as the person who had handed over the shipping bill to him and the letter of authority, Ext. 11. He said that he calculated the freight and received the freight from this appellant. He further said that this appellant signed the consignment notes in Hindi in his presence and he remembered having seen this appellant writing a postcard on the adjoining table while he was preparing the consignment notes. He further stated that his immediate superior officer, Mr. P. K. Chatterjee, was also present at the time this consignment was being booked. Apparently this is not the first time that this appellant had gone to the Indian Airlines Corporation because P.W. 4 says that seven days ahead of October 24, 1958, this appellant had called on him with another shipment although that consignment was booked by P. K. Chatterji.

7. Some days after October 25, 1958, this witness P.W. 4 was taken by the Customs Officer to some place to find the man who is alleged to have booked the parcel. Two or three months thereafter he was again taken by the Customs Officers to another place in the Burrabazar area, which was the place of Agarwal Trading Corporation, and he said that he pointed out the appellant, Bhagwandeo Tiwari, as the one who had taken the parcel to him on October 24, 1958. He was cross-examined in order to show that he could not remember customers. He admitted that it was not always possible for him to remember all the men who came in contact with him in the course of his work, but he said that he had told C. R. Basu who was investigating the case that the person who brought the parcel was an oldish man and lean one, and had also described his nose. He further admitted that at the place he identified appellant Bhagwandeo Tiwari, he was the only oldish man there. He said that he did not think that he committed a mistake unless the man he identified had a double in the shape of a twin brother and the like. He further admitted that he had been trying to recollect the appearance of the man to reconstruct in his mind the outline of his appearance as far as he could.

8. The evidence of P.W. 4 impresses us and there is no reason why we should not place reliance on his evidence.

9. P. K. Chatterjee, P.W. 5, speaks of the earlier visit of the appellant Bhagwandeo Tiwari as the person who called on him with the shipping bill on October 17, 1958.

10. C. R. Basu, P. W. 6, Officer of the Customs who investigated the case, said that after making enquiries he applied for the issue of search warrant to search the premises No. 191, Mahatma Gandhi Road. He also applied for a search warrant to search the premises of the partners of the firm at 11-B, Jatindra Mohan Avenue. He did not himself search 11-B, Jatindra Mohan Avenue, but went to execute the search warrant at 191, Mahatma Gandhi Road, where on the identification of P.W. 4 he arrested the appellant Bhagwandeo Tiwari. He then conducted the search of the premises in the presence of the witnesses and took into possession one Rokar, one Khata bahi, one nakal bahi, the attendance register and three account slips which he marked 8, 9 and 10 (Exts. 9 and 9/1 and 9/2, respectively). We may reproduce his evidence regarding the discovery of these account slips because a great deal of argument has been addressed to us on the recovery of these slips. He stated:

"The three slips, about which I have spoken just now, are in the same condition today as I found them on the day when they were seized. The witnesses to the search I conducted are Eadhesyam Gupta and Lalit Kumar Chandu Lal Parekh. Here is the search list over my signature and the signature of the witnesses (Ext. 10)." In his cross-examination he states:

"You are right that Exhibits 9, 9/1 and 9/2 are included in Serial No. 38 of the search list, Ext. 10."

The search list does not mention the slips separately but only mentions loose sheets in a sealed parcel. It has been urged that there is no evidence to show when the seal was opened. It is suggested that these slips have been fabricated and planted. No such question was put to the witnesses and we are unable to presume that the investigating officer would go about fabricating account slips in order to rope in the appellants.

11. The prosecution produced two witnesses who had signed the recovery list. The evidence of Rachashyam Gupta, P. W. 7, must be discarded because although he was examined before the Chief Presidency Magistrate he was not made available for cross-examination. The learned counsel, Mr. Bhattacharya, suggested that if this witness had been produced for cross-examination he would have deposed against the prosecution. We are unable to draw any such presumption. The other witness was Lalit C. L. Parekh, P.W. 8. He had signed the search list but on cross-examination he stated that "Basu had taken slips of paper from the 'Agal Bagal' of the guddy, by which I mean from underneath the Takia on the bed". He further said that "bits of paper Basu found from a wooden case as well." He further stated as follows:

"You are right that Basu placed all these bits of papers at one and the same place. How many pieces? I cannot say. I did not count. By guess I can say that the number of bits of paper would run to 50 or 60. I signed all the pieces of paper which were found so."

12. The learned counsel fastens on the last line and says that these slips do not bear the signature of Lalit C. L. Parekh, and therefore, it is clear that these have been fabricated later. We are unable to sustain this contention. The witness had signed a number of documents including the search list and he may well have thought that he had signed every piece of paper which was seized. No such question was put to the investigating officer.

13. P.W. 11, N. R. Paul, who was the assistant attached to the Appraising Department of the Calcutta Customs deposed regarding the preparation of the shipping bill. It appears that the shipping bill bore the words "Thai Airways Co." and these words were scored out and "Swiss Air" written in hand. He could not say who corrected the entry but nothing turns on this because it may be that the original idea was to send the parcel by Thai Airways but later on for some reasons it was not possible to send that parcel through this airways. The prosecution led evidence to show that as a matter of fact appellant Bhagwandeo Tiwari had approached somebody in Thai Airways but we need not dwell on this part of the case.

14. The prosecution also produced Shridhar Chatterjee, handwriting expert, who examined the signature reading as "Ram Chandra" written in Hindi and in pencil in the twcway-bills, Exts. 3 and 4, and the specimen writing. He was of the opinion that the writer of the specimen writing was the writer of the signature "Ram Chandra" appearing in the airway bill. We may mention that Bhagwandeo Tiwari is alleged to have signed as "Ram Chandra". The expert also gave the opinion that the type-written papers, Exts. II and IX had been typed on the same machine.

15. Exhibit 9/2, one of the seized account slips, is a very important document. The official translation is printed in the records and reads:

"Translation of
Ext. 9/2 dated

	illegible)"

The High Court had to translate it again and the last line was translated into "Hongkong Lagaya" in place of "Hongkong Shanghai".

16. In the account book of M/s. Agarwala Trading Corporation (Exts. 21 and 21/1) under the entries dated October 24, 1958, on which date the booking is alleged by the prosecution to have been done, an entry appears as follows :

"Rs. 4/5/- Through Bhagwan Deo
 -/8/- Colli (Janka)
 -/15/- Rickshaw fare
 2/14/- Cart Charge
 1/8/- Through Ghanshyam & Pandey
 -/4/- Bus fair
 1/4/- Bus Tram"

It will be noticed that the same items appear in Ext. 9 (2). The break-up in Ext. 9 (2) is slightly different but in the account book the four annas and two annas entries have been added to Rs. 2/8/- to make Rs. 2/14/- as cart charge.

17. Again the entries in Ext. 9/1 are as follows :

"Rs. -/1/- Bus hire for going home
 1/4/- Came from home to Thai (?) Taxi
 -/12/- Riksha-hire from Thai
 -/1/- Coolie
 -/4/- Thai Office Colie

Rs. 147/10/- In Cash"

The corresponding entry in the account books are as follows :

"Rs 2/6/- (Bus fare -/1/-
 Taxi fare
 Rs. 1/4/- Rickshaw
 Rs. -/12/-
 Coolie 5/-).

It is true that the entry of Rs. 127/73 which exists in Ext. 9/2 has not been carried over into the account books but perhaps that would have been even too much for an accountant to do. He never dreamt that these entries of Rs. 4/5/- and Rs. 2/6/- in the account books would be seized upon by the prosecution to complete the case against the appellants.

18. Be that as it may, the entries in the account books demolish the case of defence that these slips were fabricated and that they had nothing to do with the firm. Ex. 9/2, on the other hand, clearly shows that somebody had gone to the I. A. C. office and paid -/15/- for going and coming to the I.A.C. office and paid the incidental charges.

19. Mr. Bhattacharya, who followed Mr. Chagla for the appellants, contends that a serious question of law is involved, the question being that if an investigating officer conducts a search his evidence cannot be relied on unless it is corroborated. It is a novel proposition and he has not been able to cite any authority or principle in support of it. It all depends on the facts in each case. At any rate, here we have the corroborative evidence of P. W. 8, who signed the search document and also the entries themselves in the account books and their tallying with the slips.

20. It was urged on behalf of the defence counsel that these slips could not be taken into consideration at all because they are not evidence. We are unable to appreciate why they are not evidence. These are part of the things discovered during search and if the entries therein are carried out into the account books there is no reason why these things could not be looked at.

21. The learned counsel has taken us through the judgments of the Chief Presidency Magistrate and the High Court. We are in agreement with the conclusions arrived at by the High Court. We have ourselves gone into the evidence as the High Court had reversed the order of acquittal and in one or two places made minor mistakes.

22. Mr. Chagla, while arguing on behalf of the partners, said that there was evidence that one partner was not in Calcutta on the 24th or 25th October, 1958, as he was in Japan. But even if we take this fact into consideration, which fact was not brought to the notice of the Chief Presidency Magistrate or the High Court, it does not help him at all. Entries were made in the account books and it was the firm's money which was spent and he being an active partner is clearly liable under Section 23C (1) of the Act which reads :

"23C (1). If the person committing a contravention is a company, every person who, at the time the contravention was committed, was in-charge of, and was responsible to, the company for the conduct of the business of the company as well as the company, shall be deemed to be guilty of the contravention and shall be liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly:

Provided that nothing contained in this sub-section shall render any such person liable to punishment if he proves that the contravention took place without his knowledge or that he exercised all due diligence to prevent such contravention."

This sub-section deems the appellant Girdhari Lal Gupta guilty. The question is: Has he proved that the contravention took place without his knowledge and he exercised due diligence to prevent such contravention? What he said in his statement under Sec. 342, Criminal P. C., was that he alone looks after the affairs of the firm. There is also no evidence to show that the contravention took place without his knowledge or that he exercised due diligence to prevent such contravention. The entries were there in his account books and the only thing that he had to say about these entries in his account books is that they pertain to the routine work of the firm. Under the circumstances we are unable to exonerate him of the charge.

23. As far as the other partner, Puranmall Jain is concerned, he stated that he does not look after the affairs of the firm and further that he stays all along at Sriganganagar in Rajasthan and does not stay in Calcutta. The prosecution has not led any reliable evidence to prove that he took any active part in the conduct of the business of the firm. In these circumstances we are inclined to give him the benefit of doubt and acquit him.

24. In the result the appeal of Puranmall Jain is allowed and he is acquitted of the charge. His bail bond shall stand cancelled. The appeals of Girdhari Lal and Bhagwandeo Tewari are dismissed.

Order accordingly.

(V 58 C 4)

(From: Allahabad)

J. C. SHAH AND K. S. HEGDE, JJ.

Civil Appeals Nos. 193 and 448 of 1970, D/- 21-7-1970.

(A) Income-tax Act (1922), Ss. 16 (3) (a) (ii) and 3 — Assessment in capacity as Hindu undivided family — S. 16 (3) (a) (ii) is not applicable — Income of minor children of assessee cannot be included in his income.

(Para 7)

(B) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 3 — Hindu undivided family — Act does not contemplate that family to become taxable entity must consist of two or more male members. AIR 1966 SC 1523 & AIR 1970 SC 14, Rel. on.

(Para 8)

(C) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Alternative remedy — Petitioner filing writ petition instead of availing of statutory remedy — High Court entertaining petition and giving hearing on merits — Petition cannot thereafter be rejected on ground that statutory remedy was not availed of.

(Para 12)

(D) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 35 — Rectification of mistake — Power of — Nature — Mistake apparent on record brought to notice of Income-tax Officer — He cannot refuse to exercise power under Sec. 35 — Decision of Allahabad High Court, Reversed.

It cannot be said that the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer under Section 35 to rectify mistake is discretionary and therefore even if the conditions for its exercise are shown to exist, he can decline to exercise the power. Exercise of power to rectify an error apparent from the record is conferred upon the Income-tax Officer in aid of enforcement of a right. The Income-tax Officer is an officer concerned with assessment and collection of revenue, and the power to rectify the order of assessment conferred upon him is to ensure that injustice to the assessee or to the Revenue may be avoided. It is implicit in the nature of the power and its entrustment to the authority invested with quasi-judicial function under the Act, that to do justice it shall be exercised when a mistake apparent from the record is brought to his notice by a person concerned with or interested in the proceedings. Decision of Allahabad High Court, Reversed. (Paras 12, 14, 15)

If a statute invests a public officer with authority to do an act in a specified set of circumstances, it is imperative upon him to exercise his authority in a manner appropriate to the case when a party interested and having a right to apply moves in that behalf and circumstances for exercise of authority are shown to exist. Even if the words used in the statute are prima facie enabling, the Courts will readily infer a duty to exercise power which is invested in aid of enforcement of a right — public or private — of a citizen. (1880) 5 AC 214, Referred to. (Para 12)

(E) Income-tax Act (1922), Sec. 35 — Rectification of mistake — Application — Income-tax Officer cannot modify status of assessee without first giving him notice.

Where an application for rectification was filed on ground that the assessee being Hindu Undivided family, income of minor sons was included by wrongly applying Section 16 (3) (a) (ii), the Income-tax Officer was not entitled to suo motu modify the status of the assessee as "Individual" without giving opportunity to establish that his status as HUF was in law correct. Right to obtain the benefit of rectification could not be refused by changing the status on the basis of which the original assessment was made without investigating, after due notice, whether in assessing the income a mistake in fact was committed. The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by SHAH, J.—These appeals arise out of orders passed in petitions praying for a writ of mandamus to rectify orders of assessment relating to income assessed to tax for the years 1951-52 and 1952-53. The corresponding previous years for the assessment years were October 1, 1949 to September 30, 1950 and October 1, 1950 to September 30, 1951.

2. Hirday Narain and his five sons were members of a Hindu undivided family. Till the assessment year 1950-51 the income received by Hirday Narain was assessed to tax as the income of a Hindu undivided family. On November 19, 1949 the property of the joint family was partitioned between Hirday Narain and his sons. In assessing the Income for the assessment year 1951-52 the Income-tax Officer recorded an order that the property was partitioned, but he still assessed the income received by Hirday Narain as income of a Hindu undivided family. In appeal the Appellate Assistant Commissioner treated Rs. 18520/- earned between October 1, 1949 and November 18, 1949 as income of the former Hindu undivided family and directed that it be "excluded from the assessment."

3. Pursuant to that order, the Income-tax Officer made two orders of assessment—(1) assessing Rs. 18,520/- as income of the Hindu undivided family of Hirday Narain and his five sons; and (2) assessing Rs. 1,06,156/- also as income of a Hindu undivided family and liable to tax in the hands of Hirday Narain by the application of Sec. 16 (3) (a) (ii) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

4. Hirday Narain then applied for rectification of a mistake in the order of assessment which he claimed was apparent from the record. He submitted that:

"the assessment of x x x Hirday Narain has been made in the status of Hindu undivided family comprising of himself and his minor son Satendra Prakash. Section 16 (3) (a) (ii) does not apply to cases of 'Hindu undivided family', but only to those of 'Individuals'. It is therefore requested that such of the income as has by mistake been included in the assessment of the Hindu undivided family for the said year under Section 16 (3) (a) (ii) may kindly be excluded under Sec. 35 as the mistake is apparent from record." The Income-tax Officer accepted the plea that to income assessed to tax in the hands of Hirday Narain in the status of a Hindu undivided family, Sec. 16 (3) (a) (ii) of the Income-tax Act, 1922, did not apply, but he declined to give relief holding that for the period November 19, 1949 to September 30, 1950 Hirday Narain should have been assessed as an individual.

5. Hirday Narain then moved a petition before the High Court of Allahabad under Article 226 of the Constitution challenging the order of the Income-tax Officer. A single Judge of the High Court rejected the petition holding that at the stage of the original assessment the question that the income was not liable to be assessed under Sec. 16 (3) (a) (ii) of the Income-tax Act was not raised and that the assessee had not applied in revision to the Commissioner under Sec. 33-A of the Act. A Division Bench of the High Court confirmed that order in appeal, observing that the rectification under Sec. 35 of the Act was "discretionary", and if the Income-tax Officer thought that proceedings were "substantially fair" he was "not bound to rectify the assessment on technical grounds".

The High Court also observed that "it was not clear that after November 19, 1949 there was a Hindu undivided family which Hirday Narain represented and therefore it was possible to say with certainty that the Income-tax Officer was wrong in proceeding on the footing that the assessment could be supported as assessment of an individual."

6. With special leave, Hirday Narain has appealed to this Court.

7. In respect of the period November 19, 1949 to September 30, 1950 the income was assessed in the hands of Hirday Narain in the status of a Hindu undivided family. Section 16 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, by subsection (3) (a) (ii) provides:

"In computing the total income of any individual for the purpose of assessment, there shall be included—

(a) so much of the income of a wife or minor child of such individual as arises directly or indirectly—

(ii) from the admission of the minor to the benefits of partnership in a firm of which such individual is a partner." Income for the period November 19, 1949 to September 30, 1950 being assessed to tax as the income of a Hindu undivided family and not of an individual, Section 16 (3) (a) (ii) plainly did not apply and the income of the minor children of Hirday Narain could not be included in the income of Hirday Narain assessed as a Hindu undivided family.

8. Under the Income-tax Act it is not predicated of a Hindu undivided family as a taxable entity that it must consist of two or more male members: Gowli Buddanna v. Commr. of Income-tax, Mysore, (1966) 60 ITR 293 = (AIR 1966 SC 1523), see also N. V. Narendranath v. Commr. of Wealth Tax, (1969) 74 ITR 190 = (AIR 1970 SC 14) (a case under the Wealth Tax Act). Hirday Narain received a share in the properties of the Hindu undivided family of which he and his wife were members. It may again be noticed that before the previous year expired, Hirday Narain's wife gave birth to a son on April 6, 1950. We are therefore unable to agree that the income accruing between November 19, 1949 and September 30, 1950 could be assessed in the hands of Hirday Narain as an individual.

9. But the Solicitor-General submitted that Hirday Narain had filed his return in the status of an individual, and since the Appellate Assistant Commissioner had also passed an order when he directed separate assessment of the total receipts during the year October 1, 1949 to September 30, 1950 as the income of two distinct assessable entities, the Income-tax Officer was bound to assess the income for the period November 19, 1949 to September 30, 1950, as the income of Hirday Narain as an individual, and to that income, the income of his minor children arising out of the partnership to which they were admitted was liable to be added under Section 16 (3) (a) (ii) of the Income-tax Act, and the Tax Officer was entitled and indeed bound to rectify the assessment when his attention was invited to the error.

10. There is no clear evidence on the record about the status in which Hirday Narain submitted the return of income. If the order of assessment made by the Income-tax Officer furnishes any indication, the return was probably filed in the status of a Hindu undivided family. By the order dated December 16, 1953 the total income of the relevant year was ordered to be assessed in the hands of Hirday Narain in the status of a Hindu undivided family. It is true that in the appeal before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner it was contended by Hirday Narain that the Income-tax Officer "had erred in including a sum of Rs. 18,520 to the income of the appellant (Hirday Narain) as an 'individual' and in not assessing it separately as the income of the 'Hindu undivided family.'" The Appellate Assistant Commissioner observed that the income of Rs. 18,520/- related to the period when the family of the appellant was undivided, but by an order under Section 25-A the Income-tax Officer had held that the appellant and his sons had partitioned the property of the family. He therefore directed that the amount of Rs. 18,520/- which belonged to the erstwhile Hindu undivided family be excluded from the assessment which accordingly stood reduced from Rupees 1,24,676/- to Rs. 1,06,156/. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner did not direct that the status in which the income was sought to be assessed for the period November 19, 1949 to September 30, 1950 be altered. Pursuant to the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner the Income-tax Officer assessed the income for that period as income of a Hindu undivided family represented by Hirday Narain. There was in fact an existing Hindu undivided family of which, for a part of the period Hirday Narain and his wife were members, and for the rest, besides the two, their infant son was a member.

11. The order of the Income-tax Officer is subject to a procedural infirmity as well. In rejecting the application under Section 35, Income-tax Officer apparently assumed that in an application made by an assessee he could exercise his power suo motu and modify the status of the assessee even without giving an opportunity to the assessee to establish that the order assessing him in the status of a Hindu undivided family was in law correct. Hirday Narain had claimed that the income of his minor children was not liable to be included in his assessment in the status of a Hindu undivided family. There was no defence to the claim for rectification on the merits of that application. Right to obtain the benefit of rectification could not be refused by changing the status on the basis of which the original assessment was made without investigating, after due notice, whether in assessing the income for the period November 19, 1949 to September 30, 1950 a mistake in fact was committed.

12. An order under Section 35 of the Income-tax Act is not appealable. It is true that a petition to revise the order could be moved before the Commissioner of Income-tax. But Hirday Narain moved a petition in the High Court of Allahabad and the High Court entertained that petition. If the High Court had not entertained his petition, Hirday Narain could have moved the Commissioner in revision, because at the date on which the petition was moved the period prescribed by Section 33-A of the Act had not expired. We are unable to hold that because a revision application could have been moved for an order correcting the order of the Income-tax Officer under Section 35, but was not moved, the High Court would be justified in dismissing as not maintainable the petition, which was entertained and was heard on the merits.

The High Court observed that under Sec. 35 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer is discretionary. If thereby it is intended that the Income-tax Officer has discretion to exercise or not to exercise the power to rectify, that view is in our judgment erroneous. Sec. 35 enacts that the Commissioner or Appellate Assistant Commissioner or the Income-tax Officer may rectify any mistake apparent from the record. If a statute invests a public Officer with authority to do an act in a specified set of circumstances, it is imperative upon him to exercise his authority in a manner appropriate to the case when a party interested and having a right to apply moves in that behalf and circumstances for exercise of authority are shown to exist. Even if the words used in the statute are prima facie enabling, the Courts will readily infer a duty to exercise power which is invested in aid of enforcement of a right—public or private—of a citizen.

13. In Julius v. Bishop of Oxford, (1880) 5 AC 214 it was observed by Cairns L. C. at pp. 222-223 that "the words 'it shall be lawful' conferred a faculty or power, and they did not of themselves do more than confer a faculty or power. But there may be something in the nature of the thing empowered to be done, something in the object for which it is to be done, something in the conditions under which it is to be done, something in the title of the persons for whose benefit the power is to be exercised, which may couple the power with a duty, and make it the duty of the person in whom the power is reposed to exercise that power when called upon to do so." Lord Blackburn observed in the same case at pp. 244-245 that the enabling words give a power which prima facie might be exercised or not, but if the object for which the power is conferred is for the purpose of effectuating a right there may be a duty cast upon the donee of the power to exercise it for the benefit of those who have that right when required on their behalf. Lord Penzance and Lord Selborne made similar observations at pp. 229 and 235.

14. Exercise of power to rectify an error apparent from the record is conferred upon the Income-tax Officer in aid of enforcement of a right. The Income-tax Officer is an Officer concerned with assessment and collection of revenue, and the power to rectify the order of assessment conferred upon him is to ensure that injustice to the assessee or to the Revenue may be avoided. It is implicit in the nature of the power and its entrustment to the authority invested with quasi-judicial functions under the Act, that to do justice it shall be exercised when a mistake apparent from the record is brought to his notice by a person concerned with or interested in the proceeding.

15. The High Court was, in our judgment, in error in assuming that exercise of the power was discretionary and the Income-tax Officer could, even if the conditions for its exercise were shown to exist, decline to exercise the power.

16. For the assessment year 1952-53 the assessee is also entitled to relief claimed by him.

17. The appeals must therefore be allowed and the order passed by the High Court set aside. Writs will issue directing that the assessment of Hirday Narain for the years 1951-52 and 1952-53 be rectified by deleting the income of his minor sons included under Section 16 (3) (a) (ii) of the Income-tax Act, 1922 from assessment. The appellant will be entitled to his costs in this Court and in the High Court. One hearing fee.

Appeal allowed.

HEGDE, J.: These appeals by special leave arise from the decision of the High Court of Andhra Pradesh in Writ Appeals Nos. 13 to 22 of 1965 on its file. Only one question of law arose for decision in those appeals, the very question arising for decision in these appeals and that question is whether the notices issued by the Income-tax Officer under Section 34 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (which will be hereinafter called the Act) in March, 1962 on the respondent and her sisters are valid in law.

2. One Narayana Reddy was an income-tax assessee. He died on March 26, 1948, leaving behind him his widow Ramanamma and five daughters. On his death his widow took possession of the estate and was managing it. Subsequently misunderstanding appears to have arisen between her and some of her daughters. One of the daughters by name Sreedevamma filed a suit for removing her mother from management of the estate and for the appointment of a receiver. In that suit a Commissioner was appointed to take an inventory. The Commissioner, while taking the inventory, found an unregistered will dated March 4, 1948, in the safe. That will was purported to have been executed by Narayana Reddy. It is said that in that will various dispositions were made including some provision for certain charities. It is further said that two of the sons-in-law of Narayana Reddy were designated therein as the executors. After the discovery of that will the widow Ramanamma instituted a suit challenging the genuineness of that will. One of the sons-in-law of Narayana Reddy instituted another suit for administration of the estate of his father-in-law claiming to be an executor appointed under the will. During the pendency of these suits the parties compromised their disputes and filed a compromise petition on April 15, 1954. A decree in terms of the compromise was made. Under the terms of the compromise the estate of Narayana Reddy was divided between the widow of Narayana Reddy, his mother and his five daughters. Some provision for certain charities was also made thereunder and for managing those charities some trustees were appointed. It is said that the parties were in possession and enjoyment of their respective shares ever since the compromise decree. Narayana Reddy's widow died on September 5, 1956. Before her death she bequeathed her share in the property to her last three daughters.

3. After the death of Narayana Reddy the income-tax authorities dealt with his widow as his sole legal representative. On that basis the authorities collected from her the tax due from the estate of the deceased Narayana Reddy. They also took re-assessment proceedings under Sec. 34 of the Act and collected some additional tax from her. On March 17, 1962, the respondent, who is one of the daughters of Narayana Reddy and who had obtained a share in the estate of Narayana Reddy under the compromise decree referred to earlier, was served with notices under Sec. 34 of the Act seeking to reopen the assessment of Narayana Reddy for the years 1941-42 to 1949-50. She filed as many as nine writ petitions challenging the validity of the notices served on her. The main question for decision is, as mentioned earlier, whether the said notices are valid.

4. Section 24B (1) of the Act provides:

"Where a person dies, his executor, administrator or other legal representative shall be liable to pay out of the estate of the deceased person to the extent to which the estate is capable of meeting the charge the tax assessed as payable by such person, or any tax which would have been payable by him under this Act if he had not died."

5. Interpreting that provision this Court ruled in First Addl. Income-tax Officer, Kozhikode v. Mrs. Suseela Sadanandan, (1965) 57 ITR 168 (SC), that if a person dies executing a will appointing more than one executor or dies intestate leaving behind him more than one heir, under Sec. 24B of the Act, the Income-tax Officer has to proceed to assess the total income of the deceased against all the executors or all the legal representatives as the case may be. It was further ruled therein that if there are more than one executor of the deceased person all of them will be his representatives and for the purpose of Sec. 24B (2) all of them jointly can represent the estate of the deceased. In that decision the principle laid down by this Court in Dayaram v. Shyam Sundari, AIR 1965 SC 1049, that where a plaintiff or an appellant, after diligent and bona fide enquiry ascertains who the legal representatives of a deceased defendant or respondent are, and brings them on record within the time limited by law, there is no abatement of the suit or appeal and those legal representatives sufficiently represent the estate of the deceased and a decision obtained with them on record will bind not merely those impleaded but the entire estate including those not brought on record was held to be not confined to any suit and appeals but is of general application. It was observed therein that there is no reason why that principle cannot be invoked in the case of assessment of the income of a deceased person in the hands of his legal representatives.

6. It is clear that notices issued in respect of the assessment for the assessment year 1949-50 are clearly invalid as they relate to a period subsequent to the death of Narayana Reddy. Hence we are concerned with the validity of the notices relating to the other assessment years.

7. It is now established that the copies of the notices impugned in the writ petitions had been sent to all the daughters of Narayana Reddy but no notice was sent to his mother or to the Trustees. The respondent in her writ petitions pleaded that she is not a legal representative of Narayana Reddy. That averment cannot be correct. The question whether the will purported to have been executed by Narayana Reddy is a genuine one or not has not been gone into. If intermeddling with the properties of the deceased is adopted as the test for determining his legal representatives then his mother and the trustees appointed for the management of the charities would become his legal representatives. The Income-tax Officer has not taken any positive stand as to how he came to the conclusion that the daughters of Narayana Reddy alone are his legal representatives. It is not made clear whether he relied on the will. If he relies on the will then he should have issued notices to the executors appointed thereunder, if executors had been appointed as alleged. The will is not before the Court. Therefore we cannot be definite as to its terms. If on the other hand the Income-tax Officer relies on the general Hindu Law then again it is not clear whether he made enquiry as to who were all the legal representatives of Narayana Reddy on the day he issued the notices.

8. The allegations in the writ petitions are vague and confused. The respondent's assertion therein that she is not one of the legal representatives of her father appears to have no basis. She does not say who were all the legal representatives of her father. It is not clear what her stand is as regards the will said to have been executed by her father. She does not deny that under the compromise decree, she obtained a portion of her father's properties. The averments in her petitions are bald and lacking in particulars.

9. Equally confused is the case pleaded by the Income-tax Officer. Apart from asserting that he had issued notices to all the legal representatives of Narayana Reddy, he did not disclose his basis for coming to the conclusion that the daughters of Narayana Reddy alone are his legal representatives. It is not clear whether he takes his stand on the general Hindu Law or the will alleged to have been executed by Narayana Reddy or the compromise decree. He did not even aver that he made any bona fide enquiry before issuing the impugned notices.

10. The facts and circumstances disclosed in this case are somewhat similar to those in Mrs. Suseela Sadanandan's case, (1965) 57 ITR 168 (SC) (Supra). Hence in the interest of justice we think it proper to allow these appeals and remand the case to the High Court for reconsideration of the case after ascertaining—

(1) Who were all in possession and management of the estate of Narayana Reddy (a) immediately after his death (b) at the time when the notices under S. 34 were issued by the Income-tax Officer;

(2) Is the will purported to have been executed by Narayana Reddy a true and genuine document, if so, were any executors appointed under the will, if so, who were those executors; if not, who were the legatees under that will;

(3) If the will is held to be not genuine, who were the heirs of Narayana Reddy in accordance with law by which he was governed and

(4) Who all were in possession of the properties of Narayana Reddy under the terms of the compromise decree.

11. After ascertaining these facts the High Court must determine whether the Income-tax Officer had made any bona fide enquiry before issuing notices under Section 34 or whether he had issued notices to all the legal representatives of Narayana Reddy.

12. In our opinion for the resulting confusion the Income-tax Officer is primarily responsible. Hence the Revenue should pay the costs incurred by the respondent both in the High Court and this Court upto this stage irrespective of the result of the case. So far as the future costs are concerned it shall be in the discretion of the High Court.

Order accordingly.

(C) Natural justice — Rules of — Nature — Conflict between rules of natural justice and statutory provision — Latter prevails.

Rules of natural justice are not embodied rules nor can they be elevated to the position of fundamental rights. Their aim is to secure justice or to prevent miscarriage of justice. These rules can operate only in areas not covered by any law validly made. They do not supplant the law but supplement it. If a statutory provision can be read consistently with the principles of natural justice, the courts should do so. But if a statutory provision either specifically or by necessary implication excludes the application of any rules of natural justice then the court cannot ignore the mandate of the legislature or the statutory authority and read into the concerned provision the principles of natural justice. Whether the exercise of a power conferred should be made in accordance with any of the principles of natural justice or not depends upon the express words of the provision conferring the power, the nature of the power conferred, the purpose for which it is conferred and the effect of the exercise of that power. (D) Civil Services — Fundamental Rules, R. 56 (j) — Compulsory retirement — Appropriate authority forming bona fide opinion to do so in public interest is condition precedent — Show cause notice against retirement not required — Constitution of India, Articles 310, 311.

Where an appropriate authority bona fide forms opinion that a Government servant be retired in public interest, he can pass order of compulsory retirement. That opinion cannot be challenged before courts. Nor R. 56 (j) requires that the opportunity to show cause against compulsory retirement must be given. Order of compulsory retirement can be challenged only on ground that either the requisite opinion was not formed or that the order was passed arbitrarily or on collateral grounds. 1970 Serv LR 213 (Delhi), Reversed. (Paras 7, 8, 10)

Fundamental Rule 56 (j) holds the balance between the rights of the individual Government servant and the interests of the public. While a minimum service is guaranteed to the Government servant, the Government is given power to energise its machinery and make it more efficient by compulsorily retiring those who in its opinion should not be there in public interest. Compulsory retirement involves no civil consequences. Rule 56 (j) is not intended for taking any penal action against the Government servants. That rule merely embodies one of the facets of the 'pleasure doctrine' embodied in Article 310 of the Constitution. (Para 8)

HEGDE J.—In this appeal by certificate the only question that was canvassed before us was as regards the validity of the order contained in memorandum No. F. 16-42/68-S. 1, dated August 13, 1969 issued by the Government of India, Ministry of Education and Youth Services, retiring the 1st respondent compulsorily from Government service in exercise of the powers conferred under clause (j) of Fundamental Rule 56 with effect from August 14, 1969. That order was attacked before the High Court on various grounds. The High Court rejected some of those grounds. It did not find it necessary to decide a few others but accepting the contention of the respondent that in making the order, the appellant had violated the principles of natural justice, it held that the impugned order is invalid. The High Court accordingly issued a writ of certiorari quashing that order.

2. Before us the only contention presented for our decision was whether the High Court was right in holding that in making the impugned order the appellant had violated the principles of natural justice. No other contention was taken before us. Hence we shall address ourselves only to that question.

3. Before proceeding to examine the contention above formulated, it is necessary to set out the material facts. The 1st respondent herein Col. J. N. Sinha successfully competed in the examination held by the Federal Service Commission in 1938 for the post of Extra-Assistant Superintendent in the Survey of India Service. After selection, he was appointed as an Extra-Assistant Superintendent. He worked as probationer for a period of three years and thereafter he was confirmed in that post in 1941. During the second world war, he volunteered for active service in the army and was granted an emergency Commission in the army. He was granted a regular commission in the army with effect from October 23, 1942.

4. In exercise of the powers conferred by the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution, the President of India made on August 17, 1950 rules called the Survey of India (Recruitment from Corps of Engineering Officers) Rules, 1950 for regulating the recruitment and conditions of service of persons appointed from the Corps of Engineering Officers of the Defence Ministry to the Survey of India Class I Service. Rule 2 of the said Rules provides for the recruitment of Military Officers to the Survey of India Class I Service and Rule 3 provides that the recruited officers will be on probation for two years which may be extended by the Government on the advice of the Surveyor General. The 1st respondent was taken into the Survey of India Class I Service under Rule 2 of the aforesaid 1950 Rules as Deputy Superintendent Surveyor with effect from June 1951. Thereafter the President of India in exercise of the powers under the proviso to Art. 309, made on July 1, 1960, the Survey of India Class I (Recruitment) Rules, 1960 for regulating the recruitment of Survey of India Class I Service. The 1st respondent was subsequently promoted firstly as Superintending Surveyor and then as Deputy Director. After some time he was promoted as Director and lastly as Director (Selection Grade). The last mentioned promotion was made with effect from October 27, 1966. On May 17, 1969, Fundamental Rule 56 (j) was amended. Thereafter on August 13, 1969, the Ministry of Education and Youth Services issued the impugned order. The 1st respondent was given three months' pay and allowances in lieu of three months' notice prescribed in Fundamental Rule 56 (j). The 1st respondent being aggrieved by that order, challenged the validity of the same. As mentioned earlier, the High Court accepted his plea. The Union of India has appealed against that order.

Fundamental Rule 56 (j) reads:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in this Rule the appropriate authority shall, if it is of the opinion that it is in the public interest so to do have the absolute right to retire any Government servant by giving him notice of not less than three months in writing or three months' pay and allowances in lieu of such notice

(i) if he is in Class I or Class II Service or post the age limit for the purpose of direct recruitment to which is below 35 years, after he has attained the age of 50 years.

Provided that nothing in this clause shall apply to a Government servant referred to in clause (e) who entered Government service on or before 23rd July, 1966 and to a Government servant referred to in clause (f)."

5. The order impugned merely says that in pursuance of clause 56 (j), the President was pleased to decide that in public interest the 1st respondent should retire from Government service with effect from August 13, 1969 and that he would be given three months' pay and allowances in lieu of three months' notice provided in the said rule. No reasons are given for compulsorily retiring the 1st respondent. Admittedly no opportunity was given to him to show cause against his compulsory retirement. The failure on the part of the concerned authority to give an opportunity to the 1st respondent to show cause against his compulsory retirement was held by the High Court to have amounted to a contravention of the principles of natural justice.

6. The validity of Fundamental Rule 56 (j) was not questioned before the High Court nor before us. Its validity is not open to question in view of the decision of this Court in T. G. Shivacharana Singh v. State of Mysore, AIR 1965 SC 280.

7. Fundamental Rule 56 (j) in terms does not require that any opportunity should be given to the concerned Government servant to show cause against his compulsory retirement. A Government servant serving under the Union of India holds his office at the pleasure of the President as provided in Article 310 of the Constitution. But this "pleasure" doctrine is subject to the rules or law made under Article 309 as well as to the conditions prescribed under Art. 311. Rules of natural justice are not embodied rules nor can they be elevated to the position of fundamental rights. As observed by this Court in Kraipak v. Union of India, AIR 1970 SC 150, "the aim of rules of natural justice is to secure justice or to put it negatively to prevent miscarriage of justice. These rules can operate only in areas not covered by any law validly made. In other words they do not supplant the law but supplement it." It is true that if a statutory provision can be read consistently with the principles of natural justice, the Courts should do so because it must be presumed that the legislatures and the statutory authorities intend to act in accordance with the principles of natural justice. But, if on the other hand, a statutory provision either specifically or by necessary implication excludes the application of any or all the rules of principles of natural justice then the Court cannot ignore the mandate of the legislature or the statutory authority and read into the concerned provision the principles of natural justice. Whether the exercise of a power conferred should be made in accordance with any of the principles of natural justice or not depends upon the express words of the provision conferring the power, the nature of the power conferred, the purpose for which it is conferred and the effect of the exercise of that power.

8. Now coming to the express words of Fundamental Rule 56 (j), it says that the appropriate authority has the absolute right to retire a Government servant if it is of the opinion that it is in the public interest to do so. The right conferred on the appropriate authority is an absolute one. That power can be exercised subject to the conditions mentioned in the rule, one of which is that the concerned authority must be of the opinion that it is in public interest to do so. If that authority bona fide forms that opinion, the correctness of that opinion cannot be challenged before Courts. It is open to an aggrieved party to contend that the requisite opinion has not been formed or the decision is based on collateral grounds or that it is an arbitrary decision. The 1st respondent challenged the opinion formed by the Government on the ground of mala fide. But that ground has failed. The High Court did not accept that plea. The same was not pressed before us. The impugned order was not attacked on the ground that the required opinion was not formed or that the opinion formed was an arbitrary one. One of the conditions of the 1st respondent's service is that the Government can choose to retire him any time after he completes fifty years if it thinks that it is in public interest to do so. Because of his compulsory retirement he does not lose any of the rights acquired by him before retirement. Compulsory re-retirement involves no civil consequences. The aforementioned Rule 56 (j) is not intended for taking any penal action against the Government servants. That rule merely embodies one of the facets of the 'pleasure' doctrine embodied in Art. 310 of the Constitution. Various considerations may weigh with the appropriate authority while exercising the power conferred under the rule. In some cases, the Government may feel that a particular post may be more usefully held in public interest by an officer more competent than the one who is holding. It may be that the officer who is holding the post is not inefficient but the appropriate authority may prefer to have a more efficient officer. It may further be that in certain key posts public interest may require that a person of undoubted ability and integrity should be there. There is no denying the fact that in all organizations and more so in Government organizations, there is good deal of dead wood. It is in public interest to chop off the same. Fundamental Rule 56 (j) holds the balance between the rights of the individual Government servant and the interests of the public. While a minimum service is guaranteed to the Government servant, the Government is given power to energise its machinery and make it more efficient by compulsorily retiring those who in its opinion should not be there in public interest.

9. It is true that a compulsory retirement is bound to have some adverse effect on the Government servant who is compulsorily retired but then as the rule provides that such retirements can be made only after the officer attains the prescribed age. Further a compulsorily retired Government servant does not lose any of the benefits earned by him till the date of his retirement. Three months' notice is provided so as to enable him to find out other suitable employment.

10. In our opinion the High Court erred in thinking that the compulsory retirement involves civil consequences. Such a retirement does not take away any of the rights that have accrued to the Government servant because of his past service. It cannot be said that if the retiring age of all or a section of the Government servants is fixed at 50 years, the same would involve civil consequences. Under the existing system there is no uniform retirement age for all Government servants. The retirement age is fixed not merely on the basis of the interest of the Government servant but also depending on the requirements of the society.

11. The High Court was not justified in seeking support for its conclusion from the decisions of this Court in State of Orissa v. Dr. (Miss) Binapani Dei, (1967) 2 SCR 625 = (AIR 1967 SC 1269) and AIR 1970 SC 150 (supra).

12. In Binapani Dei's case, (1967) 2 SCR 625 = (AIR 1967 SC 1269) (supra), Dr. Binapani Dei's date of birth was refixed by the Government without giving her proper opportunity to show that the enquiry officer's report was not correct. It is under those circumstances this Court held that the order refixing the date of birth was vitiated for failure to comply with the principles of natural justice. Therein the impugned order took away some of the existing rights of the petitioner.

13. In Kraipak's case, AIR 1970 SC 150 (supra), a committee consisting of Chief Conservator of Forest, Kashmir and others was appointed to recommend names of the officers from Kashmir Forest Service for being selected for the Indian Forest Service. The Chief Conservator of Forests, Kashmir was one of the candidates for selection. Further it was established therein that some of the officers who competed with him had earlier challenged his seniority and consequently his right to be the Chief Conservator and that dispute was pending. Under those circumstances this Court held that there was contravention of the principles of natural justice.

14. For the reasons mentioned above, we are unable to agree with the conclusion reached by the High Court that the impugned order is invalid. We accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the High Court and dismiss the writ petition. In the circumstances of the case we make no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

At the stage envisaged by Section 171-A, a Customs Officer is given the power to interrogate any person in connection with the smuggling of any goods which it is his duty to prevent. Such a person may have nothing to do with the smuggling of any goods although he may know where such goods are or who has or had them. Sub-section (3) of Section 171-A does not compel any person to make a statement but if he makes a statement he has to state the truth so as to avoid punishment under Section 193, I. P. C. At that stage nothing may be known as to whether an offence has been committed or who has committed it and the person interrogated at that stage is not a person accused of or charged with an offence. He is merely called upon to give evidence to facilitate the inquiry. He is not a witness giving evidence in a Court and his testimony will make him liable under Section 193, I. P. C. only because of the express provision of law in sub-section (4) of S. 171-A. (Para 36)

(C) Evidence Act (1872), Section 132 — Witness not excused from answering on ground that answer will criminate him — Interrogations by Customs Officer under Sec. 171-A, Sea Customs Act — Section 132 not attracted.

The Evidence Act is a complete Code repealing all rules of evidence not to be found therein. There is no scope for introduction of a rule of evidence in criminal cases unless it is within the four corners of Section 132 or some other provision of the Evidence Act. As the Evidence Act does not apply to interrogations by a Customs Officer exercising powers under Section 171-A of the Sea Customs Act, Section 132 of the Evidence Act cannot be attracted. (Para 39)

(D) Oaths Act (1873), Section 4 — Authority to administer oaths etc. — No application to interrogatories by Customs Officer under Section 171-A, Sea Customs Act. (Paras 34, 35)

(E) Evidence Act (1872), Section 1 — Criminal case — Act is complete Code — Importation of any principle of English Common Law relating to evidence (maxim 'Nemo tenetur seipsum accusare' (No one is bound to accuse or criminate himself)) to the contrary — Not permissible. AIR 1941 PC 16, Ref. (Para 39)

(F) Civil P. C. (1908), Pre — Maxim — “Nemo tenetur seipsum accusare” (No one is bound to accuse or criminate himself) of English Common Law relating to evidence in criminal cases not applicable in India. (Para 39)

(G) Sea Customs Act (1878), Section 171-A — Power of Customs Officers to summon persons, etc. — There is nothing in Section 171-A which limits the right of interrogation to question the answers whereto may not incriminate the person interrogated. (Para 41)

(H) Sea Customs Act (1878), Section 171-A (4) — Power of Customs Officers to summon persons etc. — Statement under Section 171-A (4) containing inculpatory and exculpatory portions—Statement did not stand at par with a confession — Portion inculpatory against maker can be accepted excluding exculpatory. AIR 1969 SC 422, Foll. (Para 42)

(I) Evidence Act (1872), Section 24 — Confession caused by inducement, threat etc. — Statement under Section 171-A, Sea Customs Act, did not stand at par with a confession. (Para 42)

(J) Constitution of India, Article 20 (2) — Double jeopardy — Statement before Customs Officer in inquiry under Section 171-A, Sea Customs Act — Admissible in evidence — Article 20 (2) no bar. (Para 30)

MITTER, J.—This group of appeals by a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution of India granted by the High Court of Bombay disposing of Criminal Appeals Nos. 497 to 500 and 516 of 1965 upholding substantially the conviction and sentences passed against the appellants by the Presidency Magistrate, 2nd Court, Mazgaon, Greater Bombay.

2. The appellants before us and two others were prosecuted by the Assistant Collector of Bombay for offences of conspiracy and substantive offences punishable under Sec. 167 (81) of the Sea Customs Act and Sec. 5 of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947. The gist of the complaint was that all the accused knowingly and with intent to defraud the Government of India of duty payable thereon and/or to evade the prohibitions and restrictions for the time being in force under or by virtue of the Sea Customs Act with respect thereto viz., Sec. 3 (2) of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947 entered into a conspiracy in Bombay and other places during the period commencing from August 1958 and August 1959 to acquire possession and to be concerned in carrying, removing, concealing and otherwise dealing with prohibited and restricted goods in very large quantities of the C.I.F. value of not less than Rs. 1,45,328/- and in relation to the said contraband goods to be knowingly concerned in fraudulent evasion of or attempt at evasion of the duty chargeable thereon and of the prohibition and restriction as aforesaid applicable to the said goods and thus committed offences under Sec. 120-B of the Indian Penal Code read with Sec. 167 (81) of the Sea Customs Act as amended and Sec. 120-B of the Indian Penal Code read with Sec. 5 of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947.

3. After recording the evidence of a large number of witnesses, charges were framed against all the accused by the Magistrate in December 1962. The second and the third charge related to consignments brought into India by s. s. Canton and s. s. Star Arcturus respectively. The fourth and fifth charges related to consignments of s. s. Nissan Maru. The sixth charge related to s. s. Hikone Maru; the seventh charge related to s. s. Obra; the eighth charge to s. s. Nagara Maru and the ninth to s. s. Wakasima Maru. Accused No. 6 was not before the court as he was absconding and accused No. 7 was acquitted of all the charges. The Magistrate by his judgment dated February 25, 1965 convicted all the appellants of the main charge and each of the accused excepting accused No. 7 of diverse charges under the main heading of charges 2, 3, 4 and 5 respectively. Sentences of imprisonment and fine were imposed on all the accused. Excepting for setting aside the conviction in respect of some of the charges which it is not material to state, the High Court of Bombay in appeal upheld the conviction and sentences passed against all the accused.

4. The particulars of the different accused according to the prosecution were as follows. The first accused, appellant in Appeal No. 86 of 1968, acted as manager of a concern carrying on business in the name of Messrs. H. B. Advani Brothers at 251, Hornby Road, Bombay. He had proprietary and financial interest in the business and was at the material time in sole charge of that business. The second accused Moti H. Advani, appellant in Appeal No. 87 of 1968, was a brother of accused No. 1 and carried on business in the name of Messrs. Indo Far-East Traders. His business premises were at 2, Waterloo Mansion, Colaba, Bombay. Accused No. 3, Megharaj Gopaldas Jham, appellant in Appeal No. 88 of 1968 carried on business in the name of Fine Art Traders along with his partner, accused No. 5 Arjan Ghanshyamdas Tejwani, appellant in Appeal No. 90 of 1968. The business premises of Fine Art Traders was at 250, Carnac Road, Bombay. Accused No. 5 had also a family concern in the name of Fine Art Museum carried on at the same place. Kishanchand Assandass Megnani, accused No. 4 appellant in Appeal No. 89 of 1968 was at the material time working with the clearing agents M/s. Tarasingh and Sons and held a dock permit. Accused No. 6 Bhagwant D. Advani who had several aliases was a cousin of the first and second accused and carried on business at the material time at Hong Kong in various names and styles. Accused No. 7 Ramchand Thanwardes Ramchandani was the proprietor of a concern named Miller and Miller carrying on business in Bombay.

5. The prosecution case was that although the first and the second accused as shown above were purporting to carry on business separately they were in fact carrying on business together, accused No. 1 being the brain behind the business conducted in the name of H. B. Advani Brothers and/or Indo Far-East Traders while accused No. 2 helped him substantially in his business. The first, second and sixth accused were said to have hatched a conspiracy to import prohibited goods from Hong Kong to Bombay by evading the provisions of law and payment of import duty. In this they took advantage of the practice of the Customs Officers at Bombay at that time who passed examination order in respect of alternate cases imported and the choice as to which of the two indicated in the examination order should be actually opened for examination was left to the importer or his representative. The conspiracy according to the prosecution case was to take advantage of this practice by sending genuine goods in the middle case where the consignment was of three cases and importing contraband goods in the remaining two. Where the consignment consisted of only two cases the importer or his representative present at the time of getting the examination order or at the time of actual examination of the cases by the Customs Officers used to manoeuvre to get only the case containing the genuine goods examined and take delivery of the consignment containing contraband goods without actual examination. In some instances where the consignment consisted of only two cases they bore different marks 'MIM' and 'MTM' it being known to the conspirators as to which mark indicated the contraband goods. Further the conspirators were said to have taken advantage of the trafficking in licences by purchasing the benefit thereof from the holders and importing contraband goods and some genuine goods on those licences in the names of those licence holders and successfully manoeuvring to clear the same on arrival of the consignments in Bombay with the help of the relevant documents retired (received?) from the bank or with the documents directly received from the exporter. In all this it was necessary to have the help of a person of their confidence to clear the goods and the services of accused No. 4 who was experienced in clearing work and held a dock permit were availed of. This was done by the fourth accused getting Sunderdas Tarasingh the proprietor of Tarasingh and Sons to lend only the name of his concern by accepting a small remuneration for preparing the relevant bills of entry and leaving the actual work of clearing the goods to accused No. 4 who applied for and obtained a dock permit as an employee of Tarasingh and Sons in May, 1959.

6. Further, according to the prosecution, accused 3 and 5 had some business connection with accused 1 and 2 and had joined the conspiracy a little later. These two accused used to get clearing work done through one Dalal, "Raut and Sons" where P. W. Kambli was working as a clerk. The services of Kambli who was an experienced clerk were availed of to help accused 4 in clearing all the consignments in which the conspirators were interested. Accused 3 had gone to Hong Kong on or about 10th June 1959 and returned to Bombay a month later. The prosecution alleged that the object of the visit was to import contraband goods with the help of accused 6.

7. Pursuant to the above conspiracy, various consignments were alleged to have been despatched from Hong Kong, the destiny being Bombay in all cases. Two cases were sent on s. s. Canton on the import licence held by Indo Far-East Traders (accused No. 2). The ship sailed on 6-7-1959 and reached Bombay on 19-7-1959. Case No. 1 contained genuine goods while case No. 2 contained contraband goods. This consignment was the subject-matter of charge No. 2. A consignment of three cases by s. s. Star Arcturus leaving Hong Kong on 20-6-1959 reached Bombay on 9th July 1959. The consignment was covered by the import licence of Aarkay Saree Museum. Of this, the middle case No. 21 contained genuine goods while the other two contained contraband. Accused 2 is alleged to have purchased the benefit of the licence from Aarkay Saree Museum on July 4, 1959. This consignment was the subject-matter of charge No. 3. Two consignments each containing three cases were sent by s. s. Nissan Maru on 24th June 1959 on the import licence of (i) Laxminarayan Mahavirprasad and (ii) Continental Exports Corporation Limited. In both the consignments the middle case contained genuine goods while the other two contained contraband goods. The ship reached Bombay on 23rd July 1959. Laxminarayan Mahavirprasad disclaimed any connection with the consignment. According to the prosecution, accused 3 and 5 had purchased the benefit of import licence of Continental Exports Corporation for which payment was made through accused 5 on 9th July 1959. This formed the subject-matter of charges 4 and 5. It is not necessary to take any note of the charges on which there was no conviction.

8. Investigation started consequent on information received by the Customs Officers at Bombay. The business premises of H. B. Advani Brothers were searched on 21st July 1959 when accused 1 was personally present there. He claimed to be only the manager of the firm. There is no dispute that as a result of the search a number of documents and things were seized from a drawer of the table in the room searched or recovered from a wallet in his possession. These were severally marked as Exs. B, B-1, C, C-1, C-2, C-3, D, E, E-1, F, F-1, F-2 and the last three being recovered from the said wallet. According to accused No. 1 the exhibits other than the last three were recovered from the office premises of H. B. Advani Brothers but not from the table belonging exclusively to him. There is a concurrent finding of fact by two courts on this point against accused No. 1 but it is challenged before us. Ex. B was the envelope addressed to H. B. Advani Brothers. Ex. B-1 were three shipping samples which represented genuine parts of the consignment of all the three ships s. s. Canton, Arcturus and Nissan Maru as regards the consignment covered by the licence of Continental Exports Corporation Limited. Ex. C was the envelope in which were found Exhibits C-1, C-2 and C-3, C-1 was a paper wrapper containing Ex. C-2 the cover of a pack of Bonus cards and Ex. C-3 a sample of genuine Bonus cards, these cards being contraband goods. Two brands of cards including Bonus cards were in the consignment of the two ships other than s. s. Canton. Ex. D was a document on which were jotted a number of figures which according to the prosecution was an account of the contraband goods on some of the ships. Exs. E and E-1 were catalogues of Roamer and Fevreleuba watches. It is admitted that some Roamer watches were in the s. s. Canton consignment but not in other ships. Exs. F and F-1 obviously contained some kind of code which could not be deciphered and about which no reference was made in the judgments of the courts below. Ex. F-2 contains an account of s. s. Canton consignment the document being headed with the word "Ton". A panchanama was duly made regarding the search being Ex. A. Very soon after the search a telegram appears to have been sent by one Advani H. giving his telephone No. 264248 to accused No. 6 at Hong Kong reading:

"Stop everything. Attend telephone tomorrow."

This telephone admittedly stood registered in the personal name of the first accused. On the next day i.e., 22nd July 1959 a trunk call was booked on this telephone by one Lal. Hotchand to accused No. 6. There was evidence that the call had become effective. Statements of the first and the second accused were recorded by Customs Officer on 22nd July 1959. Summons under Section 171-A of the Sea Customs Act were served on the first accused and certain documents were produced. Sunderdas, the proprietor of Tarasingh and Sons was asked by the Customs Officer to produce the bills of entry relating to the three consignments for the three ships mentioned, namely, s. s. Canton, Arcturus and Nissan Maru. Under his instructions his son Shyamlal contacted accused No. 4 to get the bills of entry. Shyamlal and accused No. 4 went to the residence of accused No. 2. The bills were not immediately forthcoming and accused 2 handed over to Shyamlal a chit Ex. Z-2 to the effect that the bills of entry of s. s. Canton had been received by him on 21st July, 1959. This chit was handed over to Sunderdas and by him produced before the Customs Officer. Statements of Sunderdas, Shyamlal and Kambli were recorded on July 23, 1959. Further statement of the second accused was recorded on 24th July and while making this statement accused No. 2 produced bills of entry relating to s. s. Canton and Star Arcturus along with other documents relating to/or in respect of these consignments. Further attempts were made to get hold of the bills of entry relating to s.s. Nissan Maru by the Customs Office. Accused 3 and 5 were also contacted over this. Accused 5 stated that they would be found with accused No. 2. Ultimately accused No. 4 brought forward the bill of entry Ex. Z-5. The consignment of s.s. Star Arcturus was examined on 24th July 1959 and that of s.s. Nissan Maru on August 1, 1959. Statements of accused 3 were recorded on 11th and 12th August 1959. Further searches were made in the business premises of H. R. Advani Brothers, Indo Far East Traders, Fine Art Traders and Aarkay Saree Museum and other documents were seized. Statements of various persons were recorded up to December 1959 and ultimately a complaint was filed, as already mentioned. All the accused put in separate written statements. They were also examined under Section 342 Cr. F. C. It appears that every one of the accused tried to put the blame on to another or others.

9. Put shortly the defence of the accused was as follows. The first accused admitted the search of the premises of H. B. Advani Brothers on 21st July 1959 and the seizure of the documents and articles mentioned in the panchnama Ex. A. He denied exclusive possession of the premises or even the table having the drawer which according to the prosecution case contained Exts. B to H. He claimed to be merely a manager of the firm which belonged to his father and uncle and denied any financial interest therein. His version was that accused No. 2 used to keep some of his documents and goods in the premises of H. B. Advani Brothers. He did not deny the correctness of his statement before the Customs Officer Ex. Z-142 and the only point made about it was that it was inadmissible in evidence in view of the provisions of Section 171-A of the Sea Customs Act, Section 132 of the Evidence Act and Article 20 (3) of the Constitution. (After referring to the defence of accused 2 to 5, and the relevant details with regard to the consignments on the three ships (in Paras 10 to 18), the judgment proceeded):

19. In holding the accused guilty of offences of conspiracy the High Court relied on several circumstances. The first of these was the outcome of the search of the premises of H. B. Advani Brothers on 21st July 1959 when various documents and articles were seized. The two exhibits which require special attention are Exs. B-1 and F-2. Ex. B-1 mentioned all the three ships s. ss. Nissan Maru, Arcturus and Canton, although the importers of the goods were all different. Ex. F-2 was held by the High Court to give a complete account of the goods found on s. s. Canton.

20. The second circumstance was the origin of all the shipments, the shipper in each case being accused 6. The third circumstance relied upon by the prosecution was the virtual admission that accused 3 was staying in Hong Kong with accused 6 from 10th

June to 10th July 1959 during which period all the consignments were put on board.

21. The next circumstance was that accused 4 though not a clearing agent himself was utilising the name of Tarasingh & Sons for clearing all the goods of all the consignments in question.

22. The manner in which the examination orders of the goods were obtained from the customs officers for examination of the middle cases in respect of consignments consisting of three cases was also significant. According to the prosecution the conspirators knew and had arranged that genuine goods should always be put in the middle case.

23. The association between the accused, specially accused 2, 3 and 4 in respect of the steps taken for clearing the goods covered by the consignments in question according to the High Court went to prove the conspiracy. Further according to the prosecution the cable sent to Hong Kong on 21st July 1959 after the search and the trunk telephone call on 22nd July support the same.

24. The High Court dealt generally with the charge of conspiracy against all the accused and individually with respect to the charges raised against each accused and considered the explanations given by them with regard to the circumstances tending to criminate them. Mr. Jethmalani who argued the case of the first appellant at some length raised various questions of law with regard to the admissibility of the evidence afforded by statements before the Customs Officers under Section 171-A, the conclusion of the High Court that his client had custody or possession of all the exhibits found as a result of the search of the premises of H. B. Advani Brothers on 21st July, 1959, the correctness of the finding of the High Court that Ex. F-2 contained a complete account with regard to the consignment per s. s. Canton, the finding of the High Court that the C. I. F. value of the goods exceeded the invoice value many times over by relying on the evidence of an appraiser of the Customs department and the absence of any overt act on the part of his client after the search on 21st July, 1959. The argument with regard to the admissibility of evidence of the statements was adopted by counsel for all the other accused and need not be dealt with separately. Mr. Jethmalani virtually conceded that if his contentions on the above heads were not accepted by this Court, it would be futile for him to argue that the High Court had gone wrong in coming to the conclusion as to the guilt of his client on the strength of the evidence before it and the inference which could legitimately be drawn therefrom.

25. We propose to deal with the other points before examining the contention with regard to the admissibility of the statements made in pursuance of powers exercised by the customs officers under Section 171-A. With regard to the finding of the High Court in agreement with that of the Magistrate that accused 1 had the custody or possession of exhibits, B to F-2, counsel argued that except those seized from his wallet the others were found in the drawer of the table of the premises searched, there was no evidence to show that the said table was the table of his client and as there was no proof that his client had any financial or proprietary interest in the firm of H. B. Advani Brothers; there was nothing to warrant the conclusion that the exhibits other than those in wallet were in his custody. The High Court dealt elaborately with this point and we do not think it necessary to re-examine the same except to note the comment made before the High Court as well as before us that the evidence of Mr. Darne, the panch witness who had said that at the time of the search accused 1 was sitting at the table in a drawer of which the incriminating exhibits were found, was unbelievable. It was argued that inasmuch as the panchnama did not record this fact Darne who gave evidence in 1962 should not have been believed when he claimed to have remembered the fact of accused 1 sitting at the table mentioned. Both the Courts accepted Darne's statement and we see no good reason to take a different view. After all it would not be extraordinary for any person to recollect even after a considerable lapse of time that when he entered the room which was going to be searched, he found a particular person seated at a certain table inasmuch as this would be the very first thing which would attract anybody's attention.

26. With regard to Ex. F-2 which according to the prosecution case — accepted by the Courts below — contained an account with regard to the consignment per s. s. Canton the prosecution case was that the figures on the left-hand side indicated the rates and the figures on the right-hand side indicated the total C. I. F. value of the goods of each type in that consignment. Before us exception was taken to the two figures 80.80 and 11.02 appearing on the right-hand side. According to the prosecution the figure 11.02 was the amount of insurance premium in dollars paid in respect of the consignment on s.s. Canton. As the original which should have been with accused 2 was not produced, a copy of the insurance policy was put in and marked as Ex. Z-301. Ex. Z-259-F-1 was a copy of the same produced by accused 2 before the customs officers on 24th July 1959 as was borne out by the statement of accused 2. The contents of the two exhibits were found to be the same by both the courts. The Claim Superintendent of the insurance company in Bombay produced the copy of the premium note in respect of the said policy showing the amount of premium as $11.02 and said to have been received by the Bombay office of the insurance company. Objection was raised to the admissibility of evidence of one Martin, Assistant Manager of New Zealand Insurance Company Hong Kong Branch who had joined that branch in 1963 i.e., long after the issue of the policy in 1959 although he had been an employee of the said company since 1952 and claimed to be familiar with the procedure of insurance of export cargo followed by the company. According to this witness, the company used to prepare as many copies of the policy as were required by the insurer. A carbon of the original was always kept in the office record. Martin produced an office copy of the policy in respect of the consignment on s. s. Canton to which was attached a marine premium debit note and it was his evidence that in the usual course of business of the company such a debit note was always prepared at the time when the policy was issued and a copy thereof was attached to the copy of the policy kept in the records. Counsel objected to the reception of the copy of the premium note on the ground that there was no proof of its making or its correctness. The High Court accepted the evidence of Martin that the copy of the premium debit note had been attached to the policy kept in the office record relying on the presumption afforded by illustration (f) to Section 114 of the Evidence Act that the practice of the insurance company of attaching such a note to the policy had been followed in this particular case. In our view the High Court was entitled to do so and no objection can be allowed to be raised on the ground that there was no proof of the preparation of the original premium note. (The judgment here discussed the evidence as to the amount of the freight charged (Paras 27-29), and proceeded):

30. We now come to the question as to the admissibility of the statements made to the customs officers under Section 171-A of the Sea Customs Act. At the outset it has to be noted that this section came into the statute Book in the year 1955 and there was nothing similar to it in the Act before such inclusion. The section reads:

"(1) Any officer of Customs duly employed in the prevention of smuggling shall have power to summon any person whose attendance he considers necessary either to give evidence or to produce a document or any other things in any inquiry which such officer is making in connection with the smuggling of any goods.

(2) A summons to produce documents or other things may be made for the production of certain specified documents or things or for the production of all documents or things of a certain description in the possession or under the control of the person summoned.

(3) All persons so summoned shall be bound to attend either in person or by an authorised agent as such officer may direct; and all persons so summoned shall be bound to state the truth upon any subject respecting which they are examined or make statements and to produce such documents and other things as may be required:

Provided that the exemption under Section 132 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 shall be applicable to any requisition for attendance under this section.

(4) Every such inquiry as aforesaid shall be deemed to be a judicial proceeding within the meaning of S. 193 and Section 228 of the Indian Penal Code."

In Maqbool Hussain v. State of Bombay, 1953 SCR 730 = (AIR 1953 SC 325) where provisions of the Sea Customs Act were considered at some length by this Court before the amendment of 1955 by insertion of Section 171-A it was said (at p. 742) (of SCR) = (at p. 330 of AIR):

"All this is for the enforcement of the levy of and safeguarding the recovery of the sea customs duties. There is no procedure prescribed to be followed by the Customs Officer in the matter of such adjudication and the proceedings before the Customs Officers are not assimilated in any manner whatever to proceedings in courts of law according to the provisions of the Civil or the Criminal Procedure Code. The Customs Officers are not required to act judicially on legal evidence tendered on oath and they are not authorised to administer oath to any witness All these provisions go to show that far from being authorities bound by any rules of evidence or procedure established by law and invested with power to enforce their own judgments or orders the Sea Customs Authorities are merely constituted administrative machinery for the purpose of adjudging confiscation, increased rates of duty and penalty prescribed in the Act.

We are of the opinion that the Sea Customs Authorities are not a judicial tribunal and the adjudging of confiscation, increased rate of duty or penalty under the provisions of the Sea Customs Act do not constitute a judgment or order of a court or judicial tribunal necessary for the purpose of supporting a plea of double jeopardy".

The Court in that case was dealing with the question as to whether an order of confiscation was a punishment inflicted by a court or a judicial tribunal within the meaning of Art. 20 (2) of the Constitution.

31. In Thomas Dana v. State of Punjab, 1959 Supp (1) SCR 274 at p. 286 = (AIR 1959 SC 375 at p. 380) the provisions of the Sea Customs Act were examined again and referring to Section 187-A it was said:

"This section makes it clear that the Chief Customs Officer or any other officer lower in rank than him in the Customs department, is not a "court", and that the offence punishable under item 81 of the Schedule to section 167, cannot be taken cognizance of by any court, except upon a complaint in writing, made as prescribed in that section."

With regard to the use of the word offence indiscriminately all over the Act it was said:

"All criminal offences are offences, but all offences in the sense of infringement of a law are not criminal offences but when a trial on a charge of a criminal offence is intended under any one of the entries of the Schedule aforesaid, it is only the Magistrate having jurisdiction, who is empowered to impose a sentence of imprisonment or fine or both".

It was argued before us that the position became entirely different as a result of the inclusion of Sec. 171-A as sub-section (4) of the section went to show that an enquiry by customs authorities wherein statements of persons recorded was "to be deemed to be a judicial proceeding within the meaning of Section 193 and Section 228 of the Indian Penal Code." Counsel argued that such proceeding was a judicial proceeding also for the other purposes thus attracting the operation of Section 132 of the Evidence Act. Apart from the point as to non-exercise of a claim of privilege (about which we express no opinion) there can be no question that if the said section of the Evidence Act is to be attracted to such a proceeding statements made by him in any such inquiry could not be proved against him in the criminal proceedings launched. It was argued that sub-section (3) of Section 171-A made it obligatory on the persons summoned to state the truth upon any subject respecting which he was examined and if the proceeding was a judicial proceeding there was nothing to exclude the applicability of Section 132. Our attention was drawn to Section 1 of the Indian Evidence Act which made the Statute applicable to all judicial proceedings in or before any Court in the whole of India. As 'Court' in S. 3 included all Judges and Magistrates and all persons except arbitrators, legally authorised to take evidence, it was contended that the customs officer being authorised by Section 171-A of the Sea Customs Act were 'courts' within the meaning of the definition of Section 3. Reference may also be made to the definition of 'evidence' in the said section which shows that the word means and includes inter alia all statements which the court permits or requires to be made before it by witnesses, in relation to matters of fact under inquiry.

32. Reference was also made to S. 4(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 under which 'investigation' for purposes of the Code includes all the proceedings under the Code for the collection of evidence conducted by a police officer or by any person (other than a Magistrate) who is authorised by a Magistrate in this behalf; and cl. (m) which defines "judicial proceeding" as including any proceeding in the course of which evidence is or may be legally taken on oath. Counsel relied strongly on the judgment of this Court in Lalji Haridas v. State of Maharashtra, (1964) 6 SCR 700 = (AIR 1964 SC 1154) where this Court had to consider whether an Income-tax Officer exercising powers under S. 37 of the Income-tax Act, 1922 was a 'court' within the meaning of S. 195(1) (b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure making the sanction thereunder obligatory for the filing of a complaint in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed under S. 193 of the Penal Code. Sub-sections (1) to (3) of S. 37 of the Income-tax Act were worded somewhat differently from those of sub-sections (1) to (3) of S. 171-A of the Sea Customs Act. The words in sub-section (4) of S. 37 are for all practical purposes identical with those used in S. 171-A (4). There this Court by a majority of three to two were of opinion that the proceedings before the Income-tax Officer were judicial proceedings not only under S. 193 of the Indian Penal Code but were also to be treated as proceedings in any court for the purpose of S. 195(1) (b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The majority Judges referred to the sections in the Indian Penal Code and the Criminal P. C. mentioned above and to provisions in various other Acts wherein the legislature had expressly mentioned that S. 195, Criminal P. C. would apply to proceedings before diverse authorities and accepted the argument that reading S. 193, I. P. C. and S. 195(1) (b), Criminal P. C. together it would be reasonable to hold that proceedings which are judicial under the former should be taken to be proceedings under the latter. According to the minority Judges although the words "judicial proceeding" were wide enough to include not only proceedings before a 'Court' but proceedings before certain tribunals it was clear from a decision of this Court in Indo-China Steam Navigation Co., Ltd. v. Jasjit Singh The Addl. Collector of Customs, (1964) 7 SCR 594 = (AIR 1964 SC 1140) that a Customs Officer "was not "a Court or Tribunal" and S. 37 (4) of the Income-tax Act should not be given a meaning different to that given in Section 171-A (4) of the Sea Customs Act."

33. In our view if the Legislature intended that the inquiry under Section 171-A was to be considered a judicial proceeding not within the narrow limits therein specified but generally, it could have used suitable words to express its intention. Although this Court gave a wider meaning to the expression 'judicial proceeding' in Lalji Haridas's case, (1964) 6 SCR 700 = (AIR 1964 SC 1154) (supra) there is nothing in that judgment to warrant a still wider interpretation of that definition.

34. Mr. Jethmalani referred to the provisions in the Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873) and on the basis of his argument that the statements under Section 171-A (4) were made on oath contended that the proceeding became a judicial proceeding in the wider sense of the word. In our view the Oaths Act has no application here. The preamble to the Act shows that it was an Act to consolidate the law relating to judicial oaths, affirmations and declarations and was enacted because the Legislature thought it "expedient to consolidate the law relating to judicial oaths, affirmations and declarations and to repeal the law relating to official oaths, affirmations and declarations." Section 4 of the Act provided that:

"The following Courts and persons are authorised to administer, by themselves or by an officer empowered by them in this behalf, oaths and affirmations in discharge of the duties or in exercise of the powers imposed or conferred upon them respectively by law:

(a) all Courts and persons having by law or consent of parties authority to receive evidence."

The relevant portion of Section 5 runs—

"Oaths or affirmations shall be made by the following persons:—

(a) all witnesses, that is to say, all persons who may lawfully be examined or give, or be required to give, evidence by or before any Court or person having by law or consent of parties authority to examine such persons and to receive evidence:"

35. Counsel argued that a Customs Officer was a person who had authority by law to receive evidence within the meaning of Section 4 of the Oaths Act and anybody who could be lawfully examined before such a person would be a witness within the meaning of Section 5 and as such it would be necessary to administer oath to them. In our view, the argument proceeds on a complete misconception of the provisions of the Act. The preamble to the Act shows that the oaths referred to are only judicial oaths and Section 7 shows that all such oaths had to be administered according to such forms as the High Court might prescribe. The Customs Officers have nothing to do with such forms and nothing has been shown to us that any such formality was ever complied with. Neither do the records show that any oath was administered to any person making a statement under Section 171-A. In Maqbool Hussain's case, 1953 SCR 730 = (AIR 1953 SC 325) (Supra) this Court stated expressly that the Customs Officers were not authorised to administer oath and the position according to us is not altered by the insertion of Section 171-A in 1955.

36. Mr. Jethmalani referred us to the decision in Queen Empress v. Tulja, (1888) ILR 12 Bom 36 at page 42 and to certain observations of West, J., in that case. There it was held that a Sub-Registrar under the Registration Act (III of 1877) was not a Judge, and, therefore, was not a 'Court' within the meaning of Section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and as such his sanction was not necessary for a prosecution for forgery in respect of a forged document presented for registration in his office. West, J., had however observed that:

"An inquiry is judicial if the object of it is to determine a jural relation between one person and another, or a group of persons; between him and the community generally; but even a judge, acting without such an object in view, is not acting judicially."

Relying on this observation counsel argued that the object of an inquiry under Section 171-A was to find out and establish the jural liability of the persons making the statement, viz., whether he had committed an offence or not, and as such the inquiry was a judicial proceeding. In our view the argument is not worthy of acceptance. At the stage envisaged by Section 171-A a Customs Officer is given the power to interrogate any person in connection with the smuggling of any goods which it is his duty to prevent. Such a person may have nothing to do with the smuggling of any goods although he may know where such goods are or who has or had them. Sub-section (3) of Section 171-A does not compel any person to make a statement but if he makes a statement he has to state the truth so as to avoid punishment under Section 193, I. P. C. At that stage nothing may be known as to whether an offence has been committed or who has committed it and the person interrogated at that stage certainly is not a person accused of or charged with an offence. He is merely called upon to give evidence to facilitate inquiry. He is not a witness giving evidence in a Court and his testimony will make him liable under Section 193, I. P. C. only because of the express provision of law in sub-section (4) of Section 171-A.

37. Counsel also argued that as a Customs Officer according to all the decisions of this Court already mentioned, is to act judicially, a proceeding for recording evidence before him was a judicial proceeding. This is wholly without any force because even administrative officers have to act judicially. Counsel further argued that a deeming provision in a statute was not necessarily designed to give an artificial construction to a word or a phrase but it might be used for other purposes also. He referred to the case of St. Aubyn v. Attorney-General, 1951-2 All ER 473 at page 498 where it was said:

"The word 'deemed' is used a great deal in modern legislation. Sometimes it is used to impose for the purpose of a statute an artificial construction for a word or phrase that would not otherwise prevail. Sometimes it is used to put beyond doubt a particular construction that might otherwise be uncertain. Sometimes it is used to give a comprehensive description that includes what is obvious, what is uncertain and what is, in the ordinary sense, impossible."

It was argued that the Legislature might well have used the word "deemed" in sub-section (4) of Section 171 not in the first of the above senses but in the second, if not the third. In our view the meaning to be attached to the word "deemed" must depend upon the context in which it is used. In Lalji Haridas's case (1964) 6 SCR 700 = (AIR 1954 SC 1154), this Court went elaborately into the question as to the extent of this deeming provision which would have been wholly redundant if the word 'deemed' in Section 171-A (4) was used in any sense other than to give an artificial construction.

38. The second branch of Mr. Jethmalani's argument under this head was that the principle underlying Section 132 of the Evidence Act was a principle of Common Law well known to criminal jurisprudence and as such was applicable even if Section 132 in terms was not attracted. In this connection, he referred us to certain observations of Subbarao, J., (as he then was) in Amba Lal v. Union of India, 1961-1 SCR 933 = (AIR 1961 SC 264) where in his dissenting judgment on the interpretation of Sections 168 and 171-A of the Act his Lordship had observed that:

"To such a situation, though the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure or the Evidence Act may not apply except in so far as they are statutorily made applicable, the fundamental principles of criminal jurisprudence and of natural justice must necessarily apply."

Counsel also referred us to the decision in Regina v. Benjamin Scott, (1856) 169 ER 909. The question before the Court in that case was whether the answers to the questions put to the defendant before the Court of bankruptcy relating to his trade dealings and estate tending to disclose a fraud of concealment of his property was admissible evidence against him on an indictment charging him with altering, mutilating and falsifying his books with intent to defraud his creditors. The examination was taken in conformity with Section 117 of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act (12 and 13 Vict. c. 196) which enacted that a bankrupt may be examined by the Court "touching all matters relating to his trade, dealings or estate, or which may tend to disclose any secret grant, conveyance or concealment of his lands etc.". There was no dispute that the questions put were relevant as touching matters relating to his trade etc. Delivering judgment in which three other Judges concurred, Lord Campbell, C. J., held that the defendant was bound to answer the questions although by his answers he might criminate himself. According to the learned Chief Justice:

".....and we think it would be contravention of the expressed intentions of the Legislature to permit the bankrupt to refuse to answer such questions; for ever since the reign of Elizabeth successive statutes have been passed, purporting to guard against frauds in bankruptcy and the bankrupt, when called upon to answer questions respecting his estate and effects, should not be allowed to avail himself of the common law maxim "nemo tenetur se ipsum accusare." With regard to the maxim relied on by the defendant's counsel he said:

"But Parliament may take away this privilege, and enact that a party may be bound to accuse himself, that is, that he must answer questions by answering which he may be criminated."

He further held that the maxim could not be treated as an implied proviso to be subjoined to the 117th section.

39. Mr. Jethmalani however relied on certain observations of Coleridge, J., in his dissenting judgment. In our view the maxim of the English Common Law can have no application here. Our law of evidence which is a complete Code does not permit the importation of any principle of English Common Law relating to evidence in criminal cases to the contrary. Section 2 of the Indian Evidence Act before its repeal by the Repealing Act (I of 1938) provided as follows:

"2. On and from that day (1st September 1872) the following laws shall be repealed:

(1) All rules of Evidence not contained in any Statute, Act or Regulation in force in any part of British India;

(2) All such rules laws and regulations as have acquired the force of law under the 25th section of the 'Indian Councils Act, 1861' in so far as they relate to any matter herein provided for; and

(3) The enactments mentioned in the schedule hereto, to the extent specified in the third column in the said schedule.

But nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect any provision of any Statute, Act or Regulation in force in any part of British India and not hereby expressly repealed."

We may usefully refer to the judgment of the Privy Council in Sris Chandra Nandi v. Rakhalananda (deceased) ILR (1941) 1 Cal 468 = (AIR 1941 PC 16) where the Judicial Committee approved of the statement of the law contained in the judgment of the High Court reading:

"It is to be noticed in this connection that Section 2 (1) of the Indian Evidence Act repeals the whole of the English common law on evidence so far as it was in force in British India before the passing of the Indian Evidence Act, and that provision of the law in effect prohibits the employment of any kind of evidence not specifically authorised by the Act itself."

Lord Atkin who delivered the judgment of the Judicial Committee pointed out that evidence which was not admissible under the Indian Evidence Act could not be let in for the purpose of bringing out the truth and said:

"What matters should be given in evidence as essential for the ascertainment of truth, it is the purpose of the law of evidence, whether at common law or by statute to define. Once a statute is passed, which purports to contain the whole law, it is imperative. It is not open to any Judge to exercise a dispensing power, and admit evidence not admissible by statute, because to him it appears that the irregular evidence would throw light upon the issue. The rules of evidence, whether contained in a statute or not, are the result of long experience, choosing no doubt to confine evidence to particular forms, and therefore eliminating others which it is conceivable might assist in arriving at truth."

The question there related to the admissibility of evidence which according to the Judicial Committee should not have been adduced. The question before us is somewhat different but if the Indian Evidence Act is a complete Code repealing all rules of evidence not to be found therein there is, in our opinion, no scope for introduction of a rule of evidence in criminal cases unless it is within the four corners of Section 132 or some other provision of the Evidence Act. As the Act does not apply to interrogations by a Customs Officer exercising powers under Section 171-A of the Sea Customs Act, Section 132 of the Evidence Act cannot be attracted.

40. Lastly it was contended that Section 171-A did not authorise interrogation of a subject to extract admissions from him which could be used against him on a future occasion. In aid of this proposition reliance was placed on a decision of the House of Lords in Commrs. of Customs and Excise v. Harz, (1967) 1 All ER 177. The main question there was whether the answers given by the respondents in the course of interrogation by Customs Officer were admissible in evidence. The power to interrogate was said to be derived from the Finance Act 1946, Section 20 (3) which provided in substance that every person concerned with the purchase or importation of goods etc., shall furnish to the Commissioners within such time and in such form as they may require information relating to the goods or to the purchase or importation thereof etc., and shall upon demand made by any officer or other persons authorised in that behalf by the Commissioners produce any books or accounts or other documents of whatever nature relating thereto for inspection by that officer or person. On a construction of that provision Lord Reid was of the view that there was nothing therein to require the trader to give answers which might incriminate him. His Lordship also observed that the section gave the officer no right to submit the respondents to prolonged interrogation they had to undergo and the respondents could not have been prosecuted if they had refused to answer. His Lordship observed that the right of the Commissioners to require information was quite different and said:

"If a demand for information is made in the proper manner the trader is bound to answer the demand within the time and in the form required whether or not the answer may tend to incriminate him, and if he fails to comply with the demand he can be prosecuted. If he answers falsely he can be prosecuted for that, and, if he answers in such a manner as to incriminate himself, I can see no reason why his answer should not be used against him. Some statutes expressly provide that incriminating answers may be used against the person who gives them and some statutes expressly provide that they may not. Where, as here, there is no such express provision the question whether such answers are admissible evidence must depend on the proper construction of the particular statute. Although I need not decide the point it seems to me to be reasonably clear that incriminating answers to a proper demand under this section must be admissible if the statutory provision is to achieve its obvious purpose."

Prima facie these provisions are against the contention of the appellant. In that case the House of Lords in effect held that the provision of law did not entitle the Commissioners "to send a representative to confront the trader, put questions to him orally and demand oral answers on the spot; and.....that it does not entitle them to send their representative to subject the trader to a prolonged interrogation in the nature of a cross-examination." The provisions of Sec. 171-A are in sharp contrast to the provision of law before the House of Lords. Here the statute expressly authorises officers of customs to secure the attendance of persons to give evidence or produce documents or things relevant in any enquiry in connection with the smuggling of goods. A limit is set to the right to obtain production in subsection (2) of the section and subsections (3) and (4) lay down that if a person summoned does not state the truth in such an examination he may be proceeded against under Sec. 193, I. P. C. for giving false evidence.

41. Counsel also drew our attention to the new Sections 107 and 108 of the Customs Act, 1962 where the power to examine persons has been given to all officers of customs by the first of the above-mentioned sections and the power to summon persons to give evidence and produce documents as in Sec. 171-A is given to a gazetted officer of customs under Section 108 of the new Act. In our view, this difference is immaterial for the purpose of this case and there is nothing in Section 171-A which limits the right of interrogation to questions the answers whereunto may not incriminate the person interrogated.

42. The High Court considered at some length the question as to whether the statement of the accused under Section 171-A (4) should be considered as a whole or whether reliance could be placed upon portions thereof rejecting the rest. It was argued before the High Court that inasmuch as the statements were sought to be relied upon as a confession the Court was bound to take into account not only the portions containing admissions but also the explanations which followed. The High Court held that a statement under S. 171-A did not stand at par with a confession so that it had to be taken as a whole or rejected as a whole. Even with regard to the statements portions of which are inculpatory against the maker and other portions which are not, it has been held in a recent decision of this court that the inculpatory portion can be accepted if the exculpatory portion is found to be inherently improbable.....vide Nishi Kant v. State of Bihar, Cri. A. 190 of 1966, D/- 2-12-1968 and reported so far in AIR 1969 SC 422. In this case the explanations contained in the statements were considered by the courts below and for reasons given they thought fit to reject the same and we see no reason to come to a different view.

Order accordingly.

Janapada Sabha, Chhindwara etc., Appellants v. The Central Provinces Syndicate Ltd. and another etc., Respondents.

Civil Appeals Nos. 125 to 134 of 1967, D/- 23-2-1970.

(A) Madhya Pradesh Koyala Upkar (Manyatakaran) Adhiniyam (18 of 1964), Sec. 3 — Act does not validate levy of cess exceeding 3 pies per ton.

The Madhya Pradesh Koyala Upkar (Manyatakaran) Adhiniyam (M. P. Coal Cess (Validation) Act, 18 of 1964) does not give legal effect to the imposition of cess at the rate of 4 pies, 7 pies or 9 pies per ton under the notifications issued by the Independent Mining Local Board nor to anything done in pursuance of those notifications. Consequently, the Local Board or its successor the Janapada Sabha cannot levy cess on coal exceeding 3 pies per ton. (Para 10)

The Validation Act (18 of 1964) purports to amend the C. P. Local Self Government Act (4 of 1920) and the Rules framed thereunder. But the Act does not set out the amendments intended to be made in the enactments. By a fiction it deems the Act of 1920 and the rules framed thereunder to have been amended without disclosing the text or even the nature of the amendments. The Act is limited to one Local Board in its application and to certain specific notifications and hence cannot operate to repeal Section 51 (2) of Act 4 of 1920 insofar as it applied to other Boards. Nor is there anything which enacts that the notifications issued without the sanction of the State Government must be deemed to have been issued validly under Sec. 51 (2) without the sanction of the Local Government. On the words used in the Act, it is plain that the Legislature attempted to overrule or set aside the decision of Supreme Court which it cannot do. AIR 1967 Madh Pra 56, Affirmed.

Verma, Advocates and Mr. O. C. Mathur, Advocate of M/s. J. B. Dadachanji and Co., with him), for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2. (In Civil Appeal No. 134 of 1967).

SHAH, J.—These appeals are filed by the Janapada Sabha, Chhindwara—hereinafter called ‘the Sabha’—against the judgment of the High Court of Madhya Pradesh declaring that the Madhya Pradesh Koyala Upkar (Man-yatakaran) Adhiniyam [Madhya Pradesh Coal Cess (Validation) Act] 18 of 1964 does not “give legal effect to the imposition of cess at the rate of 4 pies, 7 pies and 9 pies per ton under the notifications” issued by the Independent Mining Local Board on December 22, 1943, July 29, 1946 and July 13, 1947 respectively, “nor to anything done in pursuance of those notifications”.

2. The Independent Mining Local Board, Chhindwara, a Board constituted under the Central Provinces Local Self-Government Act 4 of 1920, resolved on March 12, 1935 to levy a cess under Sec. 51 of the Act at the rate of 3 pies per ton on coal extracted within the area. Sanction of the local Government was obtained to that levy. On December 22, 1943, the rate was enhanced to 4 pies per ton: it was enhanced on July 29, 1946 to 7 pies per ton and on July 19, 1947 the cess was enhanced to 9 pies per ton. The Central Provinces Local Self-Government Act 4 of 1920 was repealed with effect from June 11, 1948 by the C. P. and Berar Local Government Act 38 of 1948. By Sec. 192 of Act 38 of 1948 it was enacted, inter alia, that all rules, bye-laws and orders made, notifications and notices issued, taxes imposed or assessed, cesses, fees, tolls or rates levied under Act 4 of 1920 and in force immediately before the commencement of Act 38 of 1948 shall continue to be in force and shall be deemed to have been respectively made, issued, granted, imposed or assessed, levied and taken under Act 38 of 1948, and all rates, taxes and cesses due to the Independent Local Board shall be deemed to be due to the Sabha to whose areas they pertain.

3. The levy of coal cess by the Sabha was challenged by the Amalgamated Coalfields Ltd. and Others on diverse grounds in petitions filed in this Court under Art. 32 of the Constitution. This Court rejected the petitions, holding that Act 4 of 1920 had received the assent of the Governor-General and its validity was not liable to be challenged and that “on a proper interpretation of Section 51 of the Act the levy of coal cess was not excluded from the purview of the local authority”. It was also held that the levy of the cess was valid even after the coming into force of the Government of India Act, 1935, and the Constitution of India, in view of Sec. 143 of the Government of India Act, 1935 and Art. 277 of the Constitution. But the Court declined to allow the petitioners to urge that the increase in the rate of tax by resolutions in the years 1943, 1946 and 1947 was invalid: Amalgamated Coal Fields

Ltd. v. Janapada Sabha, Chhindwara, (1962) 1 SCR 1 = (AIR 1961 SC 964).

4. Validity of the enhanced levy was then challenged in petitions filed before the High Court of Madhya Pradesh by the Amalgamated Coal Fields Ltd. and Others. In appeals against the order of the High Court of Madhya Pradesh, this Court held that since neither the Act nor the Rules prescribed a ceiling on the levy, the expression "first imposition" occurring in Sec. 51 (2) would include every increase of the levy after its initial imposition and the increased levy would require the previous sanction of the Local Government and such sanction not being there, the levy at the rate of 9 pies per ton was illegal. The Court accordingly allowed the appeals and ordered that the appropriate directions be issued restraining the Janapada Sabha from recovering the tax at a rate higher than 3 pies per ton and also restraining the Sabha from recovering any additional tax in respect of the years for which tax had already been assessed against the petitioners Amalgamated Coalfields Ltd. v. The Janapada Sabha, Chhindwara, 1963 Supp (1) SCR 172 = (AIR 1964 SC 1013).

5. To rectify the defect pointed out by this Court in the imposition of the cess, the Legislature of Madhya Pradesh enacted the Madhya Pradesh Koyala Upkar (Manyatakaran) Adhinyam, Act 18 of 1964. By Sec. 2 (a) "Board" means "the Independent Mining Local Board, Chhindwara, constituted under the Central Provinces Local Self-Government Act, 1920 (IV of 1920), and its successor body, the Janapada Sabha, Chhindwara, constituted under the Central Provinces and Berar Local Government Act, 1948 (XXXVIII of 1948)". Section 2 (b) defines "cess" as meaning "a cess imposed by the Independent Mining Local Board, Chhindwara, or its successor body, on coal, coal dust or coke, from time to time, as the case may be, produced or manufactured at the mines, sold for export outside the State, or sold otherwise than for export by rail within the territorial jurisdiction of the said Board," and by Sec. 2 (c) "enactment" is defined as meaning "the Central Provinces Local Self-Government Act, 1920 (IV of 1920), or the Central Provinces and Berar Local Government Act, 1948

(No. XXXVIII of 1948), as the case may be, and rules made thereunder." By Sec. 3 it is provided:

"(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in any judgment, decree or order of any Court, cesses imposed, assessed or collected or purported to have been imposed, assessed or collected by the Board in pursuance of the notifications/notices specified in the Schedule shall, for all purposes, be deemed to be, and to have always been, validly imposed, assessed or collected as if the enactment under which they were so issued stood amended at all material times so as to empower the Board to issue the said notifications/notices and according to:—

(a) all acts, proceedings or things done or taken by the Board or by any officer of the Board in connection with the imposition, assessment or collection of such cess shall, for all purposes, be deemed to be and to have always been done or taken in accordance with law;

(b) any cess imposed or assessed in pursuance of the said notifications/notices before the 20th day of May, 1964 but not collected before such date may be recovered (after assessment of the cess where necessary) in the manner provided therefor;

(c) no suit or other proceeding shall be maintained or continued in any Court against the Board or any person or authority whatsoever for the refund of any cess so paid;

(d) no Court shall enforce any decree or order directing the refund of any cess so paid.

"(2) For the removal of doubts, it is hereby declared that nothing in subsection (1) shall be construed as preventing any person—

(a) from questioning in accordance with the provisions of the enactment, the assessment of such cess for any period.

(b) for claiming refund of the cess paid to him in excess of the amount due from him under the enactment." In the Schedule, notifications dated December 22, 1943, July 29, 1946 and July 19, 1947, enhancing the rate of cess were referred to.

6. The levy of coal cess validated by the provisions of Act 18 of 1964 was again challenged by the Central Provinces Syndicate Ltd. and other producers of coal, by petitions filed in the High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

It was claimed by the petitioners that Act 18 of 1964 was "ultra vires and ineffective", and the notices issued pursuant thereto were liable to be quashed. Dixit, C. J., and Pandey, J., who heard the petitions differed. In the view of the learned Chief Justice the Amending Act which purported to amend Act 4 of 1920 by seeking to empower the Mining Board to issue the notifications specified in the Schedule to the Act without reviving the Act of 1920 was ineffective, and that in any event the Act did not validate the levy of coal cess which had been imposed under the three notifications. Pandey, J., expressed a contrary view. He held that the provisions of Sec. 3 of Act 18 of 1964 were not invalid, "nor were they ineffective". The petitions were then referred to Shiv Dayal, J. The learned Judge agreed with Dixit, C. J., and held that Act 18 of 1964 "did not give legal effect to the imposition of cess at the rate of 4 pies, 7 pies or 9 pies per ton under the notifications issued by the Independent Mining Local Board nor to anything done in pursuance of those notifications."

7. The preamble of the Act states that it is "An Act to validate the imposition and collection of cess on coal by certain local authorities". Act 18 of 1964 is a taxing statute which purports to rectify the defects pointed out by this Court. This Court declared invalid the levy of cess by the Independent Mining Local Board, Chhindwara, at a rate exceeding three pies per ton. If the Act does not by the plain language used therein carry out the object, the Court will not be justified in supplying deficiencies in the Act. As observed by Rowlatt, J., in Cape Brandy Syndicate v. Commrs. of Inland Revenue, (1921) 12 Tax Cas 358.

"In a taxing Act one has to look merely at what is clearly said. There is no room for any intendment. There is no equity about a tax. There is no presumption as to a tax. Nothing is to be read in, nothing is to be implied. One can only look fairly at the language used."

These observations were approved by the House of Lords in Canadian Eagle Oil Co., Ltd. v. King, (1946) 27 Tax Cas 206. This Court has also adopted the same rule in Commr. of Income-tax v. Ajax Products Ltd., 55 ITR

741 = (AIR 1965 SC 1358) and Commr. of Income-tax v. B. M. Kharwar, (1969) 1 SCR 651 = (AIR 1969 SC 812).

8. The relevant words which purport to validate the imposition assessment and collection of cess on coal may be recalled : they are "cesses imposed, assessed or collected by the Board in pursuance of the notifications/notices specified in the Schedule shall, for all purposes, be deemed to be, and to have always been validly imposed, assessed or collected as if the enactment under which they were so issued stood amended at all material times so as to empower the Board to issue the said notifications/notices". Thereby the enactments, i.e. Act 4 of 1920 and the Rules framed under the Act pursuant to which the notifications and notices were issued, must be deemed to have been amended by the Act. But the Act does not set out the amendments intended to be made in the enactments. Act 18 of 1964 is a piece of clumsy drafting. By a fiction it deems the Act of 1920 and the rules framed thereunder to have been amended without disclosing the text or even the nature of the amendments.

9. Mr. B. Sen appearing on behalf of the Sabha contended that the intention of the Legislature was to repeal with retrospective effect sub-sec. (2) of Sec. 51 of Act 4 of 1920. By Sec. 51 of Act 4 of 1920 it was provided :

"(1) Subject to the provisions of any law or enactment for the time being in force, a District Council may, by a resolution passed by a majority of not less than two-thirds of the members present at a special meeting convened for the purpose, impose any tax, toll or rate * * *

(2) The first imposition of any tax, toll or rate under sub-section (1) shall be subject to the previous sanction of the Provincial Government.

* * * * *

But the Act in terms is limited in its application to the Independent Mining Local Board, Chhindwara, and its successor body the Janapada Sabha, Chhindwara constituted under Act 38 of 1948, and only in respect of the three notifications specified in the Schedule. Obviously the Act limited to one local Board in its application and to certain specific notifications cannot operate to repeal the clause insofar as it applied to other Boards.

10. The nature of the amendment made in Act 4 of 1920 has not been indicated. Nor is there anything which enacts that the notifications issued without the sanction of the State Government must be deemed to have been issued validly under Sec. 51 (2) without the sanction of the Local Government. On the words used in the Act, it is plain that the Legislature attempted to overrule or set aside the decision of this Court. That, in our judgment, is not open to the Legislature to do under our constitutional scheme. It is open to the Legislature within certain limits to amend the provisions of an Act retrospectively and to declare what the law shall be deemed to have been, but it is not open to the Legislature to say that a judgment of a Court properly constituted and rendered in exercise of its powers in a matter brought before it shall be deemed to be ineffective and the interpretation of the law shall be otherwise than as declared by the Court.

11. This Court in Amalgamated Coalfields Ltd.'s case, 1963 Supp (1) SCR 172 = (AIR 1964 SC 1013), held that the cess was not validly imposed and levied because the sanction of the State Government was not obtained at the time of enhancing the rate of levy of tax. That judgment was binding between the parties and also by virtue of Article 141 binding on all Courts in the territory of India. The Legislature could not say that declaration of law was either erroneous, invalid or ineffective either as a precedent or between the parties.

12. It is unnecessary then to consider whether the repealed Act may be amended without re-enactment.

13. The appeals fail and are dismissed with costs. One hearing fee.

Appeals dismissed.

M/s. Filmistan Private Ltd., Bombay, Appellant v. M/s. Bhagwandas Santprakash and another, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 262 of 1969, D/- 21-8-1970.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), Section 75 — Power of Court to issue commissions — Power is discretionary — Fact that witnesses examined on commission cannot be effectively cross-examined or their examination will entail heavy costs are not sufficient circumstances to interfere with discretion of Court in appeal — Question whether witnesses would appear before the Commissioner or not is also irrelevant. It is for the party to produce the witnesses before the Commissioner.

(Para 2)

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 77, 75 — Power of Court to issue letter of request — Section 77 read with Sec. 75 empowers Court to issue letter of request to any person other than Court to examine witnesses residing at any place not within India — Power is not subject to any reciprocal agreement between the Governments. (Para 4)

The following Judgment of the was delivered by

HEGDE J.: This appeal by special leave is directed against the order issued by Vimadalal J. in S. Suit No. 109 of 1962 on the Original Side of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay directing the issue of a letter of request to our ambassador at Kabul to examine certain witnesses who are residing in Kabul on commission.

2. Admittedly the witnesses sought to be examined at Kabul are relevant witnesses. All of them are living outside the jurisdiction of the Court and hence they are not amenable to the process of the Court. It was said on behalf of the appellant that one of the witnesses sought to be examined is an agent of the 1st defendant and therefore that defendant could have produced him in Court for examination. As regards the other witnesses, it was said that the facts that they were expected to depose could have been established by other evidence. We have no doubt that these facts must have been considered by the learned trial Judge. The order under appeal is essentially a discretionary order. We do not think that a case is made out for interfering with the discretion of the learned trial Judge. The fact that the witnesses examined on commission cannot be effectively cross-examined or their examination will entail heavy costs are not sufficient circumstances to interfere with the discretion of the learned trial Judge.

3. It was urged on behalf of the appellant that the Commissioner cannot compel the witnesses to appear before him for examination and therefore the attempt to examine them is a futile one. We think this consideration is irrelevant at this stage. We do not know whether the witnesses in question are willing to be examined by the Commissioner or not. It is for the defendant to produce them before the Commissioner, if he wants them to be examined.

4. It was further urged that as there is no reciprocal agreement between our Government and the Government of Afghanistan, the witnesses cannot be lawfully examined in Kabul. Section 77 of the Code of Civil Procedure read with Section 75 empowers the Court to issue a letter of request to any person other than a Court to examine witnesses residing at any place not within India. This power of the Court is not subject to any reciprocal agreement between the Governments. We do not know whether there is any law in Afghanistan prohibiting the examination of witnesses by Consular authorities. Nor is there any material before us on the basis of which we can decide whether the Commissioner can administer oath or not. These questions do not appear to have been urged before the trial court. The question whether the evidence recorded by the Commissioner is legally admissible or not can certainly be canvassed at the trial of the case. It is not necessary to go into that question at present.

5. For the reasons mentioned above this appeal fails and the same is dismissed — no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

I. D. DUA, J.

Talib Hussain, Petitioner v. State of Jammu and Kashmir, Respondent.

Writ Petn. No. 109 of 1970, D/- 7-7-1970.

(A) Constitution of India, Article 32 — Habeas corpus proceedings — For issue of writ Court has to consider legality of detention on date of hearing — No writ can be issued if detention on that date is lawful.

(Para 6)

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

DUA, J.:— Talib Hussain @ Abdul Rehman son of Feroz Din forwarded through Central Jail, Jammu his application for a writ of habeas corpus. According to the averments made therein the petitioner was arrested on September 4, 1968 but the warrant for his detention was dated September 10, 1968. Upto December 12, 1969 he was neither shown the warrant of detention nor were the grounds of his detention communicated to him. He was served with a copy of the warrant of detention on December 12, 1969. The petitioner had by then already filed an application for a writ of habeas corpus (W. P. No. 400 of 1969) but that application was withdrawn by him. On December 5, 1968 the petitioner was transferred from interrogation centre to the Central Jail, Jammu. On December 10, 1968 he was told that the grounds of detention could not be disclosed to him and this was long after the expiry of ten days from his arrest. The petitioner was tortured at the interrogation centre, Jammu, and his signatures were forcibly obtained on a piece of blank paper. The petitioner claimed to be a permanent resident of village Azamabad, police station Thana Darhal, Tahsil and District Rajouri. His arrest was alleged to be mainly due to personal grudges of Fazal Hasan and Nazir Hasan.

2. According to the return the petitioner was detained on September 11, 1968 pursuant to the order dated September 10, 1968. The petitioner was informed that it was against public interest to disclose to him the grounds on which the order of his detention had been made. The Government approved the order of detention on September 30, 1968. The order of detention was read out to the petitioner and its contents explained to him in Urdu and the petitioner at the time of detention affixed his signature on the order as a token of having understood the same. The order under Section 8 read with Section 13-A of the J & K Preventive Detention Act to the effect that it was against public interest to disclose to the petitioner the grounds of detention was made on September 10, 1968 and not on December 10, 1968 as suggested by the petitioner. The date December 10, 1968 on the copy attached to the reply of the Government was due to a typing error.

3. On behalf of the petitioner it was argued that the petitioner's detention started prior to the order of detention and that his detention must on that account be held to be illegal from its inception and therefore wholly void justifying his release. It was further submitted that there was no material showing that the orders made against the petitioner were explained to him in his own language.

4. I had a look at the original records produced by the respondent. It is clear that the order of detention dated September 10, 1968 was explained to the petitioner on September 11, 1968. The order of detention is as under:

"Whereas I, C. B. Budgular, I. A. S. District Magistrate, Rajouri, am satisfied that with a view to preventing Shri Talib Hussain @ Abdul Rehman s/o Feroz Din r/o Azamabad p/s Darhal now Gujran Wala, West Pakistan from acting in a manner prejudicial to the security of the State it is necessary so to do.

Now, therefore, in exercise of the powers conferred by Section 3 (2) read with Section 5 of the Jammu & Kashmir Preventive Detention Act, 1964, I, C. B. Budgular, I. A. S. District Magistrate, Rajouri hereby direct that the said Talib Hussain @ Abdul Rehman s/o Feroz Din be detained in Additional Police Lock up p/s Saddar, Jammu, subject to such conditions as to maintenance, discipline and punishment for breaches of discipline as have been specified in the Jammu and Kashmir Detenus General Order of 1968."

The order under Sec. 8 read with Section 13-A of the Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act dated September 10, 1968 reads thus:

"Whereas Shri Talib Hussain @ Abdul Rehman s/o Feroz Din r/o Azamabad p/s Darhal now Gujranwala, West Pakistan, has been detained in pursuance of order No. DIR/27/68 dated 10-9-1968 made by me under Sec. 3 (2) read with Section 5 of the Jammu & Kashmir Preventive Detention Act, 1964 with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to the security of the State and

Whereas, I consider it against the public interest to disclose the grounds of detention to the said Talib Hussain @ Abdul Rehman s/o Feroz Din.

Now, therefore, in pursuance of Section 8 read with Section 13-A of the said Act I hereby direct that the said Talib Hussain @ Abdul Rehman be informed that it is against the public interest to disclose to him the grounds on which his detention order was made."

At the back of this order there is an endorsement dated September 13, 1968 by Shri B. M. Dhar that the contents of the order had been explained to the detenu in the language understood by him. It is thus clear that the petitioner was informed that it was against public interest to disclose to the petitioner the grounds of his detention.

5. Now, the petitioner having been detained with a view to preventing him from acting in a manner prejudicial to the security of the State and it having been considered against public interest to disclose to him the grounds of his detention, it is clear that by virtue of the provisions of Sec. 13-A (2) (b) (ii) of the Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act, Section 8 (1) of that Act, and by virtue of Section 13-A (2) (c), Sec. 10 of that Act, were both inapplicable to this case. These provisions merely serve to demonstrate that the question of security of the State is of paramount importance and is placed above the right to personal liberty of an individual whose activities are a danger to such security. Activities prejudicial to the security of the State always pose a threat to the public peace and safety and in the event of a crisis arising out of such activities, the rights of individuals have to be postponed to the larger considerations of State.

6. In regard to the submission that the petitioner was arrested and deprived of his personal liberty long before the order of his arrest and this invalidated his detention, it is sufficient to point out that in habeas corpus proceedings the Court has to consider the legality of the detention on the date of hearing. If on the date of hearing it cannot be said that the aggrieved party has been wrongfully deprived of his personal liberty and his detention is contrary to law, a writ of habeas corpus cannot issue.

7. I am expressing no opinion in this case on the question of the effect of the withdrawal of the earlier petition by the petitioner.

8. The petitioner's detention cannot, therefore, be considered to be contrary to procedure established by law and cannot be held to be illegal so as to justify his release. This petition fails and is dismissed.

Petition dismissed.

Kadtuji Kadam v. State of

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

DUA, J.—The short and the only point raised in this appeal by special leave pertains to the justification of the High Court in summarily dismissing in limine the appeal preferred by the appellant in that Court against his conviction and sentence of life imprisonment by the Court of Session, Greater Bombay under Section 302, I. P. C.

2. We do not consider it necessary to enter into an exhaustive discussion of the prosecution story and the evidence led in its support. Suffice it to say that the trial Court relied in support of its order on two eye witnesses — one of whom is stated to be the uncle of the deceased. That Court also noticed that in the dying declaration by the deceased made to his uncle the name of the accused as his assailant was not mentioned. In a case like this, therefore, in our opinion, it was incumbent on the High Court to issue notice to the State and hear the appeal with the record before it and after evaluating the evidence, to record a speaking order so that this Court could also have before it the reasoning of the High Court for upholding the appellant's conviction. The dismissal of the appeal by the High Court with one word "dismissed" has left us guessing about the line of reasoning which the High Court would have adopted after appropriate scrutiny of the material on the record. This Court has very recently in Govinda Kadtuji Kadam v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1970 SC 1033 at p. 1034, on a review of the case law reiterated the legal position in these words:

"We may at the outset point out that though on appeal under Sec. 410, Criminal P. C. by a person convicted at a trial held by a Sessions Judge or an Additional Sessions Judge the appellant is entitled under Section 418 of the Code to challenge the conclusions both of facts and of law and to ask for a reappraisal of the evidence, the appellate Court has nevertheless full power under Sec. 421, Criminal P. C. to dismiss the appeal in limine even without sending for the records, if on perusal of the impugned order and the petition of appeal it is satisfied with the correctness of the order appealed against. This power, it may be emphasised, has to be exercised after perusing the petition of appeal and the copy of the order appealed against and after affording to the appellant or his pleader a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the appeal. The summary decision is accordingly a judicial decision which vitally affects the convicted appellant and in a fit case it is also open to challenge on appeal in this Court. An order summarily dismissing an appeal by the word "rejected", as is the case before us, though not violative of any statutory provision removes nearly every opportunity for detection of errors in the order. Such an order does not speak and is inscrutable giving no indication of the reasoning underlying it. It may at times embarrass this Court when the order appealed against prima facie gives rise to arguable points which this Court is required to consider without having the benefit of the views of the High Court on those points. In our opinion, therefore, when an appeal in the High Court raises a serious and substantial point which is prima facie arguable it is improper for that Court to dismiss it summarily without giving some indication of its view on the points raised. The interest of justice and fairplay require the High Court in such cases to give an indication of its views on the points argued so that this Court, in the event of an appeal from that order being presented here, has the benefit of the High Court's opinion on those points."

A month later this Court again in Siddanna Apparao Patil v. State of Maharashtra, (1970) 1 SCC 547 = (AIR 1970 SC 977) reaffirmed that view. It was undoubtedly open to this Court to go into the evidence led in this case and consider the appellant's conviction on the merits, notwithstanding that the present appeal is by special leave. But, in our opinion, it would be more appropriate and would serve the ends of justice better, if the High Court hears and decides the appeal in the light of the aforesaid decisions. This appeal accordingly succeeds and allowing the same we set aside the order of summary dismissal and remit the case back to the High Court for hearing and deciding the appeal in accordance with law. It may be pointed out that this order is not to be considered as containing any expression of opinion on the merits of the case.

AIR 1971 SUPREME COURT 65 (V 58 C 12)

J. C. SHAH AND K. S. HEGDE, JJ.

M/s. Sarin Chemical Laboratory, Appellant v. Commissioner of Sales Tax, U. P., Respondent.

Civil Appeals Nos. 262-265 and 266-267 of 1970, D/- 7-8-1970.

Sales Tax — U. P. Sales Tax Act (15 of 1948), S. 3 (A) — Notification No. 905/X, D/- 31-3-1956, entry 6 — Tooth powder is a toilet — Its turnover is liable to be taxed at single point under S. 3 (A) read with Entry 6.

The tooth powder is a toilet. Neither the expression "cosmetic" nor "toilet requisite" has been defined in the Act. The names of articles, the sales and purchases of which are liable to be taxed given in a statute, unless defined in the statute, must be construed not in a technical sense but as understood in common parlance. In common parlance tooth powder is considered as a toilet. That meaning accords with the dictionary meaning as well. Consequently its turnover is liable to be taxed at single point under S. 3 (A) read with entry 6 of the notification No. 905/X, D/- 31-3-1956. Decision of Allahabad High Court, Affirmed; (1963) 14 STC 943 (Mad) & (1968) 22 STC 169 (Bom), Approved; AIR 1961 SC 1325, Foll. (Paras. 3, 4, 5)

(1961) AIR 1961 SC 1325 (V 48) = (1961) 12 STC 286, Ramavatar Budhaiprasad v. Asst. Sales Tax Officer, Akola	5

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

HEGDE, J.:— These are connected appeals by special leave. The only question raised in these appeals is whether 'Sarin Tooth Powder' manufactured by M/s. Sarin Chemicals Laboratory is "cosmetic" or a "toilet requisite" as held by the High Court of Allahabad or it is an unspecified commodity liable to sales tax at all points of sale as held by the Additional Judge (Revisions) Sales Tax, Agra.

2. The contention of M/s. Sarin Chemical Laboratory who is the appellant in all the appeals is that the turn-over relating to the sales of tooth powder is liable to be taxed at the rate of 3 pies per rupee under Sec. 3 of the U. P. Sales Tax Act (to be hereinafter referred to as the Act) whereas Commissioner of Sales Tax, U. P. contends that the said turn over is liable to be taxed at single point under Section 3 (A) of that Act read with entry 6 of the notification No. 905/X dated March 31, 1956. The High Court has accepted the contention of the Commissioner. In these appeals the assessee challenges the conclusion reached by the High Court and supports the view taken by the Additional Judge (Revisions) Sales Tax, Agra, who held that the tooth powder is an unspecified commodity liable to tax under Sec. 3 of the Act.

3. Neither the expression 'cosmetic' nor 'toilet requisite' has been defined in the Act. The dictionary meaning of the expression 'cosmetic' (see Webster's International Dictionary) is "A preparation to beautify or alter appearance of the body or for cleansing, colouring, conditioning or protecting skin, hair, nails, eyes or teeth". The same dictionary gives the meaning of the expression "toilet" thus: 'an act or process of dressing, especially formerly of dressing hair and now usually cleansing and grooming of one's person'. The word "toiletry" is explained in the said dictionary as meaning "an article or preparation used in making one's toilet such as soap, lotion, cosmetic, tooth paste, shaving cream, cologne etc."

4. According to the dictionary meaning tooth powder is regarded both as an item of cosmetic and toilet but as observed by this Court in Ramavatar Budhaiprasad v. Asst. Sales Tax Officer, Akola, 12 STC 286 = (AIR 1961 SC 1325), the names of articles, the sales and purchases of which are liable to be taxed given in a statute unless defined in the statute must be construed not in a technical sense but as understood in common parlance. Therein this Court was called upon to consider whether 'betel leaves' could be considered as 'vegetable' under Item No. 6 of Schedule II of the C. P. & Berar Sales Tax Act, 1947.

In that case this Court observed that the word 'vegetable' had not been defined in the Act and being a word of every day use, it must be construed in a popular sense meaning "that sense which people conversant with the subject-matter with which statute is dealing would attribute to it." Applying that test this Court ruled that betel leaves cannot be considered as 'vegetable'. In common parlance a tooth powder is considered as a toilet. That meaning accords with the dictionary meaning as well.

5. The question whether tooth powder can be considered as a toilet came up before the Madras High Court in V. P. Somasundara Mudaliar v. State of Madras, (1963) 14 STC 943 (Mad), and before the Bombay High Court in Commr. of Sales Tax v. Vicco Laboratories, (1968) 22 STC 169 (Bom). Both the Courts took the view that the tooth powder is a toilet. The same view has been taken by the Allahabad High Court. We are in agreement with that view.

6. In the result these appeals fail and they are dismissed with costs — hearing fee one set.

Appeals dismissed.

Criminal Appeal No. 162 of 1967, D/- 17-8-1970.

(A) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 417, 423 — Appeal against acquittal — High Court not to interfere with conclusions of lower Court merely because it is inclined to take different view of evidence — Decision of Patna High Court, Reversed.

Though the powers of the High Court in considering the evidence on record in appeals under Sec. 417 are as extensive as its powers in appeals against convictions the Court should bear in mind the presumption of innocence of accused. Where the lower court has found the accused not guilty, unless the conclusions reached by it are palpably wrong or based on erroneous view of the law or that its decision is likely to result in grave injustice, the High Court should be reluctant to interfere with its conclusion. If two reasonable conclusions can be reached on the basis of the evidence on record then the view in support of the acquittal of the accused should be preferred. The fact that the High Court is inclined to take a different view of the evidence on record is not sufficient to interfere with the order of acquittal. Decision of Patna High Court, Reversed.

(Para 3)

(B) Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 4 (1) (h) — Delay in filing complaint — It is the duty of prosecution to explain delay satisfactorily — Failure to do so is circumstance of considerable importance.

(C) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 431 — Appeal against acquittal — Death of appellant — Appeal does not abate. Patna High Court Decision, Reversed. AIR 1958 Mad 624, Overruled.

An appeal under Sec. 417 can only abate on the death of the accused and not otherwise. Once an appeal against an acquittal is entertained by the High Court, it becomes the duty of the High Court to decide the same irrespective of the fact that the appellant either does not choose to prosecute it or is unable to prosecute it for one reason or the other. The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by HEGDE, J.:— This appeal by special leave is directed against the decision of single Judge of the High Court of Judicature at Patna setting aside the acquittal of the appellants and convicting them under Ss. 379/149, I. P. C. as well as under Section 143, I. P. C.

2. The appellants were prosecuted before the Munsiff Magistrate, 1st Class, Arrah for dishonestly cutting and removing the paddy crop in plots Nos. 340 and 346 pertaining to khata No. 82 in village Ibrahim Nagar District Shahbad. The complainant's case is that those lands belonged to him and the appellants unlawfully trespassed into that property on November 19, 1961 and harvested the rice crop. The appellants pleaded not guilty to the charge. The learned trial Magistrate held the appellants guilty and convicted them as mentioned earlier. In appeal the learned District Judge, Shahbad acquitted the appellants. He felt unable to rely on the prosecution case for three different reasons. Firstly he came to the conclusion that the witnesses who spoke about the occurrence are all interested witnesses and it is unsafe to place reliance on their testimony. He secondly came to the conclusion that there was considerable delay in filing the complaint and the delay in question has not been explained by the prosecution and that circumstance throws doubt on the prosecution case. Lastly he held that the non-examination of the police inspector who is said to have come to the place of occurrence at the time of the occurrence and seen some of the appellants harvesting the crop casts further doubt on the prosecution case. The High Court differing from the 1st appellate Court held that there was no delay in filing the complaint nor was the non-examination of the police inspector a circumstance that went against the prosecution. It did not deal with the finding of the 1st appellate Court that it is unsafe to place reliance on the evidence of P. Ws. 1 to 4 as they were interested witnesses.

3. It is true that the powers of the High Court in considering the evidence on record in appeals under Section 417, Criminal P. C. are as extensive as its powers in appeals against convictions but that Court at the same time should bear in mind the presumption of innocence of accused persons which presumption is not weakened by their acquittal. It must also bear in mind the fact that the appellate Judge has found them not guilty. Unless the conclusions reached by him are palpably wrong or based on erroneous view of the law or that his decision is likely to result in grave injustice, the High Court should be reluctant to interfere with his conclusion. If two reasonable conclusions can be reached on the basis of the evidence on record then the view in support of the acquittal of the accused should be preferred. The fact that the High Court is inclined to take a different view of the evidence on record is not sufficient to interfere with the order of acquittal.

4. The learned appellate Judge has come to the conclusion that P. Ws. 1 to 4 are interested witnesses and it is unsafe to place reliance on their testimony. It is established in evidence that P. Ws. 1 to 3 are interested witnesses. They are the enemies of the appellants. This aspect of the case was not considered by the High Court at all.

5. The occurrence is said to have taken place on November 19, 1961 but the complaint in respect of the same was filed on November 27, 1961. The explanation given by the complainant for this inordinate delay was that he laid information about the occurrence before the police on the date of the occurrence itself; he was expecting the police to take up the investigation; as the police did not take up the investigation, he filed the complaint on 27-11-1961. This explanation has been rejected by the 1st appellate Court. The complaint said to have been filed by the complainant has not been summoned nor proved. No satisfactory proof of any such complaint has been adduced before the Court. If a complaint under Section 154 had been filed, the same would have been registered and a final report under S. 173 submitted. None of those documents have been summoned much less proved. Curiously enough, the learned Judge of the High Court says that if the learned Sessions Judge had looked into the diary of the Magistrate, he would have found reference to the complaint filed by the complainant. In this Court we requested the Counsel for the State to look into the original records and inform us whether there is any reference to a complaint filed by the complainant. After examining the records, he told us that there is no such reference. We do not know how the learned Judge formed the impression that there was some reference in some record about the information laid before the police. In fact in this Court Counsel for the State told us that what had happened was that before the occurrence, the complainant appears to have filed an application before the police mentioning that there was an apprehension of breach of peace. The delay of about 8 days in filing the complaint in a case of this nature throws a great deal of doubt on the prosecution story. It was the duty of the prosecution to explain the delay satisfactorily. Failure of the prosecution to do so undoubtedly is a circumstance of considerable importance.

6. According to the complainant, as the appellants were reaping the crop the Police Inspector happened to come there and that he had seen some of the appellants harvesting the crop. If that be so the Inspector of Police would have been an extremely important witness. His evidence would have been useful in determining the guilt of the accused. He is a disinterested person. No explanation was given for not examining him. Strangely enough the learned Judge of the High Court opined that there was no purpose in examining the Inspector when he had failed to investigate the complaint made before him. As seen earlier, the alleged complaint appears to be an imaginary one. Therefore the inference that the Inspector of Police was guilty of dereliction of duty was unwarranted.

7. In view of our above conclusion, it is unnecessary for us to consider the question of law canvassed by Mr. E. C. Aggarwal, learned Counsel for the appellant. But as the same has been argued we shall go into it. The appeal before the High Court was brought after obtaining special leave under sub-sec. (3) of Sec. 417, Criminal P. C. It appears that during the pendency of the appeal, the appellant died. It was contended before the High Court and that contention was repeated before us that the appeal abated in view of the death of the appellant. This contention was rejected by the High Court. In support of that contention, Counsel for the appellant relied on two decisions, one of Allahabad High Court in Hafiz Nehal Ahmad v. Ramji Das, AIR 1925 All 620 and the other of Madras High Court in Thothan v. Murugan, AIR 1958 Mad 624. The first decision has no application to the facts of the present case. That was an appeal under S. 476-B of the Criminal P. C. It is true that the Madras decision was rendered in an appeal under Sec. 417 (3) of the Criminal P. C. In our opinion, the learned single Judge of the Madras High Court erred in thinking that the decision of the Allahabad High Court lent any support to his conclusion that an appeal filed under Section 417 (3), Criminal P. C. abates on the death of the appellant. The question of abatement of criminal appeals is dealt with by Section 431 of Criminal Procedure Code. That section reads:

"Every appeal under Section 411-A, sub-section (1) of Section 417 shall finally abate on the death of the accused and every other appeal under this Chapter (except an appeal from a sentence of fine) shall abate on the death of the appellant."

8. From this section it is clear that an appeal under Section 417 can only abate on the death of the accused and not otherwise. Once an appeal against an acquittal is entertained by the High Court, it becomes the duty of the High Court to decide the same irrespective of the fact the appellant either does not choose to prosecute it or is unable to prosecute it for one reason or the other. The argument that while introducing sub-section (3) to Section 417, Criminal P. C., the Parliament overlooked the provisions contained in Section 431, does not deserve consideration. The language of Section 431 is plain and unambiguous. Therefore no question of interpretation of that provision arises.

9. In view of our finding on the merits of the case, we allow this appeal, set aside the judgment of the learned single Judge of the High Court and restore that of the Sessions Judge. The appellants are on bail. Their bail bonds do stand cancelled.

Appeal allowed.

Awadhi Yadav and another, Appellants v. The State of Bihar, Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 128 of 1967, D/- 17-8-1970.

Evidence — Appreciation of — Circumstantial evidence — Accused when

can be convicted solely on circumstantial evidence.

Before a person can be convicted on the strength of circumstantial evidence, the circumstances in question must be satisfactorily established and the proved circumstances must bring home the offence to the accused beyond reasonable doubt. If those circumstances or some of them can be explained by any other reasonable hypothesis then the accused must have the benefit of that hypothesis. But in assessing the evidence imaginary possibilities have no place. What is to be considered are ordinary human probabilities. (Para 3)

Where it was established that there was bitter enmity between accused and deceased, that the accused were seen carrying the dead body and at that time they were also carrying parsa and bhalla, and it was also proved that the deceased died of injuries which could have been caused by the weapons they were carrying, and the accused gave no explanation as to how they happened to carry the dead body, all these circumstances establish that the deceased must have been murdered by the accused shortly before they were seen carrying dead body. Therefore, their conviction under Section 302/34 was proper. That the facts that the witnesses saw the accused having parsa and bhalla was not mentioned in F. I. R. and that they did not state in their depositions that those weapons were bloodstained were of no consequence when the information was not given by them and when they saw the accused carrying dead-body at about 8 P. M. Judgment of Patna High Court, Affirmed.

(Paras 5, 6, 8, 9, 10)

HEGDE, J.:— The appellants Awadhi Yadav and Bhulla Yadav are two of the eleven persons tried before the Additional Sessions Judge, Darbhanga. All of them were charged with offences under Section 302/34, I. P. C. In addition, the appellants as well as A-2 to 4 and A-6 to 8 were also charged with offences under Section 201/511, I. P. C. The learned trial Judge convicted Accused 1 to 8 both under Section 302/34 as well as Section 201/511, I. P. C. Under the former section, he sentenced them to suffer imprisonment for life. He did not impose separate sentence under Section 201/511, I. P. C. In appeal the High Court of Patna affirmed the convictions of the appellants both under Section 302/34 as well as Section 201/511, I. P. C. The other accused were acquitted of the charge under Section 302/34, I. P. C. For the offence under Section 201/511, I. P. C. they were sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 3½ years. Only the appellants have appealed against the decision of the appellate Court. This Court while granting special leave to appeal to this Court directed that the appeal should be confined to the question of conviction under Section 302 read with Section 34, I. P. C. Therefore, the appellants are precluded from canvassing the correctness of their conviction under Section 201/511, I. P. C. Hence no arguments were advanced before us on that question.

2. The prosecution case is that the appellants and some others, as a result of bitter enmity between some of the appellants and the deceased, Kishunlal Yadav joined together and murdered him on March 26, 1963 in the village of Basudeopur Tola Arnama and thereafter carried away the dead body of Kishunlal Yadav with the intention of screening the offenders from legal punishment.

3. The case against the appellants in respect of the charge under Section 302/34, rests on circumstantial evidence. No one has witnessed the murder. That part of the case rests entirely on circumstantial evidence. The High Court has held that the circumstances established are not sufficient to convict the accused persons other than the appellants for offence under Section 302/34, I. P. C. The question is whether the High Court was justified in holding that the evidence is sufficient to convict the appellants under that charge. Before a person can be convicted on the strength of circumstantial evidence, the circumstances in question must be satisfactorily established and the proved circumstances must bring home the offence to the accused beyond reasonable doubt. If those circumstances or some of them can be explained by any other reasonable hypothesis then the accused must have the benefit of that hypothesis. But in assessing the evidence imaginary possibilities have no place. What is to be considered are ordinary human probabilities.

4. We shall now examine the evidence against the appellants to see what all are the circumstances put forward against them; whether those circumstances are established and further whether the proved circumstances bring home the guilt to the appellants beyond all reasonable doubt.

5. There is no dispute that there was bitter enmity between the appellants and the deceased. This part of the case is admitted. Hence we shall say no more about it.

6. It is also established beyond dispute that the deceased died as a result of injuries inflicted on him by sharp cutting weapons like bhallas and parsas. This circumstance is satisfactorily proved by the medical evidence adduced in the case.

7. The appellants and some others were seen carrying the dead body of the deceased at about 8 p. m. P. W. 6 saw them and raised a hue and cry. Then they dropped the dead body and ran away from that place. This part of the prosecution evidence is the main basis for the conviction of the appellants and others under Section 201/511, I. P. C. That evidence was not challenged nor could it have been challenged in view of the order made by this Court at the time of granting special leave.

8. The appellants have given no explanation as to how they happened to carry the dead body of the deceased.

9. Three of the witnesses namely P. Ws. 4, 5 and 6 who saw the appellants and others carrying the dead body of the deceased have spoken to the fact that at the time they were carrying the dead body of the deceased, the 1st appellant had a parsa and the second had a bhalla in his hand. They had given consistent evidence on this point. Their evidence in this regard was not even challenged in cross-examination. As seen earlier all the injuries found on the person of the deceased, according to the medical evidence, could have been caused by parsas and bhallas. It was urged on behalf of the appellants that we should not accept the evidence of P. Ws. 4 to 6 when they spoke about the appellants having parsas and bhallas on two grounds namely (1) that the said fact was not mentioned in the First Information Report and (2) that the witnesses in question had not stated in their depositions that those weapons were stained with blood. So far as the omission in the First Information Report is concerned, it must be remembered that the information was not given by any one of those who had witnessed the occurrence. It was given by a relative of the deceased on the basis of the information given by P. W. 6. Hence that omission has no significance. There is nothing surprising if those witnesses were not able to see any blood stains on the weapons in question. As mentioned earlier those witnesses saw the appellants and others carrying the dead body at about 8 p. m. On the other hand the appellants have offered no explanation how they happened to carry the weapons mentioned above. In this context it may be mentioned that the prosecution evidence establishes that the deceased must have been murdered shortly before the witnesses saw the appellants and others carrying the dead body.

10. We are satisfied that the circumstances mentioned above have been satisfactorily proved and those circumstances establish beyond reasonable doubt that the appellants were responsible for the murder of the deceased.

11. In the result this appeal fails and the same is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal Suits Nos. 21 of 1959 and 362 of 1958, D/- 17-4-1964 (Andh Pra), Reversed.

The Special Officer has an obligation under Section 2 of the Reduction of Rent Act to determine in respect of a village (village of Kalipatnam) the average rate of cash rent per acre for each class of ryoti land in existence at the time of the commencement of the Act, such as, wet, dry and garden. This has to be determined on the basis of relevant material. When the determination is solely based on the settlement register containing no entry in regard to the village (Kalipatnam) this is irrelevant material and cannot constitute a rational basis for founding thereon the determination of the Special Officer. His determination must, therefore, be held to be based on no evidence, with the result that it must be held to be in violation of the fundamental principles of judicial procedure. A fortiori the order of the Government made under Section 3 (2) exclusively on the basis of the recommendation of the Special Officer must in consequence be held to be not in conformity with the provisions of the Reduction of Rent Act, and, therefore, outside the purview of S. 3 (2) of that Act. S. 8 (i) would accordingly be inapplicable and the jurisdiction of Civil Courts cannot be excluded to entertain and decide suit questioning the legality of the notification (dated 2-11-1948) reducing the rates of rent in respect of the delta dry ryoti lands in the village (village of Kalipatnam) under Section 3 (2). The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by DUA, J.— These two appeals (Civil Appeals Nos. 1619 and 1620 of 1963) on certificate by the High Court arise out of the same suit and are directed against a common judgment and decree of the High Court disposing of two cross-appeals presented in that Court and will, therefore, be disposed of by one judgment. The principal question canvassed lies within a narrow compass. It relates to the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to entertain and decide the present suit questioning the legality of the notification Ex. A-13 dated November 2, 1948 reducing the rates of rent in respect of the delta dry ryoti lands in village Kalipatnam under the Madras Estates Land (Reduction of Rent) Act XXX of 1947, (hereafter called the Reduction of Rent Act). The trial Court decreed the suit in part but the High Court to which both parties preferred appeals held that the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. It is this short question which requires determination in these appeals.

2. It is unnecessary to state at length the past history of the landed estate in question. The necessary relevant facts in brief may only be mentioned. Shree Raja Kandregula

Srinivasa Jagannadha Rao Panthulu Bahadur was the Inamdar of village Kalipatnam in Narsapuram Taluk in the West Godavari District. On November 2, 1948, the Government issued a notification (Ex. A-13) under Section 3 (2) of the Reduction of Rent Act reducing the rates of rent payable in respect of delta dry ryoti lands in Kalipatnam village. The Inam Settlement Officer, Vijayawadha, then took proceedings to determine whether Kalipatnam was an "inam estate" as defined in Sec. 2 (7) of the Madras Estates (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act XXVI of 1948. After inquiry he made the order dated May 31, 1950 (Ex. A-1) holding that the suit village was an inam estate. Feeling aggrieved by these two orders the appellant instituted the suit, out of which the present appeals arise. The short question canvassed before us, as observed earlier, is whether the Civil Courts have jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

3. It may be stated at the outset that the appellant's counsel conceded at the bar that the question as to the kind of grant can only be decided by the Tribunal appointed under the Reduction of Rent Act and Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon such a controversy. The suit challenging the validity of Ex. A-1 declaring Kalipatnam village as an inam estate was accordingly conceded to be incompetent. Challenge to Exhibit A-1 was thus not pressed in this Court. It was, however, submitted that any finding by the Civil Court on the kind of grant would have to be completely ignored by the Tribunal while considering this question under the Reduction of Rent Act. The submission seems to us to be justified.

4. We are thus left only with the relief sought in respect of Ex. A-13. The appellant questioned the validity of this notification on the ground that it cannot be considered in law to have been made under Section 3 (2) of the Reduction of Rent Act so as to be immune from challenge in the Civil Courts. In order to appreciate and determine this argument it is desirable to turn first to the provisions of the Reduction of Rent Act. This Act was enacted in order to provide for the reduction of rents payable by ryots in estates governed by the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908 approximately to the level of the assessments levied on lands in ryotwari areas in the neighbourhood and for the collection of such rents exclusively by the State Government. The purpose of collection of rent exclusively by the State Government was added in 1951 with retrospective effect. The heading of the Act, as originally enacted, was changed, on the creation of Andhra Pradesh, to A. P. (Andhra Area) Estates Land (Reduction of Rent) Act XXX of 1947. Suitable adaptations necessitated by the creation of the separate Andhra Pradesh were also duly made. Section 2 of this Act which empowers the State Government to appoint a Special Officer for any estate or estates for the purposes of recommending fair and equitable rates of rent for the ryoti land provides as under:

"Appointment of Special Officer to recommend rates of rent in estates.— 2 (a) (1) The State Government may appoint a Special Officer for any estate or estates for the purpose of recommending fair and equitable rates of rent for the ryoti land in such estate or estates.

(b) The Special Officer so appointed shall also recommend fair and equitable rates of rent for all lands in such estate or estates which became ryoti lands after the commencement of the Act.

(ii) The Special Officer shall first determine in respect of each village (hereinafter in this section referred to as "principal village") in an estate:—

(a) the average rate of cash rent per acre prevailing at the commencement of this Act for each class of ryoti land which was in existence in the principal village at such commencement; such as wet, dry and garden;

Provided that where no cash rents are prevalent in the principal village in respect of any class of land, the Special Officer shall determine the average rate of cash rent per acre prevailing at such commencement for such class of land in the nearest village in the estate in which cash rents are prevalent for such class of land and in which conditions are generally similar to those obtaining in the principal village, or where there is no such village in the estate, in the nearest village in the nearest estate in respect of which village both the requirements specified above are satisfied;

"(b) the average rate of assessment per acre prevailing at such commencement in respect of each of the said classes of land in the nearest ryotwari area in which conditions are generally similar to those obtaining in the principal village.

(3) The Special Officer shall then compare the average rates of cash rent as determined under clause (a) of sub-section (2) with the average rates of assessment as determined under clause (b) of that sub-section, and after making due allowance for any difference in the conditions prevailing in the two cases, and also in cases falling under the proviso to clause (a) of sub-section (2), for any difference in the conditions prevailing in the village referred to in that proviso and in the principal village, determine (i) the extent, if any to which the rates of rent payable for each class of ryoti land in the principal village should in his opinion, be reduced and (ii) the rates of rent payable for each such class of lands after such reduction.

Explanation I. The Special Officer shall have power only to determine that the rents payable for any class of ryoti land in the principal village shall be reduced; and he shall have no power to determine that such rents shall be enhanced.

Explanation II. The extent of reduction, if any, determined by the Special Officer under this sub-section shall also apply where rent in the principal village is paid in kind or on the estimated value of a portion of the crop or at rates varying with the crop, whether in cash or in kind, or partly in one of these ways and partly in another, or partly in one or more of these ways and partly in cash. In every such case the Special Officer shall also determine the rent payable, whether in kind or in cash or partly in kind and partly in cash, as the case may be.

(3-1) In the case of lands in an estate which became ryoti lands after the commencement of this Act, the Special Officer shall determine for each class of such lands in the principal village the rates of rent per acre payable thereof under this Act. The rates of rent so determined shall be the same as those fixed under sub-sec. (2) of Section 3 for similar ryoti lands in the same village;

"Provided that where the rates of rent payable in respect of ryoti lands in the principal village have not been fixed under sub-section (2) of Sec. 3, or where there are no similar ryoti lands in the principal village, the rates of rent so determined shall be the same as those fixed under sub-section (2) of Section 3 for similar ryoti lands in the nearest village in the estate, or, if there is no such village, in the nearest village in the nearest estate in which conditions are generally similar to those obtaining in the principal village.

(4) Where the conditions in a group of two or more villages in an estate are generally similar the Special Officer may perform the functions under sub-ss. (2), (3) and (3-A) in respect of such group of villages as a whole, instead of separately in respect of each village in the group."

Section 3 so far as relevant for our purpose may now be reproduced.

"Power of State Government to reduce rates of rent after considering Special Officer's recommendations.—

3 (i) "After completing his work in any estate, the Special Officer shall submit his recommendations to the State Government through the Board of Revenue specifying in case of ryoti lands which were in existence at the commencement of this Act, (i) the extent, if any, to which the rents for each class of such lands in each village or group of villages in the estate, should in his opinion, be reduced and (ii) the rate of rent payable for each such class after such reduction, and in the case of lands in each village or group of villages in the estate which became ryoti land after the commencement of this Act the rate of rent determined by him in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (3-A) of Section 2.

(2) After considering the recommendations of the Special Officer and the remarks of the Board of Revenue thereon, the State Government shall, by order published in the Fort. St. George Gazette, fix the rates of rent payable in respect of each class of ryoti in each village in the estate."

"Provided that where the rate of rent so fixed in respect of any class of ryoti lands which were in existence at the commencement of this Act, or in respect of any class of lands which became ryoti lands in any fasli year after such commencement exceeds the rate of rent payable in respect thereof at such commencement or in that fasli year as the case may be, only the latter rate of rent shall be payable in respect of such land."

5. It is not necessary to reproduce the rest of the sections. Section 7 empowers the State Government to make rules to carry out the purpose of the Act and Section 8 ousts the jurisdiction of the Courts of Law to question the validity of certain orders and proceedings. Section 8 reads as under:

"Validity of certain orders and proceedings not to be questioned—

8. The validity of the following orders and proceedings shall not be liable to be questioned in any Court of Law:

(i) any order made under Section 3, sub-section (2);

(ii) any recovery of rent effected by the Provincial Government under Section 3, sub-section (4) or any payment made by them to the landholder under the same sub-section;

(ii-a) any order made under sections 3a and 3c;

(iii) any determination of the net income or average net income or average net income made under Section 5, sub-section (2)."

6. The precise question requiring decision by us is whether the present suit questioning the validity of the fixation of rent in Ex. A-13 is excluded from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts by virtue of Sec. 8 (i). There is no dispute that clause (i) is the only relevant clause to be considered in this connection. The appellant's learned counsel submitted that the exclusion of jurisdiction of the Civil Courts cannot be extended to orders which were not made in strict compliance with the provisions of Sec. 3 (2) because unless so made they cannot be considered to be hit by Sec. 8 (i). According to the respondent's learned counsel, on the other hand, Ex. A-13 was made pursuant to the power conferred by Sec. 3 (2) and is therefore covered by Sec. 8 (i). He further submitted that there being a complete machinery provided by the statute itself for challenging the orders made in proceedings taken thereunder, the Civil Courts are precluded from considering the correctness of those orders. According to him Sections 2A and 3B provide for rectification of errors committed by the Special Officer and that looking at the statutory scheme it must be held that an order purporting to be made under Sec. 3(2) of the Reduction of Rent Act is immune from challenge in the Civil Courts.

7. The general principle on which the jurisdiction of Civil Courts can successfully be excluded in respect of decisions by special Tribunals is well settled. The difficulty usually arises in its application to given cases. As observed by the Privy Council in Secy. of State v. Mask and Co., 67 Ind App 222 = (AIR 1940 PC 105), "the exclusion of the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts must either be explicitly expressed or clearly implied. Further even if the jurisdiction is so excluded the Civil Courts have jurisdiction to examine into the cases where the provisions of the Act have not been complied with or the statutory Tribunal has not acted in conformity with the fundamental principles of judicial procedure. It is unnecessary to refer to other cases dealing with this question. We need only refer to the recent decision of this Court in Dhulabhai v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (1968) 3 SCR 662 = (AIR 1969 SC 78), in which after an exhaustive discussion of the case law the legal position was summarised by the Court speaking through Hidayatullah C. J. as follows:

"(1) Where the statute gives a finality to the orders of the special tribunal the Civil Courts' jurisdiction must be held to be excluded if there is adequate remedy to do what the Civil Courts would normally do in a suit. Such provision, however, does not exclude those cases where the provisions of the particular Act have not been complied with or the statutory tribunal has not acted in conformity with the fundamental principles of judicial procedure.

(2) Where there is an express bar of the jurisdiction of the court, an examination of the scheme of the particular Act to find the adequacy or the sufficiency of the remedies provided may be relevant but is not decisive to sustain the jurisdiction of the civil court.

Where there is no express exclusion the examination of the remedies and the scheme of the particular Act to find out the intendment becomes necessary and the result of the inquiry may be decisive. In the latter case it is necessary to see if the statute creates a special right or a liability and provides for the determination of the right or liability and further lays down that all questions about the said right and liability shall be determined by the tribunals so constituted, and whether remedies normally associated with actions in Civil Courts are prescribed by the said statute or not.

(3) Challenge to the provisions of the particular Act as ultra vires cannot be brought before Tribunals constituted under that Act. Even the High Court cannot go into that question on a revision or reference from the decision of the Tribunals.

(4) When a provision is already declared unconstitutional or the constitutionality of any provision is to be challenged, a suit is open. A writ of certiorari may include a direction for refund if the claim is clearly within the time prescribed by the Limitation Act but it is not a compulsory remedy to replace a suit.

(5) Where the particular Act contains no machinery for refund of tax collected in excess of constitutional limits or illegally collected a suit lies.

(6) Questions of the correctness of the assessment apart from its constitutionality are for the decision of the authorities and a civil suit does not lie if the orders of the authorities are declared to be final or there is an express prohibition in the particular Act. In either case the scheme of the particular Act must be examined because it is relevant enquiry.

(7) An exclusion of the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is not readily to be inferred unless the conditions above set down apply."

8. According to the appellant's counsel the first proposition covers the present case. He submitted that there is no statutory definition to which one can turn for the purpose of determining wet, dry and garden lands as contemplated by the Reduction of Rent Act. The matter has therefore necessarily to be decided by holding an inquiry into the factual position. This, the counsel argued, was not done. We were taken through the relevant portions of Ex. B-24 which is a report from the Special Assistant to the Special Officer for rent reduction. It is observed therein that there are no wet or garden lands in village Kalipatnam and that the entire land is delta dry in which wet paddy is raised under Kalipatnam project channel. The ryots pay to the Government Rs. 5/- per acre by way of water rate. It was emphasised by the appellant's learned counsel that the fact that wet paddy is raised in this land, which is described as delta dry and that water rate is paid to the Government, must conclusively show that the land is not delta dry but wet. It is the factual position and not bare entry in the settlement register which should be the guiding factor. Support for this submission was also sought from the recent unreported decision of this Court in O. K. Muthuswamy Mudaliar v. State of Madras, Civil Appeals Nos. 1011-1016 of 1965, D/- 31-7-1968 (SC), in which the following observations occur:

"The mere fact that the lands are registered dry does not affect their value. The lands are fertile and are cultivated with wet crop. They are irrigable with the waters of the river Bhavani. There is abundant supply of water throughout the year. The land-owners had the right to take water for the irrigation of 400 acres."

9. In this connection the appellant's learned counsel also criticised the following observation in the judgment of the High Court:

"In the Statements Ex. B-5 and Ex. B-6, furnished by the plaintiff himself, the classification of the land is shown as dry though it is also mentioned that the lands were cultivated with double crop of paddy. If a proprietor owns a certain land but does not own the water source from which water is being taken for irrigating that land, he will not be in a position to classify it as wet land for the benefit of claiming rent for himself in the same way as he would be if he owned a water source and supplied 'water therefrom as a guaranteed supply' to lands registered under that source as ayacut. In the present case, water, was Government water which was brought from Government project."

10. On behalf of the appellant it was submitted that this observation is unsound and is not supportable by any provision of law. The respondent's counsel was unable to support this observation of the High Court.

11. Reverting to Ex. B-24 Kalipatnam village was compared with Losaragutlapadu, an adjacent village. In regard to that village also it is mentioned that there is an extensive wet cultivation in delta dry land under project channels as in Kalipatnam. Shri J. Sambamurthy, to whose inspection note dated July 1, 1948 reference is made in Ex. B-24 appeared as D. W. 5 and the counsel took us through his statement. In cross-examination he deposed as follows:

"I cannot say whether there are 4,000 acres of land which are double crop land. There are some lands in which double crops are grown. I cannot say their extent. There are small extents of garden lands. There are single crop lands under extension channel. All these lands are treated as dry lands rents reduced. The Kalipatnam is at the tail end of the delta.....The Losaragutlapadu is in Bhimavaram taluk Yanamadula Drain intervenes Kalipatnam and Losaragutlapadu. Gollavanithippa lands have come under cultivation previously. It is part of Losaragutlapadu. I cannot say whether there are 11,000 acres of land uncultivated in Losaragutlapadu. Probably it is forest area. There were small extents of land in Muthyalapalli and Vempa under the Project Channel. Ex. B-4 shows that there are lands of double crop. Under the Act the plaintiff has to furnish a statement of lands etc. The plaintiff's agent furnished Exhibit B-6. The soil of Losaragutlapadu was examined. This is contained in Exhibit B-24. The Settlement Officer classified the soils under contained Diglot Registers. An extract of it is contained in Exhibit B-24. I cannot say readily now without reference to Settlement Manual what the figures given in the Diglot Register are relating to the soils. That statement contained in the file relates to the Losaragutlapadu. A similar statement for Kalipatnam was not taken. There is no such statement for that village. I did not write to the Settlement Department to prepare such a statement for suit village. I do not know whether the Government analyse the soil through Agricultural Department before the project was started.....I examined the soils at one or two places and I consulted the Settlement Register at that time. I cannot say whether those one or two places were under extension project. I remember I have taken description of the soil from the Settlement Register and Manual.....I do not know about the construction of the project."

12. Shri J. Satyanarayana, Tahsildar, who appeared as D. W. 7 stated in his cross-examination that the lands in Kalipatnam were sanctioned with two crops, though he could not say whether they were under cultivation since 1948. He was also unable to say whether the Settlement Register from Kalipatnam was available in Taluk Office. According to him water rate in the year 1958 was increased 50 per cent for all lands including Kalipatnam. The cess was also increased proportionately. He was unable to explain the figures given under the description of the soil in Ex. B-24 and indeed he expressed his ignorance about the existence of any register for Kalipatnam on this subject.

13. The appellant's argument strongly pressed before us was that the class of land had been determined to be delta dry land exclusively on the basis of the settlement register which did not contain any entry with respect to Kalipatnam. The entry in the settlement register with respect to the soil of Losaragutlapadu could not be taken to cover the soil in Kalipatnam in the absence of evidence that the soil in these two villages was similar in this respect. Stress was also led on the submission that description in the settlement register could not be considered to be conclusive and that proper factual inquiry was necessary because the determination affects the appellant's proprietary rights. The submission appears to us to possess merit. The Special Officer had an obligation under Sec. 2 of the Reduction of Rent Act to determine in respect of Kalipatnam village the average rate of cash rent per acre for each class of ryoti land in existence at the time of the commencement of the Act, such as, wet, dry and garden. This had to be determined on the basis of relevant material. The Special Officer, however, proceeded to found his determination only on the report of the Special Assistant (Ex. B-24) which, as discussed above, only took into account the entry in the settlement register with respect to the soil of Losaragutlapadu. This really means that the determination of the Special Officer is solely based on the settlement register containing no entry in regard to Kalipatnam. This material is irrelevant and cannot constitute a rational basis for founding thereon the determination of the Special Officer. His determination must, therefore, be held to be based on no evidence, with the result that it must be held to be in violation of the fundamental principles of judicial procedure. A fortiori the order of the Government made under Sec. 3 (2) exclusively on the basis of the recommendation of the Special Officer must in consequence be held to be not in conformity with the provisions of the Reduction of Rent Act, and, therefore, outside the purview of Sec. 3 (2) of that Act. Section 8 (i) would accordingly be inapplicable and the jurisdiction of Civil Courts cannot be excluded. The notification Ex. A-13 must, therefore, be struck down as contrary to law and ultra vires the Reduction of Rent Act.

14. We accordingly allow the appeals with costs and strike down the report of the Special Officer as also the notification Ex. A-13. As observed earlier challenge to Exhibit A-1 was not pressed at the hearing by the appellant. It would be open to the authorities concerned to proceed to reduce the rent in accordance with law. One set of costs.

Appeal allowed.

pendency of suit — Effect of Section 4 (1) (f) on the rights of plaintiffs — On redemption, plaintiffs held were entitled to show that land in question was Khud-kasht and they could remain in possession thereof in accordance with Section 4 — C. S. A. No. 310 of 1960, D/- 27-9-1962 (M. P.), Reversed.

Where, during the pendency of a suit for redemption and possession of the mortgaged land by the proprietors, the M. B. Act 13 of 1951 was enforced in that area;

Held, that in view of the provisions of that Act, the plaintiffs were not only entitled to redeem the mortgage by paying the mortgage money but it was also open to them as proprietors to show, on the basis of entries in the village papers, that the land in question was Khud-Kasht, and therefore, in accordance with Section 4 (1) (f), they were entitled to remain in possession thereof notwithstanding that their rights, title and interests in the land had vested in the State from the date of the notification. The High Court was in error in dismissing the plaintiffs' claim for possession on the ground that the plaintiffs could only claim compensation from the Government on the basis of their proprietary rights after redeeming the mortgage. Mr. S. T. Desai, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. P. C. Bhartari, Advocate, and M/s. J. B. Dadachanji and Co., Advocate with him), for Appellant; Mr. B. C.

Misra, Sr. Advocate, (Miss Bhajan Ramrakhyani and Mrs. Urmila Kapoor, Advocates, with him), for Respondents Nos. 1 to 4, 8 and 10 to 12.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

DUA, J.:— This is the plaintiffs' appeal by special leave from a common judgment and decree of a learned Single Judge of the Madhya Pradesh High Court at Gwalior dated September 27, 1962 partially allowing the defendants' second appeal and dismissing that of the plaintiffs.

2. It is not necessary to state the detailed facts of the case. Facts necessary for the purpose of this appeal alone may briefly be stated. In May, 1939, Samle Singh and Jomdar Singh created a mortgage of the suit land in favour of Munshi Singh for a sum of Rs. 2242/14/-. It is said that in May, 1943 notice given by the mortgagors for redemption of the mortgage was refused by the mortgagee. In June, 1943 the suit giving rise to the present appeal was instituted for redemption of the mortgage. Some other persons who were found to be in possession of the land, claiming to be tenants, were also impleaded as defendants. On May 25, 1951, Madhya Bharat Zamin-dari Abolition Act XIII of 1951 was enforced. It appears that an application to amend the plaint as a result of the new enactment was disallowed by the trial Court, but on revision the Madhya Pradesh High Court by its order dated October 10, 1955 reversed the order of the trial Court and permitted the plaintiffs to amend the plaint. The pleadings after the amendment gave rise to nearly 17 issues on the merits. On October 10, 1958 the suit was decreed in respect of the relief for redemption but claim in regard to mesne profits was disallowed. Preliminary decree for redemption was accordingly granted. In the course of its judgment the trial Court observed under issue No. 10 as follows:

"I have in preceding paras shown that as per allegations in the written statements and the patwari papers, it appears that the suit lands have been in possession of Hanumantsingh, Shambhoosingh, Khemsingh, Mansingh and Ramdassingh. It will be discussed later whether they and descendants of Munshisingh are joint owners or not. Before abolition of zamindari, the records show half of the suit lands as the Khudkasht of the above defendants and half as the tenancy holding of Ramdas (Kastkari). These entries however do not confer any title on the parties. Their right to remain in possession is limited i.e., till such time as the property is redeemed by the mortgagors i.e., the plaintiffs. These entries or the rights shown therein cannot prejudice the right of the plaintiffs." The Court while deciding issues Nos. 16 and 17 observed thus:

"I have discussed these issues earlier in a different context. I may briefly add that Abolition of Zamindari Act does not affect the right of the plaintiffs to recover possession of lands which were placed in possession of the mortgagees (1956 Madh BLJ 1302, Rameshwar v. Bhogiram). Defendants Hanumantsingh and others did not acquire possession of the suit lands by virtue of the sale in favour of their father Daulat Singh because they had purchased only an equity of redemption as will appear from the judgment in Civil Suit No. 21/2001 filed on record. Entries as Pacca Krishak cannot affect the rights under the mortgage bond. I find accordingly."

3. Three appeals were presented in the District Court against the decree founded on this judgment, one of them being by the plaintiffs challenging refusal by the trial Court to grant mesne profits. In October, 1960 the plaintiffs' appeal was partly allowed and mesne profits decreed from the date of deposit of the mortgage amount in Court. The other two appeals were dismissed. That Court disposed of all appeals by a common judgment and came to the conclusion that the lands had been mortgaged with possession by Samle Singh and Jomdar Singh with Munshi Singh and that they were under self-cultivation of the plaintiffs before the mortgage, the mortgagees having come into possession by reason of the mortgage. The matter was taken by the defendants to the High Court on second appeal, the plaintiffs having also preferred an appeal in that Court against the decree of the first appellate Court declining to give full relief claimed in regard to mesne profits. In the High Court also three appeals were presented. The High Court partially allowed the defendants' appeal in view of the provisions of the Madhya Bharat Zamindari Abolition Act XIII of 1951. The plaintiffs were held entitled to redeem the mortgage by paying the mortgage money but disentitled to get possession of the mortgaged land. The proprietary rights including the right to get possession having vested in the State under the aforesaid Act the plaintiffs, according to the High Court, could only claim compensation from the Government on the basis of their proprietary rights after redeeming the mortgage by making payment of the mortgage money. In support of this view the High Court relied on this Court's decision in Haji Sk. Subhan v. Madho Rao (1962) Supp 1 SCR 123 = (AIR 1962 SC 1230), considering that decision to be decisive of the point in issue. That decision, however, appears to us to be directly concerned with the Madhya Pradesh Abolition of Proprietary Rights (Estates, Mahals, Alienated Lands) Act, 1950 (Madhya Pradesh Act 1 of 1951).

4. Before us the short question raised on behalf of the appellants is that reliance on the Madhya Bharat Zamindari Abolition Act XIII of 1951 for the first time in the High Court was improper and that in any event without affording an opportunity to the appellants to show that the said Act did not apply to the case in hand, their suit could not have been dismissed. The submission is not wholly correct. There was in fact an amendment of the plaint pursuant to the enactment of the Madhya Bharat Abolition of Zamindari Act (sic) and additional issues were framed on the amended pleadings. The parties and the Courts were thus not ignorant of the existence of the said Act on the statute book.

5. Turning to the Act in question, it was brought on the statute book in 1951, as the preamble shows, in order "to provide for the public purposes of the improvement of agriculture and financial condition of agriculturists by abolition and acquisition of the rights of proprietors in villages, mahals, chaks or blocks settled on zamindari system which is only a system of keeping an intermediary between the State and the tenants injurious to the betterment of agriculture as well as the agriculturists in Madhya Bharat and for other matters connected therewith."

6. "Proprietor" as defined in Section 2 (a) means, "as respects a village, muhal or land settled on zamindari system, a person owning whether in trust or for his own benefit such village, muhal or land and includes:

(1) a Malguzar as defined in sub-clause (12) of Section 2 of Qanoon Mal, Gwalior State, Samvat 1983; and

(2) as respects a chak or block a chakdar or blockdar whose lease granted to him by the Government under any Act, Rule or Circular relating to chaks and blocks, includes also, amongst its other conditions, a condition that he shall acquire the proprietary rights in respect of that chak or block when the conditions of the lease are fulfilled;

(3) the heirs and successors in interest of a proprietor."

7. Section 2 (c) defines "Khudkasht" to mean "land cultivated by the Zamindar himself or through employees or hired labourers and includes sir land." Sections 3 and 4 which occur in Chapter II dealing "vesting of proprietary rights in the State" provide as under:

"3. Vesting of proprietary rights in the State.

(1) Save as otherwise provided in this Act and subject to the provisions of Section 8, on and from a date to be specified by a notification by the Government in this behalf (hereinafter referred to as the date of vesting all proprietary rights in a village, muhal land, chak or block in Madhya Bharat vesting in a proprietor of such village, muhal, land, chak or block as the case may be, or in a person having interest in such proprietary right through the proprietor shall pass from such proprietor or such other person to and vest in the State free of all encumbrances.

(2) After issue of a notification under sub-section (1) no right shall be acquired in or over the land to which the said notification relates except by succession or under a decree or order of a Court or under a grant or contract in writing made or entered into by or on behalf of the Government; and no fresh clearings for cultivation or for any other purpose shall be made in such land except in accordance with such rules as may be made by the Government in this behalf.

(3) The Government may by notification published in the Gazette vary the date specified under sub-section (1) at any time before such date.

4. Consequences of the vesting of an estate in the State.

(1) Save as otherwise provided in this Act when the notification under Section 3 in respect of any area has been published in the gazette, then, notwithstanding anything contained in any contract, grant or document or in any other law for the time being in force, the consequences as hereinafter set forth shall from the beginning of the date specified in such notification (hereinafter referred to as the date of vesting) ensue, namely:—

(a) all rights, title and interest of the proprietor in such area, including land (cultivable, barren or bir), forest, trees, fisheries, wells (other than private wells), tanks, ponds, water channels, ferries, path ways, village-sites, hats and bazars and mela-grounds and in all sub-soil including rights if any, in mines and minerals, whether being worked or not shall cease and be vested in the State free from all encumbrances;

(b) all grants and confirmation of title of or to land in the property so vesting of or to any right or privilege in respect of such property or land revenue in respect thereof shall, whether liable to resumption or not, determine;

(c) all rents and cesses in respect of any holding in the property so vesting for any period after the date of vesting which, but for such vesting would have been payable to the proprietor, shall vest in the State and be payable to the Government and any payment made in contravention of this clause shall not be a valid discharge of the person liable to pay the same:

Explanation— The word "Holding" shall for the purpose of this clause be deemed to include also land given, on behalf of the proprietor, to any person on rent for any purpose other than cultivation;

(d) all arrears of revenue, cesses or other dues in respect of any property so vesting and due by the proprietor for any period prior to the date of vesting shall continue to be recoverable from such proprietor and may, without prejudice to any other mode of recovery, be realised by deducting the amount from the compensation money

payable to such proprietor under Chapter V;

(e) the interest of the proprietor so acquired shall not be liable to attachment or sale in execution of any decree or other process of any Court, civil or revenue, and any attachment existing at the date of vesting or any order for attachment passed before such date shall, subject to the provisions of Section 73 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, cease to be in force.

(f) every mortgage with possession existing on the property so vesting or part thereof on the date immediately preceding the date of vesting shall, to the extent of the amount secured on such property or part thereof, be deemed without prejudice to the rights of the State under Section 3, to have been substituted by a simple mortgage.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1) the proprietor shall continue to remain in possession of his khud-kasht land, so recorded in the annual village papers before the date of vesting.

(3) Nothing contained in sub-section (1) shall operate as bar to the recovery by the outgoing proprietor of any sum which becomes due to him before the date of vesting in virtue of his proprietary rights."

8. A plain reading of these sections would show that all rights, title and interest of the proprietors in the area notified were to cease and were instead to vest in the State free from all encumbrances with effect from the date of notification and after such vesting in the State every mortgage with possession existing on the property so vested or part thereof on the date immediately preceding the date of vesting, to the extent of the amount secured on such property or part thereof, is to be deemed, without prejudice to the right of the State under Section 3 to have been substituted by a simple mortgage. The proprietor, however, notwithstanding other consequences of the vesting in a State, is entitled to continue to remain in possession of his khud-kasht land which is so recorded in the annual village papers before the date of vesting. Now it was clearly open to the plaintiffs to show that the land in question was khud-kasht and, therefore, in accordance with Section 4 they were entitled to remain in possession thereof.

9. On behalf of the appellants also our attention was invited to the decision of this Court in the case of Haji S. K. Subhan, (1962) Supp 1 SCR 123 = (AIR 1962 SC 1230) (supra) and specific reliance was placed on observations at p. 139 (of SCR) = (at p. 1237 of AIR) of the report which suggests that a person continuing in possession on the basis of entries in the village papers, which had to be presumed to be correct, was not affected by the Act. Reference was also made to the observation at page 142 (of SCR) = (at page 1238 of AIR) of the report where right to possess was upheld in favour of the party who had obtained a declaration of being an owner in possession.

10. On behalf of the respondents reliance was placed on Rana Sheo Ambar Singh v. Allahabad Bank Ltd., Allahabad, 1962-2 SCR 441 = (AIR 1961 SC 1790) but that decision does not deal with the Madhya Bharat Act which concerns us. That decision is concerned with the U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act I of 1951, the scheme of which is not shown to be similar to that of the Madhya Bharat Act so far as it concerns us in the present case. That decision is therefore, of little assistance in construing the Madhya Bharat Act. Another decision on which the respondents' learned Advocate has placed reliance is Sailendra Narayan Bhaj Deo v. Jagat Kishore Prasad Narayan Singh, 1962 Supp (2) SCR 119 = (AIR 1962 SC 914) which again deals with the Bihar Lands Reforms Act and not with the Madhya Bharat Act. The scheme of the Bihar Act being also dissimilar from that of the Madhya Bharat Act, this decision too cannot be of much help.

11. The last decision relied on by Shri Mishra is Suraj Ahir v. Prithinath Singh, AIR 1963 SC 454 which is concerned with the Bihar Lands Reforms Act XXX of 1950 as amended by Act XVI of 1959. This decision is equally unhelpful.

12. In our opinion the High Court was in error in allowing the appeal before it and in dismissing the plaintiff-appellants' suit for possession on the authority of this Court's decision in the case of Haji S. K. Subhan, (1962) Supp 1 SCR 123 = (AIR 1962

SC 1230) (supra). In the reported case the word "document" as occurring in Section 4 (1) of the M. P. Abolition of Proprietary Rights Act (M. P. Act 1 of 1951) was construed to include a decree of the Court and it was held that the principle that the executing Court cannot question the decree and has to execute it, had no operation on the facts of that case, because the objection was not based on the invalidity of the decree but on the effect of the aforesaid Act on the rights of the decreeholder proprietor to retain possession. The facts of that case were, therefore, different and so was the problem requiring solution. The precise question requiring decision by the Court in the present case was lost sight of and not properly adverted to. We are required in the present case to consider the effect of Section 4 (1) (f) of the M. B. Act XIII of 1951 on the rights of the plaintiff-appellants to redeem the mortgage and secure possession of the mortgaged land.

13. It may be pointed out that both the contesting parties — the appellants and the respondents — before us claim for themselves actual possession of the land in dispute as khud-kasht and also assert that the relevant entries in the annual village papers before the date of vesting showed them in such possession. On this basis they both claim right to retain possession even against the State. These rival controversial claims pressed by both the parties was the central question involving proper appraisal of material on the record and this basic dispute had to be first adverted to and judicially determined and thereafter the Court had to consider the applicability of the relevant provisions of the M. B. Act XIII of 1951 to the facts found. As the question of vesting of title in the State was also of vital importance it was, in our opinion, fit and proper for the Courts below to have issued notice to the State as well, thereby enabling it to be impleaded as a party, if it so desired. The approach of the High Court is erroneous and its decision highly unsatisfactory. The controlling question seems to have been missed. We, therefore, allow the appeal and remit the case back to the High Court for a fresh decision of the appeal after notice to the State and after hearing it in case it desires to be heard. It would also be open to the High Court, if it considers just and proper, to implead the State and if necessary to permit it to adduce evidence before the High Court or to remit the case to the trial Court for that purpose. In the circumstances of the case, parties would bear their own costs in this Court.

Appeal allowed; case remanded.

V. BHARGAVA AND K. S. HEGDE, JJ.

The Provident Fund Inspector, Trivandrum (in all Appeals), Appellant v. The Secretary, N.S.S. Co-operative Society, Changannacherry (in all Appeals), Respondent.

Criminal Appeals Nos. 145 to 156 of 1968, D/-17-9-1969.

(A) Employees' Provident Funds Act (1952), S. 16 (1) (b) — Act not to apply to certain infant establishments — Establishment first set up in year 1946 — Merely because Act becomes applicable to establishment from April 1961 it does not become a new establishment — Period of exemption of three years for purposes of applying Section 16 (1) (b) would run from date on which establishment had been set up and not from date on which Act became applicable to it. (1967) 2 Lab LJ 821 (Ker.), Reversed; AIR 1968 SC 1367, Foll. (Para 2)

(B) Employees' Provident Funds Act (1952), Sec. 14 — Prosecution under, for contravention of Employees' Provident Funds Scheme on basis that establishment was old one and not one set up in 1961 when Act became applicable to it — Burden of proving that old establishment had continued and that new establishment was not set up in 1961 lies on prosecution. (Para 4)

(C) Employees' Provident Funds Act (1952), Section 16 (1) (b) — Existing establishment — When can be said to become new establishment for claiming exemption under S. 16 (1) (b) — Proof.

A printing press established in 1946 was sold in 1961 and the accused in this case became the new owner. The work of the press was stopped on sale and was restarted after a break of about three months, the machinery in the press was also altered, the persons employed previously were not continued in service, while a fresh recruitment of employees took place amongst whom only six happened to be previous employees, and compensation was paid to the workmen at the time of the sale by the previous owner.

Held that the old establishment was completely closed when the transfer of ownership took place and an entirely new establishment was set up three months later, so that, the benefit of non-applicability of the Act under S. 16 (1) (b) of the Act for a period of three years was available to the accused from June or July 1961, when the new establishment was set up. Miss Lily Thomas, Advocate for Mr.
S. P. Nayar Advocate, for Appellant
(in all Appeals); Mr. A. S. Nambiar, Advocate, for Respondent (in all Appeals).

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

BHARGAVA, J.—These twelve connected appeals arose out of twelve prosecutions instituted by the appellant, Provident Fund Inspector, Tri-vandrum, against the respondent,

Secretary, N.S.S. Co-operative Society, Changanacherry, for offences punishable under the Employees' Provident Funds Act, 1952 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act") on the ground of contravention of the provisions of the Employees' Provident Funds Scheme, 1952 (hereinafter referred to as "the Scheme"). The specific charges related to the failure of the respondent (1) to pay to the Employees' Provident Fund the employees' and the employer's share of contribution together with administrative charges for the twelve quarters comprised between May 1961 and February, 1964; (2) to submit the returns in Forms 5 and 10 for the same twelve quarters; (3) to send statements of recoveries of contributions in Form 12 for the same 12 quarters; and (4) to send the initial return in Form 9 showing the particulars as on 30th April, 1961 along with Form 2 in the manner specified in the Scheme. The payment of the employer's and employees' contribution to the Provident Fund, and the question of sending the various statements arose in respect of a Press which was purchased by the N.S.S. Co-operative Society on the 21st March, 1961 from the Travancore-Cochin Central Printing and Publishing Co-operative Society Limited. According to the appellant, this establishment of the Printing Press had been set up in the year 1946 and it continued in existence even subsequently when, in March, 1961, the Press was purchased by the N.S.S. Co-operative Society. Until the purchase by the N.S.S. Co-operative Society, the establishment was employing only 9 workmen; but, after the N.S.S. Co-operative Society started working the Press, the number of workmen increased beyond 20, so that the Act became applicable to this establishment. The case was that, since the Act became applicable w.e.f.
April, 1961, it was the duty of the respondent to comply with the requirements of the Act and pay the contribution and send the various returns which the respondent failed to do. On trial, the Magistrate recorded the finding that the establishment as run by the N.S.S. Co-operative Society after 1961 could not be held to be an old establishment set up in the year 1946, had emerged as a new establishment in 1961, and, consequently, for a period of three years from April, 1961, the provisions of the Act would not apply to this establishment because of the provision contained in Section 16 (1) (b) of the Act. On this view, the Magistrate acquitted the respondent in all the cases. The respondent appealed to the High Court of Kerala. The High Court disagreed with the Magistrate and held that even though there was change of management, change of workers and change of machinery when the N.S.S. Co-operative Society purchased the Press in 1961, the business that was carried on was the same as it was at the time of purchase, so that it could not be held that a new establishment had come into existence different from the one which existed before the purchase. The High Court, however, took the view in law that, under Section 16 (1) (b) of the Act, an establishment is given exemption for a period of 3 years from the date on which it came within the purview of the Act, treating the establishment as an infant establishment standing in need of protection. The High Court, therefore, held that this establishment was protected from the applicability of the Act for a period of 3 years from 21st March, 1961 which would cover the period in respect of which prosecutions were launched by the appellant. On this ground, the High Court upheld the orders of acquittal passed by the Magistrate. The appellant has now come up in these appeals against this decision of the High Court by special leave granted by this Court.

2. It is quite clear that, on the question of law decided by the High Court in favour of the respondent, that decision cannot be upheld in view of the decision of this Court in R. Ramakrishna Rao v. State of Kerala, (1968) 2 SCR 819 = (AIR 1968 SC 1367), where it was held that, under Sec. 16 (1) (b), in the case of a new establishment, the period of five years (laid down by subsequent amendment) is counted forward from the date the establishment is set up, but, in the case of an existing establishment, from the date the establishment "has been" set up. In the present case, since the establishment was first set up in the year 1946, the period of exemption for purposes of applying Sec. 16 (1) (b) of the Act would run from the date on which the establishment had been set up and could not be counted from April, 1961 when the Act became applicable to this establishment. In view of that decision of this Court, the acquittal of the respondent on the ground given by the High Court cannot be maintained.

3. However, on behalf of the respondent, it was argued that, on the evidence in this case, the High Court was not justified in recording the finding that this establishment as set up in the year 1946 continued to exist as it was before, even after the purchase by the N.S.S. Co-operative Society in 1961. It was urged that, on facts, the correct finding that should have been recorded was that the old establishment ceased to exist and an entirely new one was set up in the year 1961. In support of this plea, we were taken by learned counsel for the parties through the evidence which was tendered during the trial before the Magistrate and, after going through it, we are inclined to accept the submission made on behalf of the respondent.

4. The burden of proving that the old establishment had continued and that a new establishment was not set up in the 1961 was on the appellant, as the appellant had filed criminal cases for prosecution of the respondent. The first prosecution witness was the Provident Fund Inspector, Raghunathan, but most of his evidence relates to facts discovered by him and not in his personal knowledge. It is he who made a report for the prosecution of the respondent and in that report itself he admitted that the strength of the establishment was less than 20 till 16th April, 1961 when it was purchased by the N.S.S. Co-operative Society. He added that there were only 9 employees at the date of purchase. Of these 9 employees, 6 were re-employed by the purchasers. Significance attaches to the word "re-employed" which implies that there was no continuity of employment even of those 6 employees. That witness also admitted that, after the purchase, the Press was removed from its original place and additional machineries were purchased and added to the Press. According to him, he also received information that compensation due to the workers till the date of sale was disbursed by the previous owner, T. C. Central Co-operative Printers and Publishers. He added that the persons working in the Press at the time of his evidence were all persons who had been appointed by the N.S.S. Co-operative Society. This, his evidence does not prove that the establishment run by the N.S.S. Co-operative Society was the same as the establishment which was being run by the previous owner of the Press. The owner changed, the machinery changed, the location of the Press was altered, and even the employees were not the same as before. In fact, none of the employees, according to his evidence, was continued in service. The only witness on whom reliance could be placed on behalf of the appellant to prove continuity of the business was P. W. 2, Sadasivan Nair, who claimed to be one of the employees in this Press of the previous employer and who stated that he continued to be employed by the N.S.S. Co-operative Society. His evidence has rightly been criticised on the ground that he is a disgruntled person who lost his service some years later when the press was being run by the N.S.S. Co-operative Society. Further he stated on oath that the Press was taken over with all its workers which is clearly a wrong statement and is contradicted by P. W. 1, the Provident Fund Inspector himself. It is also significant that, according to the Provident Fund Inspector, compensation was paid to the previous employees by the previous employer which clearly shows that the previous employees were not continued in service, and that they were paid compensation for termination of their services on transfer of the Press presumably in accordance with the provisions of Section 25FF of the Industrial Disputes Act. The prosecution could have easily produced the accounts of the previous owner to show that there were at least some employees who were continued in service and who were not paid compensation, but no such attempt was made on behalf of the appellant. Even the sale-deed in favour of the N. S. S. Co-operative Society has not been put in the paper-book before us and its absence is significant in view of the statement made by D. W. 1, one of the Directors of the N. S. S. Co-operative Society, who stated that the N. S. S. Co-operative Society neither purchased the establishment as a going concern, nor did it continue to run the same establishment. According to D. W. 1, after the purchase of the Press, there was a closure for a period of about 3 months and a new business was started in June or July, 1961 when a new establishment was set up. The workmen employed by the previous owner were not taken over on their old conditions of service. Fresh appointments were made and all workers were newly recruited, though, at the time of this recruitment, some of the old employees were also taken in service. This evidence would clearly show that a new establishment was set up by the N. S. S. Co-operative Society after the purchase of the press by it from the previous owner and that there was no continuity of the old establishment. As we have said earlier, the appellant could have summoned the accounts of the previous owner to show that these facts alleged by D. W. 1 are not correct. Even the N. S. S. Co-operative Society is maintaining accounts and registers and no attempt was made on behalf of the prosecution to seize or summon those registers. It is true that the respondent himself, on his own initiative, did not produce those registers in defence but, in a criminal case, such a circumstance cannot justify raising a presumption that the registers would have contradicted the evidence of D. W. 1. D. W. 1 also stated that there was a specific provision in the sale-deed that none of the workers, who were working in the press purchased, were to be taken in service and nobody was, in fact, taken. This statement could easily have been challenged before us if the sale-deed had been included in the Paper-book. In the absence of the sale-deed which has not been brought to our notice, we see no reason to disbelieve the statement of D. W. 1 and we consider that his evidence is decidedly preferable to that of P. W. 2 whose evidence we have mentioned above.

5. The only other prosecution witness who need be mentioned is P. W. 3 who was also employed by the N.S.S. Co-operative Society in this Press after the purchase. He was, however, not an employee in this press before its purchase by N.S.S. Co-operative Society. He was employed in another press which was also purchased by this Co-operative Society, so that his evidence about continuity of his service cannot indicate that this particular establishment was a continuation of the old establishment set up by the previous owner. On a discussion of the entire evidence and in view of the fact that the burden of proof lay on the appellant, we think that the conclusions of fact which must be accepted are: that, at the time of the purchase, a new owner came in place of the previous owner; the work of the Press was stopped on sale and was re-started after a break of about three months; the machinery in the Press was also altered; the persons employed previously were not continued in service, while a fresh recruitment of employees took place, amongst whom only six happened to be previous employees; and compensation was paid to the workmen at the time of the sale by the previous owner. On these facts, no other conclusion can be drawn, except that the old establishment was completely closed when the transfer of ownership took place and an entirely new establishment was set up three months later, so that, in this case, the benefit of non-applicability of the Act under Sec. 16 (1) (b) of the Act for a period of three years was available to the respondent from June or July, 1961 when the new establishment was set up.

6. In this connection, learned counsel appearing for the appellant drew our attention to a few decisions, including one of this Court, to urge that we should not hold that this establishment was newly set up in the year 1961. The first of these decisions is Lakshmi Rattan Engineering Works v. Regional Provident Fund Commr., Punjab, (1966) 1 Lab LJ 741 (SC), in which this Court held that a change in location of an establishment or a change in the line of business would not have the effect that a new establishment has been set up provided there was continuity of working. That case cannot apply to the facts as found by us in the present case where there was no continuity of the business and there were the additional factors of termination of services of all the workmen and new establishment being set up by fresh recruitment of workmen, in addition to alteration in machinery in the Press. The decisions in Jamnadas Agarwalla v. Regional Provident Fund Commr., West Bengal, AIR 1963 Cal 513 and Bharat Board Mills Ltd. v. Regional Provident Fund

Commr., AIR 1957 Cal 702, are also inapplicable to the facts before us in the present case. A good deal of reliance was placed on a decision of a learned single Judge of the Madras High Court in Devi Press v. Regional Provident Fund Commr., Madras, AIR 1965 Mad 462; but even in that case the facts were different. One of the prominent facts before the Judge was that the particular business transferred was being run under licences and those licences were also transferred by the seller to the purchaser. In view of this transfer, the learned Judge held that it was a case of sale of a going concern and there was continuity of business. Without expressing any opinion as to whether the learned Judge was correct in holding that there was continuity of business in that case, the very fact that he held the establishment not to have been newly set up on the ground that it was a case of a transfer of a going concern distinguishes that case from the case before us. In the present case, the facts established show that the old business was closed and was re-started as a new business after recruiting new workmen. The principle to be applied in arriving at a decision in such a case appears to us to have been rightly explained in a decision of a learned single Judge of the Madras High Court in Vittaladas Jaganathadas v. Regional Provident Fund Commr., 1966-1 Lab LJ 240 = (AIR 1965 Mad 508). The learned Judge held:—

"If, in a particular case, it appears that the new establishment is not genuinely such, but is only an old one formally resuscitated in order to avoid the legal obligation, it is always open to the Court to hold that it is the old establishment which is substantially continuing, and that the liability to contribute must be affixed to the apparently new form also. But where, in reality, the old establishment has come to an end, and there is a new establishment, this establishment is entitled to infancy protection in its own right, even if it happens by coincidence to have employed a large part of the personnel of the previous establishment."

This principle, applied to the facts of the present case, can only lead to the conclusion that the N.S.S. Co-operative Society had set up a new establishment and the provisions of Section 16 (1) (b) of the Act have to be applied on the basis that the new establishment was set up in June or July 1961, so that there was no liability to pay Provident Fund contributions or to file the various returns during the period to which the prosecutions related. The acquittal of the respondent was, therefore, fully justified. The appeals are dismissed.

Appeals dismissed.

J. C. SHAH, V. RAMASWAMI AND
A. N. GROVER, JJ.

The State of U. P., Appellant v. Ramkrishan Burman (dead) by his legal representatives and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 444 of 1966, D/- 26-9-1969.

Court-fees and Suits Valuations — Court-fees Act (1870), Section 7 (iv-A) (U. P.) — "Decree for money and other property" — Expression does not include decree concerning money or other property.

A decree for declaration of title to money or other property is not "a decree for money or other property." The expression in Sec. 7 (iv-A) (U. P.) means only a decree for recovery of money or other property. It does not include a decree concerning title to money or other property. (Para 5)

A decree in invitum is not an instrument securing money or other property: such a decree is a record of the formal adjudication of the Court relating to a right claimed by a party to a suit. It does not by its own force secure money or property.

A suit for a mere declaration that the plaintiff is a owner of certain properties does not fall under S. 7 (iv-A) (U. P.) AIR 1965 All 10, Affirmed.

DN/DN/E880/69/RGD/P

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHAH, J.—One Radhey Lal instituted Suit No. 4 of 1950 in the Court of the Civil Judge, Jaunpur, for a declaration that he was the "owner in possession" of the estate left by Dhan Devi. To that suit Ram Krishan Burman was impleaded as a party-defendant. This suit was decreed ex parte. Ram Krishan then filed Suit No. 14 of 1956 in the Court of the Civil Judge, Jaunpur, against the heirs of Radhey Lal (who had died since the passing of the decree in Suit No. 4 of 1950), claiming that he was "appointed an heir by Dhan Devi" of properties described in lists B, J & D in the plaint, that the dispute concerning the inheritance to the estate left by Dhan Devi was settled between him and Radhey Lal, that Radhey Lal admitted his title to the properties in Lists B, J & D and it was agreed that in the properties in Lists A, B, J & D Radhey Lal had 11/16th share and that he had 5/16th share, that a memorandum was drawn up in that behalf, and that Radhey Lal represented to him that a compromise decree will be obtained in that suit, but thereafter taking advantage of his ignorance Radhey Lal obtained a decree ex parte. The following substantive reliefs were claimed by the plaintiff.

"(a) that a declaratory decree in favour of the plaintiff and against the defendants declaring the plaintiff as the owner of the properties in Lists A, B, J & D be passed;

(b) in case in the opinion of the Court prayer (a) cannot be granted, then, alternatively, declaration declaring the plaintiff as the owner of properties in B J & D being the stridhana of Rani Dhan Dei Kaur be issued, decree in Suit No. 4 of 1950 has no adverse effect on the rights of the plaintiff;"

The plaintiff valued the properties in dispute at Rs. 5,99,503/6/3, but on the footing that he had claimed a mere declaration paid Rs. 18/12/- as court-fees as in a claim under Sch. II Cl. 17 (iii) of the Court-Fees Act.

2. The Inspector of Stamps reported to the Civil Judge that in his view the case fell within Sec. 7 (iv-A) as incorporated by the U. P. State Legislature, and court-fee was chargeable according to the value of the subject-matter, and the plaintiff was liable to pay Rs. 3,522/8/- as court-fee on the plaint. The Civil Judge ordered the plaintiff to amend the plaint and to pay the court-fee remaining due.

3. The plaintiff appealed against the order of the Civil Judge to the High Court of Allahabad. The High Court held that the court-fee paid by the plaintiff was proper and set aside the order holding that the case did not fall within S. 7 (iv-A) of the Court-Fees Act. The State of U. P. has appealed to this Court with special leave.

4. Section 7 (iv-A) of the Court-Fees Act as enacted by the U. P. State Legislature insofar as it is relevant, reads:

"In suits for or involving cancellation of or adjudging void or voidable a decree for money or other property having a market value, or an instrument securing money or other property having such value.

(1) where the plaintiff or his predecessor-in-title, was a party to the decree or the instrument, according to the value of the subject-matter, and

x x x x x"

There is no dispute that the plaintiff claimed a declaration adjudging void the decree in Suit No. 4 of 1950 declaring Radhey Lal to be the "owner in possession of the estate of Dhan Devi". The plaintiff by his plaint had claimed two declarations in the alternative, and prima facie, the plaint was of the description in Sch. II, Cl. 17 (iii) of the Court-Fees Act. But counsel for the State of U. P. contends that the reliefs claimed fell within Sec. 7 (iv-A) of the Court-Fees Act. Counsel says that the expression "decrees for money or other property" does not mean a decree awarding money or other property, but a decree concerning or relating to money or other property, and he says that where the Court declares the plaintiff's title to money or property simpliciter, the decree is one for money or for other property. We are unable to agree with that contention. The expression "for" occurs twice in the opening part of the clause. Evidently the expression "for" when it occurs for the first time means "for obtaining a decree ordering (payment or recovery of)". The expression "for" also occurs in several other clauses of the Court-Fees Act. In Sec. 7 of the Court-Fees Act as amended by the U. P. Legislature which deals with computation of court-fee payable in certain classes of suits, following clauses occur:

"(i) In suit for money * * *
(ii) (a) In suits for maintenance and annuities or other sums payable periodically:—

(b) In suits for reduction or enhancement of maintenance and annuities or other sums payable periodically—

(iii) In suits for moveable property other money, where the subject-matter has a market value—

(iv) In suits:—

(b) for accounts.

(iv) B. In suits—

(a) for a right to some * * * to arise out of land.

(iv) C. In suits—

(a) for the restriction of conjugal rights,

(b) for establishing or annulling or dissolving a marriage,

(c) for establishing a right to the custody or guardianship of any person.

(v) A. In suits for possession * *

(v) B. In suits for possession between rival tenants—

(vi) A. In suits for partition.

(vii) In suits for the interest of an assignee of land-revenue.

(x) In suits for specific performance—

(xi) In the following suits between landlord and tenant—

(a) for the delivery by a tenant of the counter-part of a lease,

(c) for the delivery by a landlord of a lease,

(cc) for the recovery of immoveable property from a tenant,*

(f) for abatement of rent,

(g) for commutation of rent,

In all these clauses the expression "for" is used as meaning "for obtaining a decree ordering (payment or recovery of)". If the expression "for" occurring for the first time in Section 7 (iv-A) means in the context in which it occurs obtaining a decree for cancellation of or adjudging void or voidable a decree, it would be difficult to hold that the expression "decree for money or other property" has a wider connotation and means a decree which concerns or relates to money or other property.

5. A decree for declaration of title to money or other property is not a decree for money or other property. In our judgment the expression "decree for money or other property" means only a decree for recovery of money or other property. It does not include a decree concerning title to money or other property.

6. It was urged that in any event the plaintiff had sued for adjudging void or voidable an "instrument" securing money or other property having market value. But a decree in invitum is not an instrument securing money or other property: such a decree is a record of the formal adjudication of the Court relating to a right claimed by a party to a suit. It does not by its own force secure money or property. A consent decree in certain cases may be regarded as an instrument securing money or other property, where the decree proceeds upon a contract which had that effect, but that is only because a consent decree is a record of the contract between the parties to which is super added the seal of the Court. In our view the High Court was right in holding that the court-fee paid on the plaint was proper. It may be pointed out that the plaintiff had claimed nothing more than a declaration with regard to certain properties.

7. We are also unable to accept the contention of counsel for the State that the relief for declaration was a mere device or subterfuge intended to conceal the true purport of the claim. It is evident that the District Magistrate, Jaunpur was in possession of the property in dispute and if the Civil Court declared the title of the plaintiff, he would be entitled to secure recognition of his rights.

8. Before parting with the case we must observe that we have felt greatly perturbed by the course which this litigation has taken. The suit was filed in 1956. And after 13 years only the question of court-fee payable on the plaint is decided. In the meanwhile the original plaintiff died. The delay is largely attributable to the rigid attitude of the State which has by insisting upon a comparatively small claim, held up the proceedings for all these long years by raising contention which had no merit. We trust the Court of First Instance will take up this suit for hearing with the least practicable delay and dispose of the suit according to law. The State to pay in this appeal the costs of the heirs of the original plaintiff.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (1 of 1913)
as amended by Act (10 of 1960), Section 31 — Section is retrospective — Appellate Court must give effect to amendment — Pre-emption decree by trial Court—Appeal — Appellants deprived of their right in 1960 by amendment — Appellate Court cannot pass decree in favour of appellant — Decree passed — Appellant appealing to Supreme Court for enhancement of pre-emption amount in favour of respondent — Appeal cannot be allowed — Section 28 of the Act and Order 20, Rule 14 of Civil P. C. cannot be ignored.

Section 31 as amended by Act 10 of 1960 is plain and comprehensive enough to require an appellate Court to give effect to the substantive provisions of the Amending Act whether the appeal before it is one against a decree granting pre-emption or one refusing that relief. It is not open to the Supreme Court to pass a decree of pre-emption in favour of the appellants who were deprived in 1960 of their right to secure such a decree in the suit. Indeed it was not open even to the High Court to pass a decree of pre-emption in favour of the appellants on January 6, 1967. The argument that the appellants had already secured decree in their favour by the trial Court, which decree has become final, and that they have fully complied with its terms and further that in the appeal, they are merely seeking modification of the decree of the High Court in favour of respondents by getting the amount of pre-emption money enhanced without claiming any right of pre-emption in their own favour, is unsustainable. This argument ignores that the scheme of Section 28 of the Act read with Order 20, Rule 14, Civil P. C. does not postulate decrees of pre-emption in favour of rival pre-emptors on payment of different amounts of purchase money in respect of the same sale. AIR 1963 SC 553, Rel. on. (Para 7)

M/s. Brij Bans Kishore, Mahabir Prasad Jain and J. P. Gupta, Advocates, for Appellants; M/s. V. C. Mahajan and M. S. Gupta, Advocates, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

DUA, J.:— This appeal on certificate has been preferred by one set of pre-emptors (plaintiffs in suit No. 556 of 1958) against the judgment and decree of the High Court of Punjab and Haryana allowing the rival plaintiffs-pre-emptors' appeal by reducing the pre-emption money and passing a decree of pre-emption on payment of Rs. 1,05,800 instead of Rs. 1,35,000 as directed by the trial Court.

2. On behalf of the rival pre-emptors (plaintiffs in suit No. 559 of 1958) who are arrayed as respondents 1 to 3 in this Court, a preliminary objection was taken to the competency of the present appeal. The appellants' right to appeal was challenged on the ground that the amendment of the Punjab Pre-emption Act (hereinafter called the Act) by the Punjab Act X of 1960 had deprived them of their right of pre-emption with retrospective effect. The appellants had based their right of pre-emption in their suit on the ground of their being proprietors of the village. They were deprived of this right by the Amending Act of 1960 and Section 31 of the Act as amended made the amendment retrospective in its operation by prohibiting the Courts from passing decrees inconsistent with the Amended Act. The right of respondents 1 to 3 who had sued as sons of the vendors remained undisturbed by the amendment. It was on this basis that the preliminary objection was pressed before us.

3. The facts relevant for the present appeal may now briefly be stated. The land in suit was sold by a registered sale deed on June 18, 1957 by Kashi, Marchand and Bhagoo (respondents 4 to 6 in this Court) to respondents 7 to 18 for an ostensible consideration of Rs. 1,35,000. The appellants and respondents 1 to 3 instituted two separate suits for pre-emption in respect of this sale. In both the suits the sale price as inserted in the sale deed was questioned. The two suits were consolidated and the plaintiffs in each suit were joined as defendants in the other suit as contemplated by Section 28 of the Act. It appears that on April 28, 1958, a statement was made on behalf of the vendees admitting the right of the pre-emptors in both the suits and conceding that a decree be passed in favour of respondents 1 to 3 in the first instance and on their failure to pay the amount, the appellants be held entitled to a decree on payment of Rs. 1,35,000. Apparently all other objections raised by the vendees to the right of the pre-emptors were dropped. Counsel for the appellants also made a statement expressing his willingness to pay a sum of Rs. 1,35,000. Counsel for the respondents 1 to 3 however did not accept the amount of consideration as entered in the sale deed and wanted the issue in regard to the pre-emption money to be decided on the merits. The trial Court by its judgment and decree dated June 30, 1958 granted to the plaintiffs in both the suits a decree in the following terms:

"It is ordered that a decree is granted to the plaintiffs for possession of land in suit by pre-emption on payment of Rs. 1,35,000 on the condition that the plaintiffs deposit this amount in the Court for payment to the vendees-defendants within one month on or before 30th July, 1958, otherwise this suit shall stand dismissed. In case of default by the plaintiffs Godhu etc. Moola and other rival pre-emptors, who are plaintiffs in suit No. 556 of 1958 shall be entitled to deposit the above amount as pre-emption money on or before 30th October, 1958, and get the possession of the land in suit." This decree was apparently framed in the light of the provisions of Section 28 of the Act and Order 20, Rule 14, Civil P. C. Section 28 which provides for concurrent hearing of two or more suits for pre-empting the same sale lays down that each decree shall state the order in which each claimant is entitled to exercise his right of pre-emption. Order 20, Rule 14 (1) (a) lays down that the decree in a pre-emption suit shall, when purchase money has not been paid in the Court, specify a day on or before which the same shall be paid and Order 20, Rule 14 (2) (b) provides inter alia that in so far as the claims decreed are different in degree, the claim of the inferior pre-emptor shall not take effect unless and until the superior pre-emptor has failed to comply with the provisions of sub-rule I.

4. Respondents 1 to 3, feeling dissatisfied with the decision on the amount of deposit to be made, preferred an appeal to the Punjab High Court. On January 6, 1967 the High Court allowed the appeal and reduced the amount of deposit to Rs. 1,05,800. While framing the decree the High Court allowed the plaintiffs — pre-emptors a period of three months from January 6, 1967, for depositing in Court the amount of Rs. 1,05,800 failing which their suit was directed to stand dismissed. Nothing was stated in the decree as regards the claim of the appellants. Attention of the High Court apparently does not seem to have been drawn to the provisions either of Section 28 of the Act or of Order 20, Rule 14, Civil P. C. or of para 3 of Chapter I-M (c) at page 58 of Volume I of the Punjab High Court Rules and Orders. Para 3 aforesaid emphasises the importance of specifying a definite date for the deposit of money in Court.

5. It may at this stage appropriately be observed that the omission to state in the decree the order in which the two rival claimants were entitled to exercise their right of pre-emption might have been due either to the fact that the appellants (who were impleaded as respondents in the High Court) in view of Section 31 as interpreted in Ram Swarup v. Munshi, (1963) 3 SCR 858 = (AIR 1963 SC 553) did not press their claim, and did not ask for the inclusion of a direction regarding their right in the High Court decree, or to the fact that they may have felt that having expressed their willingness in the trial Court to deposit Rs. 1,35,000 it was no longer open to them to question this valuation. It is also not unlikely that in view of the decision in Ram Swarup's case (supra) the High Court thought that the only right of pre-emption subsisting on January 6, 1967 was that of respondents 1 to 3 and that there was, therefore, no occasion for making any consequential order in favour of the appellants under Order 41, Rule 33, Civil P. C. The judgment of the High Court does not contain any discussion on the point as to why no reference was made to the appellant's claims. It would certainly have been more helpful if the High Court had stated something in its judgment on this aspect. In the circumstances of this case, however, we need say nothing more on this point.

6. It is against the decree of the High Court reducing the amount of deposit to be made by respondents 1 to 3 that the appellants — pre-emptors have come to this Court on appeal and their right to appeal is challenged on the ground that the existing law of pre-emption has retrospectively deprived them of their right to pre-empt by prohibiting the Courts from passing a decree for pre-emption inconsistent with the Act as amended. The challenge seems to be well founded.

7. This Court had in Ram Swarup's case (1963) 3 SCR 858 = (AIR 1963 SC 553) (supra) occasion to construe the effect of Section 31 of the Act. According to that decision, Section 31 is plain and comprehensive enough to require an appellate Court to give effect to the substantive provisions of the Amending Act whether the appeal before it is one against a decree granting pre-emption or one refusing that relief. Following the ratio of this decision it must be held that it is not open to this Court to pass a decree of pre-emption in favour of the appellants who were deprived in 1960 of their right to secure such a decree in the present suit. Indeed it was not open even to the High Court to pass a decree of pre-emption in favour of the appellants on January 6, 1967 and the decree of that Court is unexceptionable in this respect. The argument that the appellants had already secured a decree in their favour by the trial Court, which decree has become final, and that they have fully complied with its terms and further that in the present appeal, they are merely seeking modification of the decree of the High Court in favour of respondents 1 to 3 by getting the amount of pre-emption money enhanced to Rs. 1,35,000, without claiming any right of pre-emption in their own favour is unsustainable. This argument ignores that the scheme of Section 28 of the Act read with Order 20, Rule 14, Civil P. C. does not postulate decrees of pre-emption in favour of rival pre-emptors on payment of different amounts of purchase money in respect of the same sale. Such a course may lead to conflicting decisions on the question of value of the property sought to be pre-empted for the purposes of pre-emption suit. Besides, the appellants' right to pre-empt the sale under the unamended law was admittedly inferior to that of respondents 1 to 3 and the appellants could only be held entitled to exercise their right after the failure of the said respondents to comply with the terms of the decree in their favour. The right of respondents 1 to 3 was determined by the High Court and it was claimed on their behalf at the Bar of this Court that they had already deposited the pre-emption money as required by the High Court decree. Indeed this assertion was not disputed on behalf of the appellants. We are accordingly unable to hold that the appellants have successfully executed the decree of pre-emption in their favour.

8. The appellants further developed their argument by submitting that the decree passed by the trial Court in their favour was never appealed against and that the same has become final and binding on all parties. The only appeal preferred by respondents 1 to 3, according to this submission was from the decree in their own suit, with the result that the decree in favour of the appellants passed by the trial Court in their suit has by now become conclusive and unassailable. We cannot accept this submission. There is nothing on the record to show that the appeal presented in the High Court by respondents 1 to 3 was directed against the decree passed in their suit. Apparently, the appeal was filed against the decree passed in the consolidated suits dealing with the rights of both the rival pre-emptors, and all the parties interested in the right of pre-emption were impleaded in the appeal. Besides, this contention seems to us to be only another way of putting the same argument, namely, that there can be two or more different determinations of the amount of pre-emption money in the two consolidated suits for pre-empting the sale in question. It also postulates a claim by an inferior pre-emptor to pre-empt the sale by making the deposit of the pre-emption money before the superior pre-emptor has failed to comply with the terms of the decree in his favour. This argument, as the foregoing discussion shows, is without merit. In the present case, a further question arises as to whether or not it was open to the appellants to ask the High Court not to vary the determination of pre-emption money in the appeal preferred by respondents 1 to 3 without formally preferring a separate appeal from the other decree considered to have been passed in the other suit because passing of such an inconsistent decree on appeal on the question of valuation would not be permissible in law. No argument on these lines was addressed in the High Court. The effect of this omission has not been canvassed in this Court either. We would, therefore, express no opinion on this aspect. The final decree relating to the rival claims of pre-emption in respect of the sale in question, however, seems to be that of the High Court which may well be considered to be binding on all the parties to it. And then, if the appellants' claim that the decree passed in their favour by the trial Court in their suit has already become final and their right is unaffected by the decree of the High Court, then they cannot be considered to be aggrieved by the impugned decree and, therefore, they cannot claim any locus standi to appeal against it.

9. From whichever point of view one looks at the position, the appellants cannot claim a right of appeal from the decree of the High Court determining the pre-emption money to be Rs. 1,05,800/-. The right to appeal against that decree can only be exercised by a person whose claim of pre-emption in respect of the sale in question can be considered to have been adversely affected by it. The appellants on their own argument possess no such right.

10. The preliminary objection, therefore, succeeds and allowing the same we dismiss the appeal with costs. Respondents 1 to 3 claim to have deposited the amount within the time specified by the High Court and as the appellants do not as indeed cannot claim a decree in their favour from this Court, it becomes unnecessary for us to specify any date for the payment of such deposit.

Civil Appeal No. 1115 of 1966, D/- 15-9-1969.

(A) Redemption of Mortgages (Punjab) Act (2 of 1913), S. 9 — Petition for redemption dismissed because it raised complicated questions of law and mortgagor relegated to Civil Suit—Order does not fall under Sec. 9 — Limitation under Article 14 Limitation Act does not apply.

Where the Assistant Collector did not pass the order under the Act dismissing the petition under the Act for redemption of the mortgage for any reason recorded by him but merely ordered that the case raised complicated questions of fact and law which could not be tried in a summary proceeding such an order does not fall within the terms of Sec. 9 of Act 2 of 1913. Even if by the order the petition was dismissed, not the form of the order, but its substance will determine the application of the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 14 of the Limitation Act. An order relegating the mortgagor to a civil suit for obtaining an order of redemption even if it becomes final does not bar a suit for redemption, for it raises no cloud on the title of the mortgagor arising out of the mortgage. Such an order is not one which is required to be set aside. An order required to be set aside is one which the officer making it has jurisdiction to make it and has the effect of barring the claim for relief unless it is set aside. The order of the Assistant Collector merely declared the rights of the plaintiff under the common law; it did not bar the claim to relief for redemption in civil suit, and on that account it was not an order which was required to be set aside. The following judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHAH, J.—Ram Sarup was the owner of a piece of land measuring 30 bighas 12 biswas. By a deed dated August 16, 1935, Ram Sarup mortgaged without possession a part of the land measuring approximately 26 bighas with one Meda. Ram Sarup on November 27, 1941, mortgaged with possession the entire area of the land to Ananda. Ram Sarup then sold his rights in 27 bighas and 1 biswas of the land on May 14, 1943 to Buru and others—who may be collectively called 'the plaintiffs'—for Rs. 6,000/-. The plaintiffs then applied on May 23, 1951, under Sec. 4 of the Redemption of Mortgages (Punjab) Act 2 of 1913 for redeeming the mortgage in favour of Meda. This application was rejected on June 29, 1951. Thereafter the plaintiffs instituted on August 20, 1960, a suit in the civil court for redemption of the mortgage. The suit was resisted, inter alia, on the ground that the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 14 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, had expired. It was submitted that the plaintiffs had moved an application for redemption of mortgage under Sec. 4 of the Redemption of Mortgages (Punjab) Act 2 of 1913 but the same was dismissed on June 29, 1951, by the Assistant Collector and since no suit was filed within one year from that date, the suit for redemption of the first mortgage in favour of Meda was barred. The Trial Court dismissed the suit for redemption of the mortgage in favour of Meda, and granted a decree for redemption of the second mortgage dated November 27, 1941. The plaintiffs appealed to the District Court, Gurgaon. The District Court allowed the appeal and ordered redemption of the land including the mortgage in favour of Meda. The decree passed by the District Court was confirmed in second appeal by the High Court of Punjab. With special leave, this appeal has been preferred by sons of Meda.

2. The record of the proceedings before the Assistant Collector was, it was reported, destroyed before the suit was filed, and an extract from the register of redemption applications could be tendered in evidence. The last column of the extract contained the entry: "The application is rejected and should be consigned to the record room." An endorsement on the docket maintained by the Advocate who appeared in the case before the Assistant Collector showed an endorsement dated June 29, 1951: "Application rejected. The petitioner has today been ordered to file a civil suit." The Trial Court and the District Court held that the petition for redemption was not tried by the Assistant Collector; he rejected the petition holding that the application raised complicated questions of fact and law, and on that account was not triable in exercise of the summary jurisdiction prescribed under Act 2 of 1913. With this view the High Court agreed.

3. Counsel for the appellants contends that the order of the Assistant Collector rejecting the petition under Sec. 4 of the Punjab Act 2 of 1913 became final by virtue of Sec. 12 of the Act and the mortgagor could not sue to redeem the mortgage in favour of Meda after the expiry of one year from the date of the order.

4. The relevant provisions of the Redemption of Mortgages (Punjab) Act 2 of 1913 may first be noticed.

5. By Sec. 4 it is provided:

"The mortgagor or other person entitled to institute a suit for redemption may, at any time after the principal money becomes payable and before a suit for redemption is barred, present a petition to the Collector applying for an order directing that his mortgage be redeemed, and where the mortgage is with possession that he be put in possession of the mortgage property."
* * *

Sections 5, 6 and 7 deal with the procedure to be followed in the trial of applications under the Act.

Section 8 provides:

"where both parties appear when the petition is called on for hearing, the Collector shall enquire from the mortgagee whether he admits that the petitioner is entitled to redeem, whether he is willing to accept the sum in deposit in full discharge of the mortgage debt, and where the mortgage is with possession whether he is willing to surrender possession of the mortgaged property.

If the mortgagee replies in the affirmative, the Collector shall make an order as laid down in Section 6 (a), (b), (c) and (d) of this Act.

Section 9 on which reliance is primarily placed provides:

"If the mortgagee raises objection on any ground other than the amount of the deposit, or if the petitioner is not willing to pay the sum demanded by the mortgagee, the Collector may either (a) for reasons to be recorded dismiss the petition, or (b) make a summary enquiry regarding the objection raised by the mortgagee or regarding the sum due."

Section 10 provides for enquiry into objections raised by the mortgagee and Sec. 11 provides for enquiry regarding the sum due under the mortgage and further provides for making deposit by the mortgagor within the period to be fixed by the Collector. Section 12 provides by the first paragraph:

"Any party aggrieved by an order made under Sections 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 or 11 of this Act may institute a suit to establish his rights in respect of the mortgage; but, subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive."

Article 14 Schedule I of the Limitation Act, 1908, provides that a suit to set aside any act or order of an officer of Government in his official capacity, not herein otherwise expressly provided for, shall be filed within one year of the date of the act or order.

6. We are unable to agree with the appellant's contention that since no suit was filed within one year of the date on which the application of the plaintiffs was rejected by the Assistant Collector, the order dismissing the application was conclusive, and the suit for redemption by the plaintiffs was not maintainable. Section 9 (1) (a) of the Act authorises the Collector to dismiss the petition for reasons to be recorded, where the mortgagee raises objection on a ground other than the amount of deposit or if the mortgagor is not willing to pay the sum demanded by the mortgagee. There is no evidence that the mortgagor declined to pay the sum demanded by the mortgagee. Again the Assistant Collector did not pass an order dismissing the petition for any reasons recorded by him. He merely ordered that the case raised complicated questions of fact and law which could not be tried in a summary proceeding. Such an order, in our judgment, does not fall within the terms of Sec. 9 of Act 2 of 1913. Even if by the order the petition was dismissed, not the form of the order, but its substance will determine the application of the period of limitation prescribed by Article 14 of the Limitation Act. An order relegating the mortgagor to a civil suit for obtaining an order of redemption even if it becomes final does not bar a suit for redemption, for it raises no cloud on the title of the mortgagor arising out of the mortgage. Such an order is not one which is required to be set aside. An order required to be set aside is one which the officer making it has jurisdiction to make it and has the effect of barring the claim for relief unless it is set aside. The order of the Assistant Collector merely declared the rights of the plaintiff under the common law; it did not bar the claim to relief for redemption in a civil suit, and on that account it was not an order which was required to be set aside.

7. In Tulsi Das v. Dila Ram, ILR (1944) Lah 1 = (AIR 1943 Lah 176) (FB), Tek Chand, J., delivering the principal judgment of the Court dealt with the question which falls to be determined in this case. The learned Judge observed:

".....the suit referred to in Sec. 12 is to establish the "erroneous nature of the order". Now what is the error committed by the Collector in his order which the mortgagor must seek to have set right by a declaratory suit? No civil court can grant a declaration that the Collector's view that the matter was too difficult for summary redemption was wrong and compel him to proceed with the summary enquiry. The order of the Collector does not affect the rights of the parties in any way; it is conclusive to this extent only that the petition for summary redemption has been dismissed and no other petition under the Act would lie. No suit under Section 12 being necessary or competent, there was no bar to the mortgagor suing for redemption in the civil courts within the period allowed by law in ordinary course."

The same view was expressed in a judgment of the Punjab High Court Dewan Chand v. Raghubir Singh, ILR (1966) 1 Punj 193 = (AIR 1965 Punj 502). The Court, in that case pointed out, in our judgment rightly, that Art. 14 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act does not apply to a suit which does not seek to set aside the order of an officer of the Government. When the Collector decides nothing against the mortgagor and directs that the matter be settled in a civil court, the Collector's decision does not stand in the way of the suit for redemption.

8. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

71 ITR 806, Third Income-tax

Officer, Mangalore v. Damodar

Bhat

GROVER, J.—The respondent company which is an assessee was required by the Income-tax Officer by notices issued under Sec. 18-A (1) of the Indian Income-tax Act 1922, hereinafter called the "Old Act" to make an advance payment of tax amounting to Rs. 3,17,077 for the assessment year 1960-61 and Rs. 3,54,911 for the assessment year 1961-62. The assessee chose to file its own estimate of tax under Section 18-A (2) and in accordance therewith it paid two instalments of advance tax of Rs. 38,333/- each for the assessment year 1960-61 and three instalments of Rs. 12,875/- each for the assessment year 1961-62. Thereafter the assessee filed revised estimates of tax in the month of March 1960 and March 1961 respectively estimating the tax at Rs. 1,80,000/- for each of the assessment years on a total income of Rs. 4 lakhs. The balance of advance tax as per its revised estimate was paid in time after deducting the instalments which had already been paid. The assessee subsequently filed its returns of income for the aforesaid two years declaring the total income of Rs. 4,53,942/- and Rupees 7,02,383/- respectively. The Income-tax Officer completed the assessment of total income of Rs. 5,35,000/- and Rs. 8,99,029/- for the assessment years 1960-61 and 1961-62 on January 21, 1963 after the Income-tax Act 1961, hereinafter called the "New Act" had come into force. The Income-tax Officer took the view that the assessee had furnished inaccurate and untrue estimates of tax and had not given any satisfactory explanation in respect of them. He imposed penalties under Sec. 273 of the new Act amounting to Rs. 13,700/- and Rs. 12342/- for the assessment years 1960-61 and 1961-62 respectively. Appeals to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner in the matter of imposition of penalty were rejected. The Appellate Tribunal held that the penalties could not have been imposed under the provisions of Sec. 273 of the new Act in respect of the two assessment years in question. It was said, inter alia that in the absence of any deeming provision in the new Act the default under Sec. 18-A of the old Act could not be treated as a default under Sec. 212 of the new Act and that Section 297 (2) (g) of the new Act did not save the proceedings under Sec. 18-A of the old Act. A question of law was referred directly to this Court under the provisions of Sec. 257 of the new Act owing to the conflict between the decision of the various High Courts.

2. Section 18-A of the old Act makes provision for advance payment of tax. Sub-section (9) provides, inter alia, for the imposition of penalty if the Income-tax Officer is satisfied that the assessee has furnished estimates of the tax payable by him which he knew or had reason to believe to be untrue. In the new Act S. 212 makes provision for the estimate by the assessee and payment of tax in accordance with that estimate. Section 273 of the new Act empowers the Income-tax Officer to levy penalty on an assessee where he finds at the time of regular assessment that the assessee had furnished, under Sec. 212, an estimate of the advance tax payable by him which he knew or had reason to believe to be untrue.

3. As stated before the Tribunal was of the opinion that Sec. 297 (2) (g) of the new Act did not save proceedings under Sec. 18-A of the old Act. According to that provision any proceeding for the imposition of a penalty in respect of any assessment for the year ending on 31st day of March 1962 or any earlier year which is completed on or after the first day of April 1962 may be initiated and any such penalty may be imposed under the new Act.

4. In M/s. Jain Bros. v. The Union of India, Civil Appeal No. 1593 of 1969, D/- 18-11-1969 = (reported in AIR 1970 SC 778), this Court examined the provision of Section 271 which also appears in Chapter XXI under which Sec. 273 is to be found and the provision of S. 297 (2) (g) of the new Act. This is what was stated in that case :

"We are further unable to agree that the language of Sec. 271 does not warrant the taking of proceedings under that section when a default has been committed by failure to comply with a notice issued under Section 22 (2) of the Act of 1922. It is true that clause (a) of sub-section (1) of Sec. 271 mentions the corresponding provisions of the Act of 1961 but that will not make the part relating to payment of penalty inapplicable once it is held that Section 297 (2) (g) governs the case. Both Sections 271 (1) and 297 (2) (g) have to be read together and in harmony and so read the only conclusion possible is that for the imposition of a penalty in respect of any assessment for the year ending on March 31, 1962 or any earlier year which is completed after first day of April 1962 the proceedings have to be initiated and the penalty imposed in accordance with the provisions of Section 271 of the Act of 1961. Thus the assessee would be liable to a penalty as provided by Sec. 271 (1) for the default mentioned in Sec. 28 (1) of the Act of 1922 if his case falls within the terms of Sec. 297 (2) (g). We may usefully refer to this Court's decision in Third Income-tax Officer, Mangalore v. Damodar Bhat, 71 ITR 806 = (AIR 1969 SC 408), with reference to Section 297 (2) (j) of the Act of 1961. According to it in a case falling within that section in a proceeding for recovery of tax and penalty imposed under the Act of 1922 it is not required that all the sections of the new Act relating to recovery or collection should be literally applied but only such of the sections will apply as are appropriate in the particular case and subject, if necessary, to suitable modifications. In other words, the procedure of the new Act will apply to cases contemplated by Sec. 297 (2) (i) of the new Act mutatis mutandis. Similarly the provision of Section 271 of the Act of 1961 will apply mutatis mutandis to proceedings relating to penalty initiated in accordance with Sec. 297 (2) (g) of that Act."

1971 S. C./7 I G—7

In our judgment Sec. 297 (2) (g) is clearly applicable to the present case inasmuch as the assessment was completed on or after the first day of April 1962. The provisions of the new Act contained in Section 273 will apply mutatis mutandis to proceedings relating to penalty initiated in accordance with Sec. 297 (2) (g) of the new Act. The question which has been referred to us is answered in the affirmative and in favour of the Commissioner of Income-tax who will be entitled to his costs in this court.

Reference answered in affirmative.

Mr. M. C. Bhandare, Advocate and Mr. P. C. Bhartari, Advocate, for M/s. J. B. Dadachanji and Co., for Appellant; M/s. S. K. Mehta, A. P. Tayal and K. L. Mehta, Advocates, for Respondents.

RAY, J.:— This is an appeal from the judgment dated 30 March, 1966 of the High Court of Madhya Pradesh (Indore Bench) allowing the appeal and setting aside the decree of the lower appellate Court and restoring the decree of the trial court with costs.

2. The plaintiff's suit against the Indore Municipal Corporation was for a declaration that the dismissal of the plaintiff was illegal and that the plaintiff was still on the post of Removal Sub-Inspector and a decree against the defendant for Rs. 7,488/- on account of salary at the rate of Rs. 104/- p. m. from 15 April, 1953 till the date of institution of the suit viz., 15 April, 1959 and other reliefs. The trial court decreed the suit. The lower appellate court set aside the decree. The High Court restored the decree passed by the trial court.

3. The case of the plaintiff Niyamatulla was that the plaintiff was suspended by the order of the Municipal Engineer dated 15 April, 1953. One Shri Ghatpande who acted in place of the Municipal Commissioner in the month of May, 1953, directed the dismissal of the plaintiff. The plaintiff contended that the dismissal could have been only under the orders of the Municipal Commissioner. The plaintiff further contended that there was no opportunity given to the plaintiff against the proposed dismissal.

4. The defence of the Municipal Corporation was that the plaintiff preferred a review petition to the Municipal Commissioner who rejected the same. The plaintiff thereafter preferred an appeal to the Appeal Committee of the Municipal Corporation which was dismissed. Thereafter, a revision petition against the order was heard by the Minister-in-charge of the Government of Madhya Bharat and the same was rejected in the month of September, 1955. It was, therefore, contended that the plaintiff had no right to file the suit. Another defence was that the suit was barred by limitation.

5. Counsel for the appellant canvassed three grounds. First, that the order of dismissal was valid and Shri Ghatpande had jurisdiction to pass the order of dismissal. Secondly, the suit was barred by limitation. Thirdly, the provisions of Section 135 of the Indore Municipality Act was a plea in bar of the suit.

6. The authority of Shri Ghatpande to dismiss the plaintiff was based on the provisions contained in Section 13 of the Indore Municipal Act, 1909. Section 13 of the Indore Municipal Act, inter alia, reads as follows:

"(1) The Municipal Commissioner for the City of Indore shall, from time to time, be appointed by the Government.

(2) (a) Leave of absence may be granted to the Commissioner, from time to time, according to the Indore Civil Service Regulations.

(b) During such absence of the Commissioner the Government may appoint any person to act as Commissioner. Every person so appointed shall exercise the powers and perform the duties conferred and imposed by the Act or by any other enactment at the time in force on the person for whom he is appointed to act, and shall be subject to the same liabilities, restrictions and conditions to which the said person is liable and shall receive such monthly salary as may be determined by the Government.

In order to rest the defence on Section 13 of the Indore Act it has to be first found out that there is an appointment by the Government of any person to act as Commissioner. The finding of fact by the High Court is that no order of the Government was produced to show that Shri Ghatpande was appointed to act in place of Shri Rao who was the then Municipal Commissioner. The further finding of fact was that the order of dismissal was passed by Shri Ghatpande.

7. The defence of limitation pleaded by the Indore Municipal Corporation was in general terms that this suit was barred by limitation. The plaintiff in the plaint alleged that the cause of action arose on 15 April, 1953 and on 1 May, 1953 when the plaintiff was dismissed from service and on 11 January, 1954 when it was passed by the Appeal Committee of the Indore Municipality. At the trial the plaintiff contended that the suit was well constituted and was governed by Article 120 of the Limitation Act, 1908.

8. At the time of the hearing of the appeal before the District Judge, Indore, the Municipal Corporation, Indore contended that under Sec. 135 (2) of the Indore Municipal Act, 1909 a suit in respect of any act done or purporting to be done under the Act by an officer or servant of the municipality or by any person acting under the order of the Government was to be filed within six months from the date of the accrual of the cause of action. The District Judge accepted the plea. The alternative contention on behalf of the Municipal Corporation before the District Judge was that Article 115 of the Limitation Act, 1908 will apply if the special period of limitation prescribed by the Act did not apply. The District Judge did not accept that contention on the reasoning that the plaintiff was not under any contract of service and Article 115 applied to compensation for breach of contract. The District Judge held that Article 14 of the Limitation Act, 1908 would apply when an order of an officer in his official capacity was set aside and no special period of limitation was prescribed.

9. In the High Court the Municipal Corporation repeated the plea under Section 135 of the Indore Municipal Act, 1909. The High Court, however, repelled that contention by holding that Shri Ghatpande was not the Commissioner when he passed the order, and, therefore, the order being without jurisdiction, the provisions contained in Section 135 (2) of the Indore Municipal Act were inapplicable and the plaintiff's suit was governed by Article 120 of the Limitation Act, 1908.

10. The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure enjoin that if any special plea of limitation is a defence such a defence of limitation should be pleaded. In the present case, the Municipal Corporation did not plead Section 135 of the Indore Municipal Act, 1909 as a defence. Such a plea was not taken in the pleadings or in the trial Court and the District Judge should have not entertained such a plea. The provisions contained in Section 135 of the Indore Municipal Act will be applicable to things done under the Act. It is manifest that in the present case the order of the dismissal passed by Shri Ghatpande was beyond his jurisdiction and is therefore not an act done under the Act.

11. Furthermore, Section 8 (1) (b) of the Indore Act says that the Council shall bear the name of the Municipal Council of the Indore City and be a body corporate and have perpetual succession and a common seal and by such name may sue and be sued. A distinction is to be noticed between suing the Municipal Council of the Indore City as contemplated in Section 8 (1) (b) of the Act and suits against the Commissioner or any officer or servant of the Municipality or any person acting under the direction of the Government or the Commissioner as contemplated in Section 135 of the said Municipal Act. One of the purposes of Section 135 of the Municipal Act is to afford an opportunity to the persons mentioned in the section to make amends within the period of notice. The suit that was filed in the present case was not in respect of any act done or purported to be done under the Act.

12. This Court in the case of Bharat Kala Bhandar Ltd. v. Municipal Committee, Dhamangaon, (1965) 3 SCR 499 = (AIR 1966 SC 247), examined the provisions of Section 48 of the Central Provinces and Berar Municipalities Act, 1922 which was to the effect that no suit shall be instituted against any Committee or any member, officer or servant thereof or any person acting under the direction of any such committee, member, officer or servant for anything done or purporting to be done under the Act, until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing stating the cause of action, the name and place of abode of the intending plaintiff and the relief which he claims. Section 48 of the said Central Provinces and Berar Municipalities Act further provided that every such suit shall be dismissed unless it was instituted within six months from the date of the accrual of the cause of action. The appellant in that case contended that it was a case of recovery of an illegal tax and therefore a claim for its refund fell outside the provisions of Section 48 of the said Act. The respondent, on the other hand, contended there that the collection of tax was not without jurisdiction but only irregular and therefore the suit would be in respect of a matter purporting to be done under the Act. This Court held that where power existed to assess and recover a tax up to a particular limit the assessment or recovery of an amount in excess was wholly without jurisdiction. To such a case the statute under which action was purported to be taken could afford no protection. On logic principle the same reasoning applies to the provisions contained in Section 135 of the Indore Municipal Act, 1909 with the result that the suit in the present case is not within the mischief of Section 135 of the Indore Municipal Act.

13. For these reasons, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

23-2-1970.

Constitution of India, Article 133 (1)
— Final order in a civil proceeding — Order dismissing writ petition to quash industrial award, is a final order.

An order dismissing a writ petition challenging the validity of an industrial award, though such award has disposed of only one of the items of a charter of demand by the workmen, leaving the rest of the items to be adjudicated by a subsequent award, is a final order in a civil proceeding of the High Court within the meaning of Article 133 (1) and is appealable to the Supreme Court. (Para 7)

30 days from the date of publication and award becomes final and, so far as the dispute relating to the item disposed of by the award it becomes final and binding on the parties.

*Civil Appln. No. 2687 of 1968, D/- 25-11-1968 — Bom.

IN/IN/B146/70/MKS/B

Apart from this the petition for writ under Article 226 is a civil proceeding which is independent of the original controversy between the parties. And if the effect of the order passed in such proceeding, be it to interfere with the impugned proceeding or decline to do so, is to determine the controversy before the Court, the order must be regarded as final for the purpose of an appeal to the Supreme Court. AIR 1966 SC 1445 and AIR 1968 SC 733, Rel. on. (Para 6)

Therefore, the effect of the dismissal of the writ petition being that the award subject to an appeal to the Supreme Court, cannot be questioned on the grounds alleged in the writ petition, the order finally determines the controversy between the parties on the question raised in the petition and is therefore appealable. Mr. V. M. Tarkunde, Senior Advocate (Mr. P. N. Tiwari, Advocate, and Mr. O. C. Mathur, Advocate of M/s. J. B. Dadachanji and Co., with him), for Appellant; Mr. B. Sen, Senior Advocate, Mr. S. K. Dholakia, Advocate, with him), for Respondent No. 4.

SHELAT, J.:— This appeal, by special leave, raises the question as to whether an order dismissing a writ petition challenging the validity of an industrial award, which disposes of one of the items of a charter of demands by workmen but leaves the rest of the demands to be adjudicated by a subsequent award, is a final order in a civil proceeding of a High Court within the meaning of Article 133 (1) of the Constitution.

2. The following are the relevant facts:

The appellant-company conducts factories at Mulund in Greater Bombay, Kymore, Calcutta and Podanur. The present dispute relates to the factory at Mulund where the company employs more than 1700 workmen and has its Head Office also.

3. On September 21, 1962 the 4th respondent union on behalf of the workmen of the Mulund factory submitted a charter of demands consisting of 20 items including the demand for increased dearness allowance. By an agreement dated November 26, 1964 between the appellant-company and the 4th respondent union made under Section 10-A of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, the said demands were referred for adjudication to a board of arbitrators consisting of respondents 1 to 3. A notification dated December 5, 1964 referring the said disputes to respondents 1 to 3 was issued by the Maharashtra Government and published in the Government Gazette. Demand No. 1-A in the said charter of demands related to dearness allowance to be paid to both monthly and daily rated workmen at the rates therein set out. The arbitrators decided to hear and dispose of, first the dispute as to dearness allowance and then to deal with the rest of the disputes relating to other demands. Accordingly, the parties were heard and ultimately the arbitrators gave their award which they called Part I Award dated March, 27, 1965. The said award was a majority decision in the sense that one of the arbitrators dissented from the opinion of the other two. So far as the present appeal is concerned, it is not necessary to set out the contents of the award. The said Part I award was thereafter published in the Government Gazette dated April 15, 1965 and became enforceable under Section 17-A of the Act on the expiry of 30 days from the date of its publication. If the Appellant-company were to be right, the said award imposed a burden of about Rs. 40 lacs by way of arrears, the award having been made retrospective in operation, and Rs. 5.58 lacs as and by way of recurring liability every year.

4. Aggrieved by the said award the appellant-company filed a writ petition under Article 226 of the Constitution being Special Civil Application No. 824 of 1965 in the High Court of Bombay for quashing the said award on diverse grounds. The writ petition came up for hearing before a Division Bench and was dismissed on merits by an order dated April 10, 1968. The appellant-company thereupon filed an application being Supreme Court Civil Application No. 2687 of 1968 for leave to appeal to this Court. That application was re-

"No application lies under Article 226 of the Constitution as there is further arbitration."

It appears that the words "Article 226" were mentioned in the said order through inadvertence. What was meant was that as the arbitration proceedings were still pending and the board of arbitrators had yet to adjudicate on the rest of the reference, the disputes between the parties could not be said to have been finally disposed of, and that therefore, the said Part I award was an interlocutory order. Consequently, neither that award nor the order dismissing the writ petition against that award was a final order within the meaning of Article 133 (1). This appeal challenges the correctness of this order.

5. The only question arising in this appeal is whether the High Court's order dated November 23, 1968 dismissing the writ petition is a final order within the meaning of Article 133 (1). There is no dispute that the question of dearness allowance along with several other questions was by agreement between the parties, referred to the arbitration of respondents 1 to 3 as provided by Section 10-A of the Act and that a copy thereof was published in the Government Gazette as required by sub-section (3) of that section. There is similarly no dispute that the arbitrators, instead of determining all the disputes at one time, first took up the question of dearness allowance, deciding to take up the rest of the disputes at a subsequent stage and gave their award calling it Part I Award. Under sub-section (4) of Section 10-A, the arbitrators submitted the said Part I Award duly signed by all of them to the Government. As required by Section 17 (1), the said Part I Award was published in the manner prescribed therefor by the State Government and thereupon under Section 17 (2) it became final and could not be called in question by any Court in any manner whatsoever. Under Section 17-A (1), the award became enforceable on the expiry of 30 days from the date of its publication under Section 17 — in the present case, as from May 15, 1965. Therefore, so far as the question of dearness allowance, among other disputes, was concerned, Part I Award became final and binding on the parties and nothing further remained to be done or determined in respect of the controversy between the parties on the question of dearness allowance. The award, therefore, was not an interlocutory order in the sense of any dispute in respect of its subject-matter remaining to be finally adjudicated by the arbitrators or the rights of the parties in relation thereto remaining pending any further determination. In this sense there can be no doubt that so far as the dispute as to dearness allowance was concerned, the arbitrators by the said Part I Award finally adjudicated it and gave their decision leaving nothing to be adjudicated or decided upon at any subsequent stage of the arbitration.

6. Quite apart from this consideration, the petition filed by the appellant-company for a writ of certiorari and for quashing the said Part I Award under Article 226 was a proceeding independent of the dispute between the parties. Such a writ proceeding was not an interlocutory proceeding nor was the order dismissing it an interlocutory order leaving any question raised in the writ petition to be determined at any later stage. Once the High Court dismissed the writ petition, the controversy between the parties raised therein was finally determined and therefore came to an end. In Ramesh v. Gendalal, (1966) 3 SCR 198 = (AIR 1966 SC 1445) a similar question arose for consideration and this Court held that a writ petition under Article 226 is a civil proceeding of a High Court that such a proceeding is quite independent of the original controversy between the parties and that a decision in exercise of jurisdiction under that article, whether interfering with the proceedings impugned or declining to do so, is a final decision in so far as the High Court is concerned, if the effect is to terminate the controversy before it and the order must in that case be regarded as final for the purpose of an appeal to the Supreme Court. (see also Mohanlal Maganlal Thacker v. State of Gujarat, (1968) 2 SCR 685 = (AIR 1968 SC 733).

7. It is clear that the effect of the dismissal of the writ petition by the High Court was that the said Part I Award, subject to any appeal to this Court, was not liable to be questioned on the grounds alleged in that writ petition and the appellant-company would be bound to pay to its workmen dearness allowance at the rates provided in that award. The controversy between the parties on questions raised in the writ petition was finally determined and brought to an end as a result of the order of dismissal. In view of the decision in Ramesh v. Gendalal, the High Court must be said to be in error in holding that its order dismissing the writ petition was not a final order within the meaning of Article 133 (1) and that no appeal, therefore, lay therefrom to this Court.

8. The appeal succeeds. The High Court's order dated November 25, 1968 is set aside and the case is sent back to the High Court for disposal in accordance with law. In the circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs. The Special Leave Petition No. 148 of 1969 filed against the High Court's judgment and order dated April 10, 1968 dismissing the said writ petition is allowed to be withdrawn. Stay granted by this Court will continue for ten days from today.

No. 1.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

GROVER, J.:— This is an appeal by special leave from a judgment of the Bombay High Court and arises in the following circumstances.

2. The suit premises consisting of a shed at 130, Shuklaji Street, Bombay are the property of the appellant, and were let out to the respondent as a monthly tenant. By means of a notice dated June 13, 1956 the tenant was informed by the landlord that he was in arrears of rent since July 1, 1953 and was liable to pay to the landlord a sum of Rs. 1826 being the amount of rent calculated up to the date of the notice. As he was an habitual defaulter and had been making illegal use of a passage attached to the premises without the consent of the landlord his tenancy was being terminated.
He was further called upon to make payment of the amount of arrears.
The tenant did not vacate the premises and a second notice was sent dated October 18, 1957 calling upon him to deliver vacant possession of the premises which were stated to be in his occupation as a monthly tenant. In the second notice another ground was mentioned for getting the premises vacated. It was that the same were required for the personal use and occupation of the landlord. It may be mentioned that prior to the despatch of the second notice the landlord had been paid and he has received the amount of arrears which were said to be due in the first notice. In other words the rent had been received upto

March 1955. On October 30, 1957 the tenant made a tender by means of a cheque of the full amount of arrears then due but the cheque was returned by the landlord.

3. On March 31, 1958 the landlord filed a suit for ejectment and for recovery of rent from April 1955 to November 1957 and compensation for use and occupation from December 1957 to February 1958 as also for a certain amount for vacant possession being rack rent of twelve months' rent, the total amount of all the items being Rs. 2448.12 Np. In July 1960 the plaintiff sought and was allowed to amend the plaint by introducing the following paragraph:

"Notice dated 13th June 1956 under Section 12 of the Bombay Rent Control Act was given by the plaintiff's advocates to the defendants demanding payment of arrears of rent from 1st July 1953 upto date 1956, which has been duly acknowledged. Copy of the said notice is hereto annexed and marked Ex. 'A'."

The ejectment was claimed on the ground of default in payment of arrears of rent and for personal use and occupation. The learned trial Judge held that by serving a second notice and by various acts and conduct the landlord showed a clear intention to waive and condone the ground of default in payment of arrears contained in the first notice. As regards the ground of personal requirement the trial court was not satisfied that the premises were reasonably and bona fide required by the plaintiff for his own use. The suit for eviction was dismissed although a decree for Rs. 1822.97 was granted. The matter was taken in appeal to the Court of Small Causes. The appeal court held that there was no waiver on the part of the landlord as regards the default committed by the tenant in not paying the arrears of rent within one month after the receipt of the first notice. In other words the service of a second notice and other facts which had been found by the trial court did not amount to a waiver of the first notice.
But it was of the view that the demand of the arrears of rent made in the notice dated June 13, 1956 was excessive and illegal which made the notice invalid. The other point about personal necessity appears to have been abandoned by the plaintiff before the appeal court. The landlord filed a petition under Article 227 of the Constitution in the High Court which was dismissed in limine.

4. It has been contended before us on behalf of the landlord that the view of the appeal court on the effect of an excessive demand having been made in the notice was altogether erroneous. In Civil Appeal No. 387 of 1964, D/-5-4-1966 (SC) [Raghunath Ravji Dandekar v. Anant Narayan Aptel], this court laid down that a notice to quit under the Transfer of Property Act would not be bad because by mistake or oversight more was demanded in the notice under Sec. 12 (2) of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act 1947 (Act LVII of 1947), hereinafter called the Act than was due. It is urged that since the aforesaid infirmity in the notice dated June 13, 1956 alone had prevailed with the appeal court the High Court ought to have entertained the petition under Art. 227 and after setting aside the judgment of the appeal court the suit for ejectment should have been decreed. Reliance has been placed on Sec. 12 (3) (a) of the Act according to which where the rent is payable by the month and there is no dispute regarding the amount of standard rent or permitted increases if such rent or increases are in arrears for a period of six months or more and the tenant neglects to make payment thereof until the expiration of the period of one month after notice referred to in sub-section (2), the court shall pass a decree for eviction in any such suit for recovery of possession. It is argued that the notice dated June 13, 1956 was the only notice which after the amendment introduced in the plaint by paragraph 3A was to be treated as a valid notice and since there had been non-compliance with the demand made in that notice the court was bound to pass a decree for eviction. As there was failure to exercise jurisdiction the High Court had the power and the authority to interfere in a petition under Art. 227 of the Constitution.

5. It seems to us that on the facts which have been established the landlord was bound to fail. It is abundantly clear that he had, in the second notice dated October 18, 1957, treated the tenancy as subsisting and not only the respondent was described as a monthly tenant but also in the plaint, even after the amendment had been allowed, rent was claimed upto November 1957; thereafter the amount due was described as compensation for use and occupation. The plaintiff was thus fully alive to the distinction between rent and damages for use and occupation and it cannot be said that he had abandoned the second notice and asked for the same to be treated as non est or that he had relied solely on the first notice dated June 13, 1956. Under Sec. 113 of the Transfer of Property Act a notice given under Section 111, clause (h) is waived with the express or implied consent of the person to whom it is given by any act on the part of the person giving it showing an intention to treat the lease as subsisting. Illustration (b) is in the following terms:

"(b) A, the lessor, gives B, the lessee, notice to quit the property leased. The notice expires and B remains in possession. A gives to B as lessee a second notice to quit. The first notice is waived."

If only the language of the illustration were to be considered as soon as the second notice was given the first notice would stand waived. Counsel for the appellant has relied on the observation of Denning J., (as he then was) in Lowenthal v. Vanhoute, 1947-1 KB 342, that where a tenancy is determined by a notice to quit it is not revived by anything short of a new tenancy and in order to create a new tenancy there must be an express or implied agreement to that effect and further that a subsequent notice to quit is of no effect unless, with other circumstances, it is the basis for inferring an intention to create a new tenancy after the expiration of the first. The Privy Council in Harihar Banerji v. Ramsashi Roy, 45 Ind App 222 = (AIR 1918 PC 102), had said that the principles governing a notice to quit under Sec. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act were the same in England as well as in India. For the purpose of the present case it is wholly unnecessary to decide whether for bringing about a waiver under Sec. 113 of the Transfer of Property Act a new tenancy by an express or implied agreement must come into existence. All that need be observed is that Section 113 in terms does not appear to indicate any such requirement and all that has to be seen is whether any act has been proved on the part of the present appellant which shows an intention to treat the lease as subsisting provided there is an express or implied consent of the person to whom the notice is given.

6. In the present case there can be no doubt that the serving of the second notice and what was stated therein together with the claim as laid and amplified in the plaint showed that the landlord waived the first notice by showing an intention to treat the tenancy as subsisting and that this was with the express or implied consent of the tenant to whom the first notice had been given because he had even made payment of the rent which had been demanded though it was after the expiration of the period of one month given in the notice.

7. It further appears that the rent was sent by the tenant treating the tenancy as subsisting and not as having come to an end by virtue of the first notice. There is another significant fact which shows that it was the second notice which was considered by the landlord to be the effective notice. It was in the notice sent in October 1957 that the landlord, for the first time, raised the ground of personal necessity. In the suit requirement of personal necessity was made one of the main grounds on which eviction was sought. In the first notice which was sent in June 1956 no such requirement or ground had been mentioned. It was not open therefore, to the landlord to say that he did not want to rely on the second notice and should be allowed to base his action for eviction only on the first notice containing the ground of the default in payment of arrears of rent. We are satisfied that the suit of the landlord was rightly dismissed though we have sustained its dismissal on different reasoning.

8. The appeal, therefore, fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Chandrakant Madhavrav Dhaibar and another, Appellants v. Patel Parshottamdas Shamalbhai and another, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 684 of 1970, D/- 4-9-1970.

Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (67 of 1948), Sec. 32F (1) (a) — Exemption of lands from being deemed to be purchased by tenant under Sec. 32 (1) — Minor, a member of joint family, claiming benefit under Sec. 32F (1) (a) on ground that there was partition of joint family estate — Held, on fact, that minor was not entitled to benefit of Section 32F (1) (a) there being no proper partition. (Para 6)

Mr. H. R. Gokhale, Senior Advocate, (Mr. K. Rajendra Chaudhuri, Advocate, for Mr. K. R. Chaudhuri, Advocate, with him), for Appellants; Mr. M. V. Goswami, Advocate, for Respondent No. 1.

HEGDE, J.:— The appellants are father and son, the second appellant being a son of the 1st appellant. They own some lands in Baroda in Gujarat State. It is said that those lands were owned by a Hindu joint family consisting of the 1st appellant and his four sons. The suit lands formed part of the lands owned by that family. The suit lands were in possession of the respondents as tenants. Under Sec. 32 (1) of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948 (which will hereinafter be referred to as the Act), the suit lands were deemed to have been purchased by the tenants on April 1, 1957. It is said that the father and the sons divided their lands in Baroda on March 12, 1958 and 1/5th share of those lands was given to the second appellant. The suit lands formed part of the lands allotted to the second appellant. At the time of the partition the second appellant was a minor. When the Mamlatdar took steps to fix the value of the suit lands for the purpose of fixing compensation due to the landlord, the second appellant objected to the same on the ground that the suit lands cannot be deemed to have been purchased by the respondents in view of Sec. 32F (1) (a) of the Act. The Mamlatdar rejected that contention but in appeal the District Deputy Collector reversed the decision of the Mamlatdar accepting the contention of the appellants that the suit lands came within the scope of Section 32F (1) (a). He remanded the case to the Mamlatdar to find out whether the share given to the appellant was a proper share. On a further appeal to the tribunal, the order of the District Deputy Collector was reversed and the decision of the Mamlatdar restored. Thereafter the appellants moved the High Court of Gujarat under Art. 226 of the Constitution but the same was dismissed. Hence this appeal by special leave.

2. Section 32F (1) (a) of the Act reads:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in the preceding sections,—

(a) where the landlord is a minor, or a widow, or a person subject to any mental or physical disability — the tenant shall have the right to purchase such land under Section 32 within one year from the expiry of the period during which such landlord is entitled to terminate the tenancy under Section 31:

Provided that where a person of such category is a member of a joint family, the provisions of this sub-section shall not apply if at least one member of the joint family is outside the categories mentioned in this sub-section unless before the 31st day of March 1958 the share of such person in the joint family, has been separated by metes and bounds and the Mamlatdar on inquiry is satisfied that the share of such person in the land is separated having regard to the area, assessment, classification and value of the land, in the same proportion as the share of that person in the entire joint family property, and not in a larger proportion."

3. The Mamlatdar came to the conclusion that the partition alleged did not come within the scope of Sec. 32F (1) (a) of the Act as it was only a partial partition in view of the fact that the members had not divided the house that they had at Baroda as well as their lands in Kadu in Poona District. The appellate authority opined that a partial partition also comes within the scope of Section 32F (1) (a) and hence it set aside the order of the Mamlatdar and remanded the case back to him for determining whether the second appellant had been given a proper share in the family properties which question the Mamlatdar did not go into earlier in view of his conclusion that a partial partition does not come within the scope of Sec. 32F (1) (a). In the further appeal the tribunal agreeing with the Mamlatdar opined that in order to have the benefit of Sec. 32F (1) (a), the entire family properties must have been partitioned. The same view commended itself to the High Court.

4. In this Court it was urged on behalf of the appellants that on the facts of the present case, no question of partial partition arises; the lands referred to in Sec. 32F (1) (a) do not include any house; further the lands in Kadu did not belong to the family of the 1st appellant and his sons but to a larger family consisting of the 1st appellant and his cousins. It was also urged that the landlord in this case is the smaller family consisting of the 1st appellant and his sons and not the larger family consisting of the 1st appellant and his cousins.

5. These contentions are challenged on behalf of the respondents.

6. It is not necessary for us to go into these contentions in this appeal. The tribunal the final fact finding authority has come to the conclusion that on the admitted facts, the share given to the second appellant, having regard to the area, assessment, classification and value of the lands is not in the same proportion as his share in the entire joint family property. It was admitted before the tribunal that at the time of the partition the 1st appellant's wife (second appellant's mother) was alive. It was further admitted that under law, she was entitled to a 1/6th share in the suit lands. Admittedly she was not given any share. The proper share to which the second appellant was entitled in the lands owned by the 1st appellant and his sons is 1/6th and not 1/5th. But in fact he was given 1/5th share in the same. That being so, the second appellant is not entitled to the benefit of Sec. 32F

(1) (a). A somewhat half-hearted attempt was made in this Court to show that the wife of the 1st appellant had renounced her share. This contention is opposed to the admission made before the tribunal. Therefore it cannot be accepted.

7. In the result this appeal fails and the same is dismissed with costs.
Appeal dismissed.

Civil Appeals Nos. 2637 and 2638 of 1969, D/- 4-9-1970.

(A) Advocates Act (1961), Sec. 38 — Powers of Supreme Court — Appeal lies both on facts and law — Supreme Court can review its previous order in appropriate cases — (Constitution of India, Art. 137).

The appeal to the Supreme Court under Sec. 38 is not a restricted appeal. It is not an appeal on law alone but also on fact. The Supreme Court can entertain subsequent petitions from a person whose case has been dealt with by disciplinary Committee. The Supreme Court must in all cases go into the matter to satisfy itself that justice has been done by the disciplinary committee or committees. The Supreme Court possesses under the Constitution a special power of review and further may pass any order to do full and effective justice. Where the Supreme Court is moved to take action and the Bar Council of India and the Bar Association of the Supreme Court are unanimous in asking the Supreme Court to go into the matter and have the order against the appellant lawyer disbaring him from practice set aside and the case presents some unusual circumstances the Supreme Court will review its previous order and set aside the order. (Paras 19, 36, 37, 39)

(B) Advocates Act (1961), Ss. 37, 44 — Bar Council — Powers of appeal and review stated.

Though an appeal preferred to the Bar Council of India is heard by the disciplinary committee, in the initiation of proceedings and again in the matter of appeal the Bar Council is mentioned and not the disciplinary committee. Therefore the general superintendence of ethics and etiquette of the profession and questions of misconduct of the members are not wholly outside the ken of the Bar Councils of the State or of India and are always within their respective jurisdictions. The Bar Council therefore does not act wrongly in entertaining subsequent petitions from a person whose case has been dealt with by the disciplinary committee. The power of review is expressly granted to the Disciplinary Committee of the Bar Council which may on its own motion or otherwise review any order passed by it. The word 'otherwise' is wide enough to cover a case referred by the Bar Council for review. There is a proviso which makes the Bar Council of India the final judge because no order of a disciplinary committee of a State Bar Council on review has effect unless it is approved by the Bar Council of India. The powers of review are not circumscribed by the Act. Such powers may be exercised in a suitable case for or against an advocate even after the matter has gone through the hands of the Disciplinary Committee at some stage or even through the Supreme Court. These matters are also not governed by the analogy of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit in the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Datta, Advocate, with him), for the Intervener (In both the Appeals).

HIDAYATULLAH, C. J.—The appellant in these two appeals is an advocate of this Court, who on complaint by the District Judge, Delhi, 29 February, 1964, to the Bar Council of the State of Delhi, was held guilty of professional misconduct and suspended from practice for a year by the disciplinary committee of the said Bar Council. He appealed to the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of India under Sec. 37 of the Advocates Act. The appeal was dismissed. His appeal to this Court under Sec. 38 of the Act was dismissed summarily at the preliminary hearing. The charge against him was that while inspecting a judicial record in the company of Mr. Kuldip Singh Advocate, he tore out 2 pieces of paper from an Exhibit (C-I). The pieces were thrown by him on the ground. The clerk-in-charge reported the incident to the District Judge and the complaint followed.

2. The suit, record of which was being inspected, arose in the following circumstances. On February 6, 1963 Mr. Anant Ram Whig, an advocate, sent a notice on behalf of one Sarin to a certain Ramlal Hans and his wife claiming a sum of Rs. 4370/- as reward for the success of their daughter at an examination including tuition fees. Sarin was preparing the girl for the B. A. examination. The claim of Sarin was repudiated by Ramlal Hans in a reply dated February 11, 1963. The matter was referred to the arbitration of Mr. Mansaram, Municipal Councillor Delhi by an agreement dated February 24, 1963. The arbitrator gave an award for Rs. 1000/- in favour of Sarin. The award was filed in the Court of Mr. Brijmohanlal Aggarwal, Sub-Judge, Delhi for being made a rule of the court. Ramlal Hans engaged the appellant as advocate. The appellant in his turn engaged two other advocates to conduct the actual cases and also filed his vakalatnama. A copy of the notice sent by Mr. Whig was filed in the case (Ex. C-I) but was not yet proved.

3. On February 24, 1963 the appellant went for the inspection of the record of the case in the company of his junior lawyer. The file was given by Amrik Singh, the junior clerk of the Bench. Amrik Singh then went out of the room but soon returned to his seat. Later he charged the appellant of having torn 2 pieces from a document (which was Ex. C-I) and picked up the alleged pieces from the floor. Mr. Aggarwal then arrived on the scene. The statement of the appellant was recorded. The Sub-Judge also obtained reports from his junior and Assistant clerks and made a report. With the report he sent the Exhibit said to be mutilated and the two pieces said to be the torn pieces of Ex. C-I in a sealed envelope. A complaint was also made to the District Judge by Sarin. The District Judge then made a report and wrote that the document was important in the case and action was, therefore, called for.

4. The disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of the Union Territory of Delhi took up the matter under Sec. 35 of the Advocates Act. The explanation of the advocate was called for. He explained that the charge was false and it was due to the ill-will of Mr. Aggarwal and his staff because earlier he had made some serious allegations against Mr. Kalra, Sub-Judge III Class in a transfer petition and had also started contempt proceedings. According to the appellant this led to hostility between the Judges and their staff and him. He denied that the document was important or that he had mutilated it. He asked inter alia for summoning the torn document and the pieces and they were summoned. The original document was received but not the pieces. The District Judge informed the Committee that the pieces were misplaced and were not found. The appellant maintained that they were put in the same envelope with the exhibit and he alleged that they were suppressed to deny him a legitimate defence that they were not a part of the same document.

5. Oral evidence was recorded. On the basis of the oral evidence of Amrik Singh, the petitioner was held guilty of having wantonly mutilated the document. The petitioner wanted to take a size to size photostat of the exhibit but his request was turned down.

6. As stated already his appeal to the Bar Council of India was dismissed by the disciplinary Committee of the Bar Council of India and later his appeal to this Court was dismissed summarily on April 18, 1966 at the preliminary hearing. Mr. A. K. Sen appeared for the appellant.

7. The appellant then seems to have lost his head. He made successive applications of various kinds. He filed a review petition on April 23, 1966 before the disciplinary Committee of the Bar Council of India but it was rejected on April 29, 1966. The appellant then filed a writ petition in the High Court of Punjab (Delhi Bench) on May 23, 1966 challenging Sec. 38 of the Advocates Act and Rule 7 of Order V of the Rules of this Court as ultra vires Art. 138 (2) of the Constitution. The Writ Petition was admitted and a rule nisi was issued. The appellant before this had filed a review petition in this Court and on September 12, 1966 this Court issued a notice to the District Judge to find out the torn pieces. The District Judge reported on September 22, 1966 that the mutilated document was a copy of a lawyer's notice and that only a small piece of $\frac{1}{2}$ " was missing from the bottom of the second sheet. The pieces were not traceable. He also reported that the junior clerk was not sure that anything was written on the torn pieces but according to his recollection the words 'True Copy' followed by the signature 'Vir Bhan' were written, that this was not stated by him in his earlier statements, and that the Assistant Clerk also said that according to his recollection something was written in ink on those pieces but could not say what it was. The Supreme Court dismissed the review petition on September 26, 1966. The appellant appeared in person at the hearing.

8. The writ petition in the High Court was also dismissed by a single Judge on October 12, 1966. The order shows that the original of Ex. C-I was not relied upon by Mr. Vir Bhan and that he had not attempted to prove the copy, as there was no context about the notice. It was contended before the High Court that there was no motive to tear two tiny pieces from a document which was not in issue. The High Court seemed to agree with this but speculating as to possible motives held that in view of the evidence of Amrik Singh, the question of motive was immaterial. The High Court did not go further than this into facts.

9. The learned single Judge considered the objection to the constitutionality of the rules of this Court and overruled it. He held that questions of fact could not be gone into in view of the successive appeals and review petitions dismissed by the appropriate authorities. A Letters Patent appeal was filed against the single Judge's judgment and order. That appeal was heard by a Division Bench of the High Court of Delhi and dismissed on December 22, 1966. Before the Division Bench the validity of Sec. 38 of the Advocates Act alone was challenged. An objection on merits was rejected because the order of the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of the Union Territory was said to have merged in the order of the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of India and later in that of this Court. The High Court granted a certificate. This Court was represented at the hearings as it was made a party to the writ petition.

10. The appeal filed in this Court as a result (C. A. No. 240 of 1967) was dismissed by the Constitution Bench on January 8, 1968. Only the validity of Sec. 38 of the Advocates Act and rules of this Court was considered. The hearing was on 14 and 15 December 1967. The appellant was in person. The Bar Council of Delhi and their disciplinary committee were represented by Mr. Avadh Behari Advocate, Mr. P. Rama Reddy and Mr. A. V. Rangam represented the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of India, the Supreme Court (a party) was represented by Mr. Purshotam Tricumdas and Mr. I. N. Shroff and the Attorney General was represented by Mr. P. Tricumdas and Mr. S. P. Nayyar. The hearing time was taken up by the appellant and Mr. Purshotam Tricumdas, Mr. P. Rama Reddy argued for 10 minutes and Mr. Avadh Behari was not called upon.

11. The appellant then tried another review petition (No. 21 of 1968) on the basis of the fresh evidence and report of the District Judge Delhi. This Court (on December 2, 1968) summoned the record and allowed the petitioner to take photostats of the Exhibit C-I. The appellant also filed a writ petition under Art. 32 of the Constitution (W. P. No. 69 of 1968). He first applied (C. M. P. 1171/68) for withdrawal of the writ petition and then withdrew that application itself. The two matters were placed before the Court on April 11, 1968 and at one time it appeared that Shri A. K. Sen had argued both of them but later Shri A. K. Sen said he had only appeared in the writ petition and not in the review petition and it was still undisposed of. As a result on August 12, 1968, the review petition was ordered to be placed again for hearing. On the Court observing that on the basis of new material, review should be asked for from the Bar Council of India, the review petition was withdrawn on January 6, 1969. The review application was not dismissed on merits.

12. The appellant then went before the Bar Council asking for reconsideration of his case under Sections 44 and 10 (3) of the Advocates Act. The Bar Council passed an order through its Chairman (Mr. H. D. Shrivastava). The Bar Council of India held that it had no jurisdiction of any kind to reopen this matter although the embarrassment involved in reconsidering the matter was removed by the observations of the Supreme Court. According to the Bar Council the disciplinary committee was not acting as a subordinate delegate of the Council and the general power to safeguard the interests of the Bar or any individual member could only refer to such interests as had not been negated by judicial process under the Advocates Act. The petition was, therefore, dismissed. The Bar Council, however, went on to observe:

".....But we cannot part with this matter without expressing our sense of uneasiness which arises from the production before us of fresh material particularly a photostat of the document said to have been torn by the petitioner. A look at the document opens out a reasonable possibility, that a reconsideration by the disciplinary committee of this Council may lead to a different result. The petitioner may if so advised formally ask for a review by the Disciplinary Committee."

13. The appellant then again applied for review of the order by the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of India. In a fairly long order the disciplinary Committee declined to reopen the case. The disciplinary committee found fault with the single Judge of the High Court of Punjab for not rejecting the writ petition on the short ground that the High Court could not issue a writ to the Supreme Court. The disciplinary committee also found it necessary to comment upon the order of this Court inquiring from the District Judge, Delhi how the pieces kept in safe custody were lost. The disciplinary committee also commented upon the action of the District Judge in re-examining witnesses who had been examined before.

14. The disciplinary committee pointed out that in the second review petition decided by the Committee on February 26, 1967, it refused to take into consideration the report of the District Judge as it was not evidence in the case and because the Supreme Court also did not appear to have acted upon it when dismissing the review petition before it. The Supreme Court's order was not a speaking order but had merely dismissed the review petition summarily.

15. The disciplinary committee next considered how the matter came before them. They refused to take into account a 'casual observation' of the Judges in the course of arguments before them in the review petition in this Court. They speculated that perhaps the appellant was advised to withdraw the review petition which otherwise could have had to be dismissed. The Committee very reluctantly looked into the statements of witnesses recorded by the District Judge when he reported about the loss of the two pieces of paper. The matter was heard and the disciplinary committee took time to consider their order. The disciplinary committee held that in considering review applications to themselves they should not be over-technical and that they would have granted review if there was any material on which it could be granted. They however observed:

"..... It is however axiomatic that no Court or Tribunal can rewrite or alter its Judgment once a Judgment has been signed and delivered. We could entertain the review petition only on some ground similar or analogous to those as mentioned in Section 114 and Order 47, Rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But in this case there is no such ground available to the petitioner."

They held that as the order of the disciplinary committee had merged in the decision of the Supreme Court, a review granted by them would be incompetent. Having held this two members went on to consider the merits, a procedure with which the third member dissented. His observations in the circumstances were quite correct. This is what he said:

"If what the petitioner says about the observations of the Supreme Court that his remedy should be by a Petition for review, is correct, the forum lies elsewhere and we cannot just entertain it. In this view of the matter the observations made by the Bar Council of India in their resolution dated 12th July, 1969, which are entitled to our respect, may well be left alone mad (sic) need be commented upon." The majority of the disciplinary committee however refused to be guided by the observations of the Bar Council of India. They observed that looking at the photostat copy did not advance the matter any further and they had previously seen the original itself and on the evidence they were satisfied that there was some writing on the pieces to show that it was a true copy signed by the attestor. This was proved by the evidence of Mr. Vir Bhan accepted by the disciplinary committees of the two Bar Councils. They discarded the fresh evidence of the two clerks as not of any use to the appellant. They went to the length of saying:

"Even if these witnesses had entirely contradicted their earlier statements that would not have been a ground for review....."

Having said this they went on to say:

".....However in the present case we have also examined the depositions recorded by Shri Jagjit Singh and we do not find any substantial difference between what they had stated earlier and what they stated before him."

The fact that writing on the pieces was not mentioned earlier by the clerks was not noticed. The majority then severely commented upon the conduct of the appellant in charging the subordinate judiciary with hostility and held this to be 'frivolous and unworthy of notice.' They observed as follows:

"Even in our earlier Judgment we pointed out that a defence of this nature calculated to deter and intimidate responsible officers from discharging their public duty was highly reprehensible."

They accordingly dismissed the review application expressing the hope that that would be a close to this chapter. In two paragraphs thereafter the majority commented strongly on other conduct of the appellant in Court cases and outside it which according to them was deplorable. It is obvious that the disciplinary committee was annoyed at the repeated attempts of the appellant to have his case reconsidered by the superior authorities and the hearing he had got.

16. From the respective orders of the Bar Council of India and the disciplinary Committee these two appeals are brought. We granted special leave in the matter arising out of the Bar Council's order limited to the following two questions:

"(1) Whether the Bar Council has no jurisdiction to direct the Disciplinary Committee to rehear the matter; and

(2) Whether the Disciplinary Committee was right in not considering the matter afresh."

In the other appeal the question is: whether the disciplinary committee was right in refusing review and whether we should, therefore, review the matter ourselves, if we are satisfied that the case deserves it.

17. In so far as the Jurisdiction of the Bar Council of India is concerned we think the Bar Council acted correctly when they refused to review the matter themselves. For the Bar Council to do so would be an exercise of appellate power. That power the Bar Council of India does not possess. But the Bar Council of India was right in saying that the question raised before themselves was sufficiently important for reconsideration and recommending it for reconsideration to their Disciplinary Committee.

18. The provisions of the Advocates Act are no doubt precise in the matters of appeals and review. In all cases tried by the Disciplinary Committee of the Bar Council of a State (which term includes the Union Territory of Delhi) an appeal lies to the Bar Council of India. The appeal is, however, heard by the Disciplinary Committee of the Bar Council of India and they dispose of it as they deem fit. The Act does not say that the Disciplinary Committee is a reporting body and the executable order must be made by the Bar Council of India. This is made clear by the section that follows. It speaks of an appeal to this Court against the order of the Disciplinary Committee. If an order of the Bar Council were intended to be interposed (whether endorsing or refusing to endorse the order of the Disciplinary Committee) one would expect the appeal to this Court to lie against the order of the Bar Council. But in the initiation of the proceedings and again in the matter of appeal, the Bar Council is mentioned and not the disciplinary Committee. Indeed under Sections 35 (1) and 36 (1) the Bar Council of the State or of India, as the case may be, must be satisfied that a prima facie case exists before they will refer the matter to their Disciplinary Committee. This is in keeping with the jurisdiction of the Bar Councils of the States laid down by Section 6 (1) (c) under which Bar Council is to entertain and determine cases of misconduct against advocates on its rolls and under Clause (d) with the duty to safeguard the rights and privileges and interests of advocates on its rolls. In regard to the Bar Council of India the same position obtains under S. 7 (1) (d) (which is ipsissima verba with the corresponding provisions of Section 6) read with Section 7 (1) which lay down the jurisdiction of the Bar Council of India to deal with and dispose of any matter arising under the Act. Therefore, the general superintendence of ethics and etiquette of the profession and questions of misconduct of the members are not wholly outside the ken of the Bar Councils of the State or of India and are always within their respective jurisdictions.

19. Next, the appeal to this Court is not a restricted appeal. It is not an appeal on law alone but also on fact. Indeed Section 38 gives the Supreme Court jurisdiction to pass in such appeals any order it deems fit. Therefore the appropriate Bar Council or this Court do not act wrongly if they entertain subsequent petitions from a person whose case had been dealt with by a disciplinary committee.

20. The power of review is expressly granted to the Disciplinary Committee of the Bar Council which may on its own motion or otherwise review any order passed by it. The word otherwise is wide enough to cover a case referred by the Bar Council for review. There is a proviso which makes the Bar Council of India the final judge because no order of a disciplinary committee of a State Bar Council on review has effect unless it is approved by the Bar Council of India.

21. The powers of review are not circumscribed by the Act. The analogy of the Civil Procedure Code must not be carried too far. Such powers may be exercised in a suitable case for or against an advocate even after the matter has gone through the hands of the Disciplinary Committee at some stage or even through this Court. These matters are also not governed by the analogy of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit in the Code of Criminal Procedure. Disciplinary proceedings against a lawyer involve not only the particular lawyer but the entire profession. The reputation of the legal profession is the sum total of the reputation of the practitioners. The honour of the lawyer and the purity of the profession are the primary considerations and they are intermixed.

22. During the hearing we gave an illustration which we may also give here. Suppose an advocate is charged with embezzling the money of his client. The advocate pleads that he paid the money in cash to the client and obtained his receipt but the receipt is misplaced and he cannot find it. He is disbelieved by the Disciplinary Committees and even by this Court. Subsequently he finds the receipt and wishes to clear his good name. The matter can be gone into again on the fresh material. It is not only his right but also the duty of those including this Court to reconsider the matter. The Bar Council in any event can restart the matter to clear him whether before any of the authorities which dealt with the matter before. The facts in the illustration may be reversed to see the converse position where an advocate gets off on a false plea of not having received the money at all, if he can be successfully confronted with his own receipt which the client had misplaced and could not lay hands upon in the first instance.

23. From this it follows that questions of professional conduct are as open as charges of cowardice against Generals or reconsideration of the conviction of persons convicted of crimes. Otherwise how could the Hebron brothers get their conviction set aside after Charles Peace confessed to the crime for which they were charged and held guilty?

24. The fact of the matter in this case is that too much emphasis was laid on the oral evidence of a clerk who alone said that he had seen the appellant tear two pieces from Ex. C-1. The Advocate's denial was not accepted although there was word against word. There was no evidence that the pieces found on the floor matched the tear. No witness spoke of having taken the elementary care of matching the pieces with Ex. C-1. Indeed the pieces having been lost the only corroboration regarding the pieces has disappeared. The only corroboration now is that the edges of Ex. C-1 show such a tear.

25. The question is whether this by itself is sufficient. There is no evidence against the appellant except that of Amrik Singh. It is true that there is no personal allegation against him of harbouring any grudge or hostility beyond saying that the staff of the Courts were against the appellant. As against this, one consideration is what was the gain to the appellant by tearing the tiny pieces? We shall presently show how tiny they were. The charge is a serious one; and we have to see the matter in the whole setting of the evidence. The document said to be torn is a copy of a notice which Sarin's Counsel had sent to the opposite side. The counsel for Sarin said that he had not proved the document. Further the original notice could be summoned. Exhibit C-1 was in two sheets 30.5 cm. × 20.5 cm. and 34.6 cm × 21.5. The second sheet was extraordinarily long and its edges appear very much frayed. It was suggested at the hearing it must have protruded from the rest of the file and thus got damaged in the handling of the file. This was not given due weight.

26. We have examined the document carefully. It is a carbon copy of a notice. The document ends thus:

Note: Copy of this notice is being sent under postal certificate to your wife.

Yours faithfully,

1971 S. C./8 I G—8

The tear occurs 1.5 cm. to the left of 'ficate' and ends below the letter 'a' in 'postal'. The letters of 'faithfully' are missing except for the head of 'f' and so also letters 'der' in 'under' and parts of 'p' and 'o' in 'postal' are missing. The complainant claimed that the document had an attestation 'true copy' followed by a signature and that it had been torn out. The two clerks who had seen the pieces do not definitely say that the pieces had any writing and as the pieces have disappeared we cannot get corroboration. They had originally not said this but now at a later stage they have deposed about the writing on the pieces. We have, therefore, done the best to discover the truth. This is the result of our observations:

27. The document is a rectangular foolscap sheet, rather old paper which is frayed along the edges. As the fraying edges were falling off we have secured them with transparent scotch tape. One piece actually fell off when the paper was being examined by us but the piece has been secured in situ with scotch tape. Another piece found in the file could not be matched and has been secured in the margin with scotch tape so that it may not be lost. It belongs to the same paper. Now for a description of the paper.

28. Fortunately the machine cut edges are available on all four sides enabling us to measure the paper and to find out the exact measurements of missing parts. This will enable us to find out if an attestation and a signature could have been written at all on these papers. It is obvious that the tearing, if deliberate, as is suggested, must have been to tear out not the blank space left on the bottom of the typewritten portion but of some writing, typed or manuscript.

29. The paper is exactly 34.6 cm × 21.5 cm. As no portion is alleged to be torn from the top or the sides we may ignore the measurement of the breadth except to compare it with the tear. The tear today is found along 17.5 cm. out of the total breadth of 21.5 cm. We have already said that except for 1.5 cm. to the left of the letters 'ficate' the tear falls directly below the typed portion and that is 15.5 cm. in length. 7.5 cm. are below the portion where the last line of typing 'ficate to your wife' and the words 'yours faithfully' occur. The bottom of these typed letters are exactly 34.4 cm. from the top leaving a strip which would be .2 cm. In other words out of tear of 17.5 cm., 8 cm. allow only a space of .2 cm. for any writing.

30. Now for the remaining 8 cm. This is made up of 2.5 cm. below 'tal certi' which is almost whole and there is no writing on this portion. That leaves a tear of 5.5 cm. measures lengthwise where there is no typing on top. This is made up of 3 triangular portions joined by the .2 cm. strips below typed portions. 1st triangle is 2 cm. in length with 1 cm. perpendicular from apex to base. The second is 3.2 cm. base with a perpendicular of 1 cm. and the third is 2.8 cm. by 1 cm.

31. Therefore out of the total length of 17.5 cm., 7.5 cm. is a strip uniformly of .2 cm. There are 3 triangles, in length respectively 2 cm., 3.2 cm. and 2.8 cm. with the height almost at the centre in each case 1 cm. The photostat of the document is an annexe and can be seen also. We took the measurements from the original. It is easy to see how small will be space for writing. The three triangles of which only 2 could be held to be torn by the appellant could not have contained the words of attestation and signature. The one on the extreme left is so situated that no one would write there an attestation. The three triangles are separated by 4 cm. and 3.5 cm. and it is impossible to think that the attestation was written in one triangle and the signature in another for there was not enough space to write them one above the other even if one could cramp in one line. Further with the typing having gone to .2 cm. from the bottom anyone wishing to write an attestation would ordinarily write it in the margin where plenty of space was available and that is the usual course lawyers adopt when the writing goes right down to the bottom. We are, therefore, satisfied that there was no writing on the pieces and the halting testimony of the 2 clerks should not have been accepted without corroboration. They said nothing about it when they were first examined.

32. The sum total of our observations may now be stated. The document was merely a copy of which the original could be summoned. One sheet was unduly long and was likely to protrude from the file of papers and thus liable to get frayed. It is frayed and the paper is showing more tears today. The typing had gone to the very bottom of the paper and there was not sufficient space to write in a natural hand the attestation and to sign it. There was blank paper in the margin where the attestation could be conveniently written and signed. The document was not necessary for the decision of the case and Mr. Vir Bhan had not even attempted to prove it. It was being inspected to find out the original case of the claimant after the case had gone to arbitration and there was an award. Nothing was to be gained by tearing it or even by tearing out the attestation even if there was one. Of course it would be improper even to tear out the blank portion but no one indulges in such a silly and useless act. There were serious allegations against a judge of the Court and there was a possibility of the appellant being the target of hostility and the evidence against him was of a single clerk. There was word against word.

33. The question that arises is what are we to do? We have held above that the disciplinary committee could be asked to reconsider the matter by the Bar Council. The order of the disciplinary committee does show that although they held that the Bar Council had acted without jurisdiction, they went on to express their satisfaction with what they had already done. The re-examination was not made objectively but with the intention of reaffirming their decision by every argument for it. No attempt was made to find whether the circumstances were such that the appellant could be said to have proved satisfactorily the contrary of what was held or had created sufficient doubt in the matter. The earlier findings were affirmed when there was no need to do so as the petition for review was held incompetent.

34. At the hearing before us the Bar Council of India appeared and supported the case of the advocate. Mr. Natesan said that in the opinion of the Bar Council, it would be proper for this Court to go into the matter. Previously the Bar Council had probably supported the case against the appellant. The stand of the Bar Council in the case before us was this:

"The Disciplinary Committee of the Bar Council while finding that it has no jurisdiction to review the matter in view of the prior appeal to this Court, has gone also into the merits of the case, examined it elaborately with reference to the materials stated to be new matter and has come to the same conclusion. The question that now arises is whether the Supreme Court can review the matter itself in this appeal when the Disciplinary Committee had no jurisdiction, and set aside the order made by the Disciplinary Committee on the merits. It may be a different thing if this Court now reviews the order in the light of the materials placed before the Court after the production of the original document stated to have been torn which ex facie shows that it could not have been deliberate or wanton."

35. Another body of lawyers, namely, the Bar Association of the Supreme Court sought permission to intervene and were heard. Mr. A. S. R. Chari on behalf of the Association strongly supported the advocate's case. Thus we have the entire Bar of the country and the entire Bar of this Court unanimously asking this Court to go into the matter.

36. It appears to us, therefore, that the Bar Council of India does not wish to oppose the review by us of our order and indeed they invite us to grant relief to the appellant. Ordinarily we would have been unwilling to grant a review after this Court had declined to do so on an earlier occasion. But the circumstances are different. Our view of the matter is also that the charge of deliberately and wantonly mutilating an important document in a judicial file has not been as clearly made out as one would wish. This Court on earlier occasions, taking the facts from the order of the disciplinary committees, declined to interfere as no question of law was involved. It decided the appeal summarily without issuing notice or sending for the record. There is force in the contention that an advocate is entitled to a full appeal on facts and law under Sec. 38 of the Advocates Act. Since the disciplinary jurisdiction of the High Court has been taken away a right of appeal to this Court has been substituted. This Court must in all cases go into the matter to satisfy itself that justice has been done by the disciplinary committee or committees.

37. We find some unusual circumstances facing us. The entire Bar of India are of the opinion that the case was not as satisfactorily proved as one should be and we are also of the same opinion. All processes of the Court are intended to secure justice and one such process is the power of review. No doubt frivolous reviews are to be discouraged and technical rules have been devised to prevent persons from reopening decided cases. But as the disciplinary committee themselves observed there should not be too much technicality where professional honour is involved and if there is a manifest wrong done, it is never too late to undo the wrong. This Court possesses under the Constitution a special power of review and further may pass any order to do full and effective justice. This Court is moved to take action and the Bar Council of India and the Bar Association of the Supreme Court are unanimous that the appellant deserves to have the order against him disbarring him from practice set aside.

38. Looking at the matter for ourselves we find that the document said to be mutilated was not needed for the case. In any event it was only a carbon copy and not an original. No part of the typed portion was damaged except very slightly. The tear in two places equal to a third of a small postage stamp are the subject of the charge. In our opinion there was most probably no writing there as there was hardly any space available and the whole of the margin was available to write the attestation of 'true copy'. The clerks did not speak of any writing at first and now too in a very halting manner. No steps were taken to match the alleged pieces with the tears and the pieces have not been preserved. Thus there is the word of Amrik Singh against that of the appellant. There was a background of hostility which the appellant had created by his aggressive action in other cases. Whether he handled the paper roughly and a piece came off which he threw down without noticing it or the paper gave way and a piece fell (as it did when we handled it) it is not possible to say with definiteness. We find it difficult to believe that this mutilation, without any rhyme or reason, was done with a sinister motive. This is the unanimous

39. Our duty is clear. We could have paused to consider the law applicable to reviews in such matters but we do not think we should ascertain it in this case. This matter is one of the ethics of the profession which the law has entrusted to the Bar Council of India. It is their opinion of a case which must receive due weight. The Bar Council thinks that the decision against the appellant is unsustainable. We see no reason to differ from them. We accordingly grant review in this case and set aside the order disbaring the appellant from practice which had been passed against him. There shall be no order about costs.

Appeal allowed.

BHARGAVA, J.—The appellants in these appeals were exporters of Jute Carpet Backing Cloth and, in connection with some exports by them between the period January 1957 to January 1963, penalties have been imposed on them under Sec. 167 (8) of the Sea Customs Act for contravention of Section 12 (1) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act No. 7 of 1947 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act") in view of the provisions of Section 23A of the Act and Section 19 of the Sea Customs Act by the Adjudicating Officer. Their appeals to the Central Board of Excise and Customs (hereinafter referred to as "the Board") were dismissed, though the amounts of penalties imposed were reduced. The order of the Board dismissing the appeals has been challenged in these appeals before us by special leave.

2. The Board based its decision for upholding the penalties on the finding that the declarations given in purported compliance with Sec. 12 (1) of the Act were defective in two respects. One defect found was that, in the declarations, the invoice value of the goods was shown at a figure lower than the real sale value. The second defect found was that, in the declarations, it was stated that the invoice value declared was the full export value of the goods and was the same as that contracted with the buyer whereas, in fact, the goods had not been sold to the buyer and were being exported on consignment basis, so that the correct declarations should have been that the declarations contained a fair valuation of the goods which were unsold. The declarations were given in Form G. R. I. prescribed by the Rules framed under Section 27 of the Act. On behalf of the appellants, the argument advanced was that these defects in the declarations did not amount to contravention of the restrictions imposed by Sec. 12 (1) of the Act, so that the imposition of these penalties was not justified.

3. So far as the question of under-valuation of the exported goods in the declarations or the documents accompanying the declarations is concerned, reliance was placed on the decision of this Court in Union of India v. M/s. Rai Bahadur Shreeram Durga Prasad (P) Ltd., 1969-1 SCC 91 = (AIR 1970 SC 1597), where this Court held that under-valuation in a declaration under Sec. 12 (1) of the Act does not amount to contravention of the restrictions imposed by that provision. That decision is fully applicable to the present cases before us on this point and, in view of that decision, the imposition of the penalties, on the basis that the under-valuation of the goods amounted to contravention of Sec. 12 (1), is unjustified. We may add that we see no justification for granting the request of Mr. Bindra, learned counsel for the respondents, that that decision should be reconsidered by a larger Bench.

4. Mr. Bindra, however, urged that, in these cases, there was the distinctive feature that the Board also found that the declarations were further incorrect inasmuch as the goods were declared to have been sold, while they were being exported on consignment basis as unsold goods, and it was further stated in the declarations that the full export value of the goods is the value shown instead of stating that it was the fair valuation of unsold goods. The finding recorded by the Board, no doubt, shows that the declarations required to be made under the Rules in Form G.R.I. contained incorrect information; but that incorrect information related to points on which Sec. 12 (1) does not require a declaration. A declaration, which is in contravention of the Rules or the Forms prescribed under the Rules, may be penalised under Section 23 of the Act, but such contravention will not attract the provisions of the Sea Customs Act. Under Sec. 23A of the Act, only a breach of restrictions imposed by Sec. 12 (1) of the Act is to be deemed in contravention of restrictions imposed by Sec. 19 of the Sea Customs Act. An incorrect declaration in contravention of the Rules made under Sec. 27 of the Act is not to be deemed a contravention of any restriction imposed by Sec. 19 of the Sea Customs Act. It is, therefore, quite clear that, in these cases, the imposition of the penalties under Section 167 (8) of the Sea Customs Act was totally unjustified. Consequently, these appeals are allowed with costs, and the orders of the Adjudicating Officer, and the Board imposing the penalties under Sec. 167 (8) of the Sea Customs Act are set aside. Penalties, if recovered, shall be refunded.

(A) States Reorganisation Act (1956), Ss. 115 (7), Proviso and 116 — Bombay Reorganisation Act (1960), Ss. 81 (6) Proviso and 82 — Effect of — Public servant allotted to another State — Conditions of service applicable immediately before 1-11-1956 cannot be affected to his disadvantage by rules made by State except with approval of Central Government.

The provisions of Ss. 115 and 116 of the States Reorganisation Act and those of Sections 81 and 82 of the Bombay Reorganisation Act are substantially the same. Section 116 provides for the continuance of officers in equivalent posts and under the proviso to Section 115 (7) a guarantee is given that the conditions of service applicable immediately before the appointed day in the case of any person who is allotted to another State cannot be varied to his disadvantage except with the previous approval of the Central Government. This protection could not be removed by the rules made by the State subsequent to November 1, 1956, unless the previous approval of the Central Government was obtained thereto. (Paras 4, 8, 11)

(B) Civil Services — Allocated Government Servants (Absorption, Seniority, Pay and Allowances) Rules (1957) — Absorption — Meaning of — Gujarat State Government's Order, D/- 19-8-1966 — Held amounted to absorption of ministerial secretariat staff of former States of Saurashtra and Kutch into Gujarat State secretariat staff — Order cannot be challenged as violative of R. 138, Bombay Civil Services Classification and Recruitment Rules, 1957. Spl. Civ. Appln. 1499 of 1966, D/- 1-7-1968 (Guj), Reversed.

The appellants who were holding permanent posts in the ministerial service of the Secretariat of the former Saurashtra and Kutch States were allotted to Bombay under the States Reorganisation Act and subsequently to State of Gujarat under the Bombay Reorganisation Act 1960. These officers who were serving in the district at their option were transferred to the Secretariat of the Gujarat State. By an order dated 19-8-1966 the State Government regularised their appointments in Secretariat designating the departments in which they were posted, posts to which appointed and the dates from which they were appointed. On a writ petition filed by the officers who were already in ministerial service, the High Court declared the Order D/- 19-8-1966 as invalid. On appeal to Supreme Court:

Held (i) that the order dated 19-8-1966 amounted to absorption within the meaning of that term in the Allocated Government Servants (Absorption, Seniority, Pay and Allowances) Rules 1957. In the absence of determination of equivalent posts under the orders of the Central Government, the State of Gujarat was competent, as a matter of provisional arrangement to absorb the former Saurashtra and Kutch States personnel in the ministerial establishment of the Gujarat State Secretariat. (Paras 12, 13, 15)

(ii) that Rule 138 could not take away the statutory right vested in the personnel of the former Saurashtra and Kutch States under the States Reorganisation Act, 1956. Since the arrangement which was made by the Government of the State of Gujarat must be regarded as provisional and to enure so long as the Central Government did not make a final decision, it was not open to the officers of the Secretariat to challenge the validity of that order. Spl. Civ. Appln. 1499 of 1966, D/- 1-7-1968 (Guj) Reversed. (Para 18)

Mr. M. C. Chagla, Sr. Advocate (M/s. S. K. Dholakia, Vineet Kumar and J. R. Nanavati, Advocates with him) for Appellants; Mr. S. T. Desai, Sr. Advocate (M/s. B. D. Sharma and S. P. Nayar, Advocates, with him) for Respondent No. 1; Mr. S. S. Shukla, Advocate, for Respondents Nos. 2 to 148.

SHAH, J.— Certain officers in the ministerial branch of the Secretariat Service of the State of Gujarat moved a petition in the High Court of Gujarat for an order directing the State Government to treat its order dated August 19, 1966 as "illegal, void and of no effect" and to forbear from enforcing its order treating the persons whose names were specified in the annexure to the order as servants of the "Secretariat cadre." The High Court of Gujarat granted the petition and declared the order dated August 19, 1966, invalid. With certificate granted by the High Court this appeal has been filed.

2. Prior to November 1, 1956, the appellants were holding permanent posts in the ministerial service of the Secretariats of the Part B State of Saurashtra and the Part C State of Kutch. By virtue of Section 8 of the States Reorganization Act 37 of 1956 the new State of Bombay, which included the territories of the States of Saurashtra and Kutch, was formed. S. 115 of the States Reorganisation Act made provisions relating to services other than All-India Services. By sub-section (1) of Section 115 it was enacted; inter alia, that every person who immediately before the appointed day was serving in connection with the affairs of any of the existing States specified therein shall, as from that day, be deemed to have been allotted to serve in connection with the affairs of the successor State to that existing State. By the proviso to sub-section (7) it was provided that conditions of service applicable immediately before the appointed day to the case of any person allotted to another State shall not be varied to his disadvantage except with the previous approval of the Central Government. Section 116 provided for the continuance of officers in the same posts. By Section 117 power was conferred upon the Central Government to give directions to any State Government that may appear to be necessary for the purpose of giving effect to the provisions of Sections 114, 115 and 116 of the Act.

3. Under the States Reorganisation Act, 1956, the appellants were allotted service in connection with the affairs of the new State of Bombay. In exercise of the powers under Article 309 of the Constitution, the Government of Bombay sanctioned certain rules called "The Allocated Government Servants' (Absorption, Seniority, Pay and Allowances) Rules, 1957". Those rules governed the servants who were allotted to the State of Bombay on reorganisation. A large majority of the members of the ministerial branch of the Secretariats of the States of Saurashtra and Kutch were, it appears, unwilling to be posted in the Secretariat of the new State of Bombay. They were accordingly posted in the districts of the former States of Saurashtra and Kutch.

4. Under Act 11 of 1960 called "The Bombay Reorganisation Act" the States of Gujarat and Maharashtra were carved out of the territory of the new State of Bombay. Under Section 81 provisions relating to services other than All-India Services were made and by Section 82 provisions as to the continuance of officers in the same posts was made. By Section 83 power was given to the Central Government to give directions to the States. Those provisions were substantially the same as the provisions of Sections 115, 116 and 117 of the States Reorganisation Act, 1956. The appellants were allotted service in connection with the affairs of the State of Gujarat under S. 81 of the Bombay Reorganisation Act.

5. The newly constituted State of Gujarat finding a dearth of experienced officers in the Secretariat transferred the appellants at divers times between the years 1961, 1962 and 1963 to the Secretariat of the State of Gujarat and assigned them duties in connection with the Secretariat Service. Orders were issued from time to time fixing their scales of pay and seniority. Apparently the Public Service Commission raised some objections about an attempted integration between the officers who were originally serving in the Secretariat Service, and those who were posted from the districts. Ultimately on August 19, 1966, the State Government issued the order to the following effect:

"The question of regularising the appointment to various posts in the Secretariat Department on and after 1st May 1960 of the drafted persons was under the consideration of Government for some time. Government is now pleased to direct in consultation with the Gujarat Public Service Commission that the persons shown in the accompanying statement should be treated to have been regularly appointed in the posts shown against their names in column-4 of the statement with effect from the date shown in column-5 in the Departments mentioned in column-3 of the statement.

2. As regards fixation of their pay and seniority orders have already been issued in Government Resolution General Administration Department No. SCT 1161-F, dated 25th April, 1961 and Government Resolution General Administration Department No. SCT-1162-KH, dated 14th March 1964. The Departments are requested to fix their pay and seniority accordingly."

Appended to the order was a list of 90 persons designating the departments in which they were posted, posts to which appointed and the dates from which they were appointed.

6. The officers of the Secretariat who before the date of the order constituted the ministerial service then filed the petition out of which this appeal arises challenging the validity of the order of the Government. The petition was founded on three grounds: (1) that the order violated Rule 138 of the Recruitment Rules framed by the Government of Bombay in 1957; (2) that the order violated the proviso to Clause (6) of Section 81 in that it altered the conditions of service of the applicants; and (3) that it violated the provisions of the Allocated Government Servants' (Absorption, Seniority, Pay and Allowances) Rules, 1957.

7. Counsel for the applicants conceded before the High Court that the transfer of the former Saurashtra and Kutch States Secretariat personnel to the Gujarat Secretariat per se was not open to objection. The High Court did not consider whether the Saurashtra and Kutch States Secretariat personnel had "any rights flowing on account of absorption and integration of service under the States Reorganisation Act, 1956 or the Allocated Government Servants' Rules, 1957". But the High Court held that since the impugned order purported to amalgamate the former Saurashtra and Kutch States personnel with the Gujarat Secretariat Service contrary to the terms of R. 138 of the Recruitment Rules, and the Government had no authority to vary the method of recruitment provided by the statutory Rule 138 of the Recruitment Rules which was mandatory, the orders of transfer to the Secretariat which were not made in the process of integration could not operate as absorption under the Allocated Government Servants (Absorption, Seniority, Pay and Allowances) Rules, 1957. The High Court also observed that when the ministerial service employees of the former Saurashtra and Kutch States Secretariats were absorbed in the districts, integration of the services was complete and any transfer thereafter to the Secretariat could not and did not amount to absorption in equivalent posts.

8. It is necessary first to examine the scheme of Sections 115 & 116 of the States Reorganization Act 1956. Section 115 was intended to provide for the conditions of service of employees who immediately before November 1, 1956 were serving in connection with the affairs of a State and were allotted to serve in connection with the affairs of another State. Power to fix the conditions of service was reserved exclusively to the Central Government. For that purpose the Central Government was authorised to establish one or more Advisory Committees to advise the Government on the division and integration of the services in the new States and for ensuring fair and equitable treatment to all persons affected by the provisions of Section 115 and for proper consideration of any representation made by those persons. By the proviso to sub-section (7) of S. 115 a guarantee was given to every allotted public servant that his conditions of service shall not be varied to his disadvantage except with the previous approval of the Central Government. Section 116 provided for the continuance of officers in equivalent posts.

9. This Court in N. Raghavendra Rao v. Dy. Commr. South Kanara Mangalore, (1964) 7 SCR 549 = (AIR 1965 SC 136) held that the effect of sub-section (7) of Section 115 is to preserve the power of the State to make rules under Article 309 of the Constitution, but the proviso imposes a limitation on the exercise of that power; the limitation is that the State cannot vary the conditions of service applicable immediately before November 1, 1956 to the disadvantage of persons mentioned in sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 115. In the view of the Court the broad purpose underlying the proviso to Section 115 (7) of the Act was to ensure that the conditions of service shall not be changed except with the prior approval of the Central Government, that is, before embarking on varying the conditions of service, the State Governments should obtain the concurrence of the Central Government.

10. In Union of India v. P. K. Roy (1968) 2 SCR 186 = (AIR 1968 SC 850) this Court held that it is the duty of the Central Government to integrate the services, but the State may be asked to prepare a provisional gradation list provided the Central Government maintains its control over it.

11. It is clear that the conditions of service applicable immediately before the appointed day in the case of any person who is allotted to another State cannot be varied to his disadvantage except with the previous approval of the Central Government. This protection could not be removed by the rules made by the State subsequent to November 1, 1956, unless the previous approval of the Central Government was obtained thereto.

12. It is true that the ministerial service personnel in the States of Saurashtra and Kutch, after they were allotted to the State of Bombay were posted and assigned duties in various districts in Saurashtra and Kutch. But in the absence of evidence to show that the previous approval of the Central Government was obtained, their right to be absorbed in equivalent posts in the new State of Bombay and later in the State of Gujarat was not thereby affected. It appears that there has not been any equivalence established between the posts in the Secretariats of the States of Saurashtra and Kutch and the posts in the new State of Bombay and later in the State of Gujarat to which the members of the ministerial service of the Secretariats of former Saurashtra and Kutch States were allotted. The mere fact that they were posted and continued to render service in the Districts will not, in our judgment, affect the right of the personnel to be absorbed in the equivalent posts in the Secretariat and on terms not disadvantageous to those they were already entitled except with the previous approval of the Central Government.

13. It was conceded, and rightly, that the State has the authority to transfer, subject to the Constitution and the rules made under Article 309, any public servant to render service which by his training and aptitude he was competent to do. Transfer of the personnel from the States of Saurashtra and Kutch to the Secretariat in the State of Gujarat and assignment of duties performable by the ministerial staff in the Secretariat cannot be challenged, and that because they were posted between 1956 and 1960 in the Districts they will not be deprived of their statutory right under Section 115 (7) proviso. Posting in the districts was and must remain purely provisional, until final integration is made by the Central Government. It is common ground that no such final integration had been made by the Central Government.

14. Two grounds appealed to the High Court in deciding the case against the appellants: (1) that the appellants were transferred to the Secretariat of the State of Gujarat, but they were not absorbed in the ministerial service of the Secretariat of the State of Gujarat. In the view of the High Court there was nearly (sic) "regularisation" of the appointment of those persons for the purpose of performing service in the Secretariat; and (2) that the order dated August 19, 1966 was contrary to the Recruitment Rules, 1957.

15. If it be granted that the State was competent to transfer and did transfer the appellants to perform service in connection with the affairs of the State in the Secretariat, it is difficult to hold that when the State "regularised" the service of the appellants in the Secretariat with the consent of the Public Service Commission there was no absorption under the Absorption Rules. It is true that the expression "absorption" has not been used in the order, but that will not justify an inference that there was no intention to absorb the former Saurashtra and Kutch States personnel in the Secretariat. In the absence of determination of equivalent posts under the orders of the Central Government, the State of Gujarat was competent, as a matter of provisional arrangement to absorb the former Saurashtra and Kutch States personnel in the ministerial establishment of the Gujarat State Secretariat. In terms the order says that the persons named therein "should be treated to have been regularly appointed in the posts shown against their names in column-4 of the statement" appended to the order. That, in our judgment amounted to absorption.

16. Original Rule 138 of the Bombay Civil Services Classification and Recruitment Rules, 1939, was deleted, and the following rule was substituted on May 22, 1957. The relevant part of the rule reads:

"138. The ministerial staff in the Secretariat and attached offices is divided into two Divisions.

(a) Upper; and (b) Lower.

(i) Superintendents: Appointments shall be made by promotion from among Senior Assistants.

(ii) Senior Assistants: Appointments shall be made by promotion from among Junior Assistants.

(iii) Junior Assistants: Appointments shall be made either:—

(a) by nomination on the results of a competitive examination held by the Bombay Public Service Commission, or

(b) by promotion from among members of the Lower Division.

Provided that not more than one out of every four vacancies in the posts of Junior Assistants shall ordinarily be filled by promotion.

(2) To be eligible for appointment by nomination a candidate must:—

(i) hold a degree in Arts, Law Science, Agriculture or Commerce of a recognised University or possess an equivalent qualification;

(ii) have attained the age of 18 years; and

(iii) not have attained the age of 30 years in the case of members of the Lower Division appointed on the recommendation of the commission and who have graduated while in service and in any other case 24 years on the first day of the month immediately following month in which the posts are advertised by the Commission.

B. Lower Division

(b) Clerks, clerk-typists, typists: Appointments shall be made by nomination on the results of a competitive examination held by the Commission.

Provided that suitable members of Class IV services who while in that service, have passed the Secondary School Certificate Examination or an examination recognised by Government as equivalent to that examination, shall be eligible for appointment to the posts of clerks by promotion.

(2) To be eligible for appointment by nomination, a candidate must:—

(i) have passed the secondary school certificate examination or an examination recognised by Government as equivalent to that examination:

(ii) have attained the age of 18 years, and

(iii) not have attained the age of 23 years on the first day of the month immediately following the month in which the posts are advertised by the Commission.

A candidate for the post of clerk-typist or typist must, also be able to type neatly accurately at a minimum speed of 40 words per minute.

17. The High Court held that recruitment to the ministerial staff in the Secretariat could only be by nomination or by promotion from among members of the Lower Division, nomination being on the result of a competitive examination held by the Public Service Commission and promotion being from the subordinate staff. In view of this rule, according to the High Court, it was not open to the State Government to adopt any other method of recruitment of the members of the ministerial staff.

18. Counsel for the appellants contended that Rule 138 only dealt with the existing servants and did not prevent any additional members from being amalgamated in the ministerial staff in the Secretariat. He also contended that the recruitment did not amount to admission of an officer for the first time in the service. It is unnecessary for the purpose of this appeal to consider these arguments. Assuming that Rule 138 requires the State to follow a certain method for recruitment to the ministerial service, that rule made under Article 309 of the Constitution cannot take away the statutory right vested in the personnel of the former Saurashtra and Kutch States which they acquired under the States Reorganisation Act, 1956, to hold posts in the new State which were equivalent and on terms which were not, unless the previous approval of the Central Government was obtained, disadvantageous. Since the arrangement which is made by the Government of the State of Gujarat must be regarded as provisional and to endure so long as the Central Government does not make a final decision, it is not open to the officers of the Secretariat to challenge the authority of the Government of Gujarat either to transfer officers from the Districts and to post and assign them duties in the Secretariat or to fix their pay and seniority among the officers in the Secretariat performing ministerial duties.

19. The appeal must therefore be allowed and the order passed by the High Court must be set aside. The petition filed by the respondents Nos. 2 to 148 will stand dismissed. There will be no order as to costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

AIR 1971 SUPREME COURT 122 (V 58 C 29)

(From: Jammu and Kashmir)
I. D. DUA, J.

Latif Hussain, Petitioner v. The State of Jammu & Kashmir, Respondent.

Writ Petn. No. 126 of 1970, D/- 7-7-1970.

Public Safety — Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act (13 of 1964), S. 3 (3) — Order of detention to be approved by the Government with-

in 20 days — Provision does not depend for its operation on arrest and detention of person ordered to be detained — Order of confirmation by Government made before arrest and detention of person — Detention is not illegal. (Para 4)

DUA, J.— Latif Hussain Malik, petitioner, forwarded his application dated March 10, 1970 from Central Jail, Jammu seeking his production in this Court for filing an application for a writ of habeas corpus. According to him, he was arrested on September 21, 1969. This application was treated as an application for writ of habeas corpus and on April 9, 1970 a rule nisi was issued.

2. According to the return the petitioner was detained on November 21, 1969 pursuant to an order dated November 6, 1969 with a view to preventing him from acting in a manner prejudicial to the security of the State. He was informed that it was against public interest to disclose to him the grounds of his detention. The State Government confirmed the order of detention on November 11, 1969.

3. The only contention raised on his behalf is that the order of confirmation by the Government was made before the petitioner's arrest and detention and that this rendered his custody illegal.

4. I am unable to sustain this contention. The order of detention was made by the District Magistrate on November 6, 1969. Under Sec. 3 (3) of the Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act this order had to be approved by the Government within 20 days. This provision does not depend for its operation on the arrest and detention of the person ordered to be detained. Merely because the petitioner could only be arrested on November 21, 1969 did not extend the period within which the order of detention made by the District Magistrate was required by the statute to be approved by the Government in order to extend the life of the order beyond 20 days. The order of detention is not illegal and the petitioner's detention is in full accord with the procedure established by law.

5. This petition accordingly fails and is dismissed.

Petition dismissed.

(V 58 C 30)

(From Madras: AIR 1965 Mad 164)

J. C. SHAH, K. S. HEGDE AND
A. N. GROVER, JJ.

The Tirunelveli Motor Bus Service Co., Appellant v. The Commissioner of Income Tax, Madras, Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 1775 of 1969, D/-11-8-1970.

Income-tax Act (1922), Sec. 10 (2-A) — Amount representing bonus payable shown in 1950-51 on debit side — Amount remained unpaid for some years — In accounting year 1957-58 part of amount paid to employees in full settlement and balance credited to profit and loss accounts — Credit treated as income accruing in the year 1957-58 and assessed to tax — Record containing no indication that any allowance or deduction in respect of bonus was made in the assessment year 1950-51 nor was there any proof that assessee had obtained any benefit relating thereto in assessment year 1957-58 — Amount is not assessable under Sec. 10 (2A). AIR 1965 Mad 164, Reversed. (Para 2)

GROVER, J.—This is an appeal by certificate from a judgment of the Madras High Court answering the following question which had been referred to it under Section 66 (1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, hereinafter called the "Act" in the affirmative and against the assessee.

"Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the sum of Rs. 54,479 is assessable in the year 1957-58 under the provisions of Section 10 (2A) of the Income-tax Act of 1922?"

The assessee is a private limited company. It runs a fleet of buses. For the assessment year 1950-51 the assessee returned an income of Rupees 14,555/-. The Income-tax Officer required the assessee to furnish various particulars and documents under Section 22 (4) of the Act. These were not furnished. Apart from committing a default under S. 22 (4) it committed a default under Sec. 23 (2). The Income-tax Officer made an assessment under Sec. 23 (4) estimating the assessee's income at Rs. 1,80,000/-. On appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner it was reduced to Rs. 1,30,000/-.

2. In the accounts relating to the assessment year 1950-51 the assessee had claimed a sum of Rs. 4,09,786/- as establishment charges which included a sum of Rs. 71,949/- representing the annual bonus payable to the employees. This amount had actually not been paid but had been shown on the debit side. The assessee ran into financial difficulties and the bonus remained unpaid for some years. In the accounting year relevant to the assessment year 1957-58 with which we are now concerned a sum of Rs. 17,470/- was paid to the employees as bonus in full settlement and the balance of Rs. 54,479/- was credited to the profit and loss account. The Income-tax Officer treated the credit of Rs. 54,479 so made as income accruing in the year of account. The Appellate Tribunal while dealing with the appeal observed:

"Regarding the second contention, in the return made by the assessee for 1950-51, the assessee claimed bonus to employees and thereafter arrived at the business income at Rs. 14,555. The assessment, however, was completed under Section 23 (4) having as a guide the earlier year's assessment or a total income of about Rs. 130,000/-. No doubt in the assessment of 1949-50, there was a bonus claim too. From this feature alone, it is difficult to conclude that the Income-tax Officer had scrutinised the computation and had considered the bonus too in his estimate. Actually, in the manner the estimate has been made, it would appear that the book position had been given the go-by. Unless the department is able to identify any particular item of expense as having been already allowed as a deduction in an earlier assessment conclusively Sec. 10 (2A) is not available for recoupment. This contention too is accordingly accepted."

The High Court did not agree with the above view of the Tribunal although it appears that it did not disagree with the conclusion of the Tribunal that the record did not contain any indication that the Income tax Officer had made any allowance in respect of bonus for which provision had been made while making the assessment for the assessment year 1950-51. On that finding of the Tribunal it could hardly be regarded as established that either any allowance or deduction had been granted in respect of a trading liability of the assessment year 1950-51 or it had been proved that the assessee had obtained any benefit relating to such trading liability in the assessment year 1957-58 which would attract the provisions of S. 10 (2A) of the Act. That provision only applies when an allowance for deduction has been made in the assessment of any year in respect of any loss, expenditure or trading liability incurred by the assessee and subsequently during any previous year the assessee receives any amount in respect of such loss or expenditure or has obtained some benefit in respect of such trading liability by way of remission or cessation thereof in which event the amount received by him has to be deemed to be profits and gains. On the finding of the Tribunal the condition of Sec. 10 (2A) could not be said to have been satisfied and the addition of Rs. 54,479 made by the Income-tax Officer in the assessment for the year 1957-58 was not justified. It is apparent that the question whether an allowance had been granted or a deduction made in respect of a trading liability had to be decided by referring to the order relating to the assessment year 1950-51 and it could not be determined by drawing inferences from what was done in respect of the assessment of an earlier year.

3. In our judgment the finding of fact of the Appellate Tribunal did not warrant the answer returned by the High Court which is hereby discharged. The answer would thus be in the negative and in favour of the assessee. The appeal is accordingly allowed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Subedar, Appellant v. The State of U. P., Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 164 of 1967,
D/14-8-1970.

Constitution of India, Article 136 — Criminal appeal on special leave — Appreciation of evidence — Case depending on circumstantial evidence — Lower Courts holding accused guilty — Conclusions arrived at ignoring the principle that evidence must necessarily point only to the guilt of accused excluding any reasonable possibility of his innocence — Supreme Court can interfere with conclusion and proceed to review and reappraise evidence — Held on facts that there was no suspicion against accused and that he was involved as an after-thought and hence conviction set aside — Judgment appealed from Allahabad High Court, Reversed. 1952 SCR 1091 = 1953 Cri LJ 129, Hanumant v. State of
M. P. 8.

DUA, J.—Subedar, appellant, has come up on appeal by special leave from his conviction under Section 396 read with Sec. 109, I. P. C. and sentence of life imprisonment imposed by the temporary Civil and Sessions Judge, Hardoi and affirmed on appeal by the Allahabad High Court according to which the appellant's case is covered by the second and third clauses of Sec. 107, I. P. C. read with Explanation 2.

2. Seven persons, including the appellant, were tried, five under S. 396, I. P. C. and Subedar, appellant, and Tota under Sec. 396 read with Section 109, I. P. C. The trial court convicted six and acquitted one. The appeal of the convicted persons to the High Court failed. In this Court only Subedar has appealed.

3. According to the courts below Subedar and Tota were not amongst the dacoits. They are, however, stated to have assembled at the time of the dacoity which was committed on the night between the 21st and 22nd March, 1963. Subedar, it is not disputed, is a first cousin of the victims of the dacoity (Gajodhar and Chhotey Lal) and is a resident of village Zafarpur where the dacoity was committed. Gajodhar, it may be stated, was killed during the course of the dacoity. The circumstances on which the prosecution relied against Subedar in the High Court are:

(1) bitter enmity between Gajodhar and Chhotey Lal and Subedar and Tota who are fast friends on the other; (sic)

(2) the nature of the incident suggests that the primary object of the culprits was to commit the murder of Gajodhar and Chhotey Lal and though the culprits did not succeed in killing Chhotey Lal his property was looted as an incidental venture;

(3) on the evening preceding the night of dacoity, Subedar and Tota were seen in a grove south of the village within less than a mile from Zafarpur in the company of five or six persons including appellant, Gajju son of Chheda, armed with kantas, bhallas and lathis. On the night following the dacoity was committed at the house of Gajodhar and Chhotey Lal when Gajodhar was killed and Chhotey Lal seriously injured and in the commission of that offence Gajju son of Chheda participated;

(4) Subedar, who was inimical towards Gajodhar and Chhotey Lal tried to show false sympathy for them by raising an alarm at the time of dacoity;

(5) on the following morning Subedar lodged first information report by way of Peshabandi in order to put the police on wrong track.

4. None of these circumstances is, in our view, established on the record; nor can they be considered either singly or collectively to be sufficiently cogent to bring home to the appellant abetment of the offence under Section 397, I. P. C. beyond the possibility of a reasonable doubt. According to Chhotey Lal undoubtedly there was a dispute in regard to property between him and the appellant who is his first cousin and indeed court litigation was pending between them. But it seems to be an exaggeration to say that there was bitter enmity between the parties. In support of the second circumstance also we are unable to find any evidence on the record. The inference seems to be conjectural, not supported by the material on the record on any rational basis. The charge under Section 396, I. P. C. also postulates murder in the course of the commission of dacoity and does not quite support the High Court's view. In any event it does not implicate the appellant. After dealing with the last two circumstances we will turn to the third. Subedar, it is conceded, actually lodged the first information report (Exhibit Ka 7) on the morning of 22nd March. It was a written report covering nearly three printed pages. Now, merely because there was some dispute or litigation pending in courts between the parties it does not follow that the report was lodged by the appellant with the object of misleading the police or in order to forestall suspicion against him. From the contents of the report it is not possible to draw this inference. There is nothing misleading in it and certainly nothing indicative of a design to put the police on a wrong track. In fact its detailed nature suggests that it must have emanated from the persons who had taken full account of the loss and had even evaluated the articles stolen. The dacoity and murder it may be recalled was committed on the night between 21st and 22nd March. The written information was given by Subedar on the morning of the 22nd at 6-15 A. M. at the police station about 7 miles away. In these circumstances the suggestion of Peshabandi (to forestall suspicion) by the appellant seems to be wholly insupportable. Chhotey Lal, who appeared as P. W. 2, admitted in his cross-examination that Subedar, accused, had gone to the police station to lodge a report regarding the occurrence in question. Though he denied that he had sent Subedar to lodge the report he was constrained to admit that the following day at 9 or 10 O'clock the Sub-Inspector had also told him that Subedar had gone to the police station to lodge the report. He also admitted that when the Sub-Inspector informed him about Subedar having gone to lodge the report on his behalf he did not tell the Sub-Inspector that Subedar was inimical to him and his report should, therefore, be shown to him for scrutiny. The detailed nature of the report, the contents of which have not been shown to be incorrect, were presumably given to the appellant by Chhotey Lal. These circumstances support rather than negative the theory that Chhotey Lal had sent Subedar for lodging the report. There is, however, positive evidence in the statement of Dammar (P. W. 5) that Chhotey Lal had sent the appellant to lodge a report. Dammar (P. W. 5) had also accompanied Subedar along with Lila Pradhan and the chowkidar. We see no reason for disbelieving the testimony of P. W. 5. P. W. 17 Chaudhri Ishrat Hussain, Sub-Inspector, has stated that Subedar was arrested by him on the 15th April, 1963. The statement of Babu Ram (P. W. 7) and Khanna (P. W. 8), the two witnesses on whose evidence the appellant is convicted were recorded by him on the 28th March, 1963. It is, however, not known as to what they had stated during the investigation. A day earlier on 27th March, 1963 P. W. 17 had actually framed a charge-sheet against Jitta and Gajjoo son of Eupan Pasi. On the 9th April, 1963 an application by Chhotey Lal was received by P. W. 17 in which suspicion was cast on Subedar and Tota. Prior to 9th April, according to this witness, he had no proof of these two persons having participated in the dacoity though he admits that he had already recorded Chhotey Lal's statement before 9th April. In fact Sub-Inspector Deoray (P. W. 15) had recorded Chhotey Lal's statement as early as March 22, 1963 and it was from P. W. 15 that P. W. 17 took over the investigation. P. W. 15 does not say that Chhotey Lal or anyone else suspected the appellant. The foregoing discussion strongly indicates that the implication of Subedar, appellant, was an after-thought. Circumstances Nos. 4 and 5 have thus no basis and appear to be purely conjectural.

5. We may now appropriately refer to the statements of the two witnesses whose sole testimony appears to be the basis of the appellant's conviction. The third circumstance is founded on their evidence. Babu Ram (P. W. 7) whose statement was recorded in court on the 28th March, 1964 has deposed that about a year earlier he was returning to his village from the Consolidation Office at Thomharwa in the evening when the sun was about to set. Khanna and Bashir were with him. When they reached near the big grove lying to the south of village Daulatpur, he saw five or six persons in the grove. Out of them he knew only Tota and Subedar. Others were not known to him. They were armed with ballam, Kanta and lathis. On the same night a dacoity was committed at the residence of Gajodhar and he was killed by the dacoits. Khanna (P. W. 8) has deposed in similar terms. The contradictions elicited in their cross-examination would show that their statement on the question of the presence of the appellant in the grove cannot be safely relied upon. According to Babu Ram who had on the day in question gone from Katghara (which was also the village of Khanna, P. W. 8) to the Consolidation Office in village Thomharwa along with Khanna and Bashir, they had made merely oral request in regard to their grievance without submitting any application. Khanna (P. W. 8) has, on the other hand, stated that Bashir and Babu Ram met him only on his way back home. He professes to have submitted his application but expresses ignorance about Babu Ram and Bashir having done so because they had not met him in the Consolidation Office. This contradiction on the facts and circumstances of this case is very material and casts a serious doubt on the veracity of their version in regard to the circumstances in which they profess to have seen the appellant near the grove. In their cross-examination a suggestion was also thrown that Subedar had appeared as a defence witness in a case against one Jailal Chammar, in which case these two witnesses had appeared for the prosecution. This suggestion was apparently intended to indicate the motive on the part of these two witnesses to falsely implicate the appellant. The evidence of these two witnesses seems to us to be too infirm to carry conviction to their deposition that they saw the appellant as alleged. It is indeed somewhat surprising how their evidence was accepted by the courts below, without appropriate scrutiny, in holding the presence of the appellant in the grove. But even assuming that the appellant was seen by them as alleged, that by itself is not sufficient to connect him with the offence charged. It cannot be said that from this it follows as a necessary and the only rational or reasonable inference that the appellant was an abettor of the dacoity and murder. On a practical approach the reasonable possibility of his innocence cannot be ruled out. The Courts below have erroneously ignored this vital aspect.

6. At this stage we may refer to some evidence which was recorded in the High Court on appeal. It appears that on behalf of the present appellant and Tota it was complained in the High Court by their counsel that the circumstance that these two accused persons had been seen with the culprits who committed dacoity in question was not clearly put to them under Sec. 342, Criminal P. C. by the trial court, and that they were misled in their defence because the trial court had questioned them in a manner which suggested that they had been charged with having actually committed dacoity along with the other culprits. The High Court, therefore, summoned Subedar and Tota who were on bail. This order was passed on 11th August, 1966. Subedar was accordingly examined by the High Court on the 24th August and was confronted with the statements of Babu Ram and Khanna (P. W.s. 7 and 8). The appellant denied that he was ever in the grove as stated by these witnesses and stated that he had enmity with them and added that they were police witnesses. Subedar also expressed a desire to produce witnesses in his defence. Lila Pradhan was in the circumstances examined by the High Court as D. W. 4. It may be recalled that according to Dammar, Lila Pradhan was also one of the persons who had gone to lodge the report with him and Subedar. Lila Pradhan deposed in his examination-in-chief in the High Court that Chhotey Lal had asked Subedar to go and lodge a report in the police station about the dacoity in question. Subedar also raised an alarm at the time of the dacoity. This witness, after his cross-examination by the counsel for the State, was examined by the High Court at some length. He was village Pradhan for six years. His statement seems to be frank and straightforward. From the evidence on the record we are also inclined to think that the appellant must have been included in the original list of prosecution witnesses. This view finds support from the statement of sub-Inspector, Deorary, (P. W. 15) who had recorded the statements of Chhotey Lal and Dammar and of other witnesses on the day following the decoity. P. W. 17 seems to us to have wrongly denied this fact.

7. Apart from the material which we have just discussed there is no other relevant material to which our attention has been invited or which we have come across on this record relevant to the case against Subedar. From this it is crystal clear that there was no real suspicion against Subedar and that it was in April that he was involved as an after-thought presumably because of some other ulterior consideration. Both the trial Court and the High Court seem to us to have completely gone wrong in convicting Subedar.

8. The respondent's counsel strongly contended that this Court should not interfere on special leave appeal under Article 136 with the conclusions of the two Courts below holding the appellant guilty. We do not agree with this submission. This Court undoubtedly does not normally proceed to review and reappraise for itself the evidence in criminal cases when hearing appeals under Article 136. But when the judgment under appeal has resulted in grave miscarriage of justice by some misapprehension or mistake in the reading of evidence or by ignoring material evidence then it is not only empowered but is expected to interfere to promote the cause of justice. Article 136 is worded in very wide terms and the power conferred by it is not hedged in by any technical hurdles. This overriding and exceptional power has been vested in this Court to be exercised sparingly and only in furtherance of the cause of justice. In the present case which depends only on circumstantial evidence, the Courts below have completely ignored the warning given by this Court in Hanumant v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, 1952 SCR 1091 = (AIR 1952 SC 343) against the danger of conjectures and suspicions taking the place of proof. The caution was reiterated thus:

"It is well to remember that in cases where the evidence is of a circumstantial nature, the circumstances from which the conclusion of guilt is to be drawn should in the first instance be fully established, and all the facts so established should be consistent only with the hypothesis of the guilt of the accused. Again, the circumstances should be of a conclusive nature and tendency and they should be such as to exclude every hypothesis but the one proposed to be proved. In other words, there must be a chain of evidence so far complete as not to leave any reasonable ground for a conclusion consistent with the innocence of the accused and it must be such as to show that within all human probability the act must have been done by the accused." (pp. 1097-8)

Of course, the evidence on basic or primary facts has to be approached in the ordinary practical way but the conclusions in the case of circumstantial evidence must necessarily point only to the guilt of the accused excluding any reasonable possibility of his innocence. We are not satisfied that the evidence against the appellant in this case satisfies this test. The appeal accordingly succeeds. The order of the Court below as against the appellant is set aside and the appellant acquitted.

Constitution of India, Article 226 —
Petition for writ of mandamus directing excise department not to recover licence fee for period for which no liquor was supplied — Dismissal in limine on ground that contractual remedies were open — Dismissal is improper — Rights and obligations arising under a licence issued under statute cannot, without further investigation, be said to be purely contractual— Judgment of Madhya Pradesh High Court, Reversed. (Para 1)

IN/IN/D960/70/GKC/B

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHAH, J.—The appellant who is a licensee of a liquor shop applied to the High Court of Madhya Pradesh for a writ of mandamus directing the excise department of the State not to recover license fee for those days in respect of which liquor was not supplied to the appellant. The High Court summarily rejected the petition observing that the supply of liquor to the appellant was under a contract to the Government and "if the Government had committed a breach of the contract the remedy is elsewhere". It cannot, without further investigation, be said that the rights and obligations arising under a licence issued under a statutory authority are purely contractual. In our judgment the High Court was in error in summarily rejecting the petition.

2. We set aside the order of the High Court and direct that the High Court do issue Rule to the State and decide the case on the merits.

3. In this Court the appellant has filed copies of certain correspondence relating to the payment of compensation in respect of those days on which liquor was not supplied. It appears from a perusal of that correspondence that the State had not adopted the attitude that they will insist upon recovering or retaining the licence fee notwithstanding that they had not supplied the liquor to the liquor shopkeepers.

4. The appeal is allowed. There will be no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

Constitution of India, Articles 226 and 136 — Interim relief — High Court can pass ex parte orders granting immediate relief to petitioner —

Single Judge passing order adversely affecting rights of non-petitioners without giving notice to them — Order not granting any relief to petitioners — Order held to have caused grave injustice to non-petitioners justifying interference by Supreme Court even though the order was interlocutory and was passed by a Single Judge — Judgment of Allahabad High Court (Lucknow Bench), D/- 2-6-1969, Reversed. (Paras 4 and 6)

GROVER, J. :— This appeal is directed against an order of a learned single judge of the Allahabad High Court (Lucknow Bench). The facts speak for themselves and the appeal must succeed.

2. The Saharanpur-Delhi route is an inter-State route the major portion of which lies in the State of Uttar Pradesh. In exercise of the powers conferred by Section 47 (3) of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, hereinafter called the "Act", the Transport Authority fixed the strength of operators who could ply stage carriages on the aforesaid route at 100. The appellants, who are 15 in number, were among those operators to whom permits had been issued in December 1957 and they were plying their vehicles since that date. They were initially granted permits for a period of three years but their permits were renewed subsequently at successive intervals. In October 1959 a notification was issued by the State of Uttar Pradesh under Section 68-D (3) of the Act declaring the Delhi-Saharanpur route as a notified route to the total exclusion of all private operators including the appellants. The notification further provided that the U. P. Government Roadways would have a monopoly of plying buses on the said route. Although 100 operators were affected by the said notification only 50 out of them including the appellants challenged the validity of the said notification by means of writ petitions in the Allahabad High Court. These petitions were allowed in October 1961 and the High Court directed the State of Uttar Pradesh not to enforce the scheme against the 50 writ petitioners. The State Government was, however, free to enforce the scheme against the remaining operators who had not preferred writ petitions. The result, therefore, was that the operators who had succeeded in the writ petitions, including the appellants, and the U. P. Government Roadways jointly operated the vehicles on the Delhi-Saharanpur route.

3. In May 1968 the Regional Transport Authority rejected the applications of the appellants for renewal of the permits. The applications of the present respondents Nos. 3 and 4 were rejected on the ground that the route was a notified route and no permit could be granted to them. These respondents had applied for fresh permits being granted to them. The appellants and respondents 3 and 4 preferred appeals to the State Transport Appellate Tribunal. The appellants succeeded before the Tribunal and their permits were renewed upto April 28, 1972. The appeals of respondents Nos. 3 and 4 were dismissed. In May 1969 respondents Nos. 1 to 4 filed a writ petition in the High Court challenging the decision of the Appellate Tribunal. Apart from other respondents the appellants were also joined as respondents in the writ petition. The writ petition was admitted by the Division Bench sitting at Lucknow on May 14, 1969 and the following order was made, "Admit, issue notice." The stay petition which had also been filed was directed to be put up for orders on the next day. On May 15, 1969 the Bench made the following order:

"Mr. Fanthome, the learned counsel for the petitioners, and Mr. Umesh Chandra, the learned Standing Counsel, have jointly suggested that the hearing of the writ petition itself be concluded at a very early date. They have jointly suggested that the writ petition be heard on 4th of August, 1969.

Office shall show this case in the list of that date.

Learned counsel for the parties have also suggested that in the meantime the Government may put more buses on the route in question in order to meet the shortage caused by the exit of respondents Nos. 3 to 17 consequent to the order of this Court".

On May 19, 1969 appellant No. 9 who was a respondent in the writ petition before the High Court filed appearance through an advocate. Similarly on May 21, 1969, appellant No. 1 filed his appearance. The High Court closed for the vacation on May 23, 1969. It appears that respondent No. 1 and the other respondents filed a petition before the Vacation Judge which came up for hearing on June 2, 1969 and he made an order which must be set out in extenso:—

"This is an application of Moolchand and others stating that in compliance with the order passed by a Bench of this Court on 15-5-1969 on their application (C. M. An. No. 763 (W) of 1969) the Secretary to the Regional Transport Authority has not restrained respondents Nos. 3 to 17 from plying their stage carriage buses on the Saharanpur to Delhi route on the pretext that the order of the Bench dated 15-5-1969 was vague. The Chief Standing Counsel is present and has no objection to the order dated 15-5-1969, which was passed by a Bench of which I was also a member, being clarified today. It may be recalled that in the writ petition in which C. M. An. 763 (W) of 1969 was filed by Mool Chand and others, the present applicants had challenged the renewal of the permits in favour of respondents Nos. 3 to 17 as illegal. The order which was passed by the Bench on 15-5-1969 in C. M. An. No. 763 (W) of 1969, is therefore clarified and it is made clear that respondents Nos. 3 to 17 are restrained from plying their stage carriage buses on the Saharanpur to Delhi route. It is further clarified that Roadways may ply buses on the route in question in order to meet the shortage caused by the above restrain order which has been passed against operation of the stage carriage buses of respondents Nos. 3 to 17."

4. It was suggested before the Division Bench on May 15, 1969 by counsel for the writ petitioners and the learned Standing Counsel that the Government might put more buses on the route in order to meet the shortage which would be caused by the "exit of the respondents 3 to 17 consequent to the order of this Court". It is not at all comprehensible to which order this had reference and how it was assumed that respondents 3 to 17 in the writ petition were to be prohibited from plying their buses as they had succeeded before the Appellate Tribunal and their permits had been renewed upto April 28, 1972. So long as the order of the Tribunal stood and was not set aside by the High Court there was no question of their so called exit from the field of operators on the Delhi-Saharanpur route unless the High Court made a proper order after hearing them. Before the Vacation Judge it was sought to be represented that the Secretary to the Regional Transport Authority had not restrained respondents 3 to 17 in the petition from plying their stage carriage buses on the pretext that the order of the Bench dated May 15, 1969 was vague. The Vacation Judge proceeded to clarify the order by saying that respondents 3 to 17 before him (the present appellants) would be restrained from plying their stage carriage buses and that the U. P. Government Roadways could ply their buses in order to meet the shortage caused thereby. The result of this order was that without having any notice or opportunity to present their case the appellants were debarred from plying their stage carriage buses and the Government Roadways which had not filed any writ petition and had not asked for any relief from the High Court were enabled to ply their buses in place of the appellants. Neither the Division Bench nor the Vacation Judge thought of issuing a notice to the appellants to show cause in the matter. Even though the orders were made at the interim stage and in miscellaneous proceedings the rules of natural justice could not have been simply ignored in the manner in which it was done merely because the Standing Counsel, who was representing the State or the U. P. Government Roadways, gave his consent or joined in the suggestion made on behalf of the petitioners that in place of the appellants the U. P. Government Roadways be permitted to ply their buses on the route in question. There can be no manner of doubt that the High Court could pass an ex parte stay order to give immediate relief to the writ petitioners but in the present case the order which was made afforded no relief to them but was meant for stopping the plying of buses by the appellants and enabling the U. P. Government Roadways to ply buses instead. If the High Court considered it necessary in the circumstances of the case to make such an order the only proper and just course to follow was to hear the appellants and then proceed to make the order.

5. We are further unable to find any justification or reason for the order which was made on June 2, 1969 by the Vacation Judge which clearly modifies and varies the order made on May 15, 1969 by the Division Bench. The Division Bench never restrained the appellants from plying their stage carriage buses during the pendency of the writ petition. If it was intended that the appellants should be so restrained the learned Judges would have made an order in clearer terms.

6. We are fully alive to the course which could have been followed by the appellants of moving the High Court to vacate the impugned order. It is equally true that this court is very reluctant to interfere in interlocutory orders but the present case is of such a nature that we are satisfied that there has been a grave miscarriage of justice. We would, therefore allow the appeal and set aside the order of the Vacation Judge made on June 2, 1969. The appellants shall be entitled to their costs in this court.

Appeal allowed.

J. M. SHELAT AND
C. A. VAIDIALINGAM, JJ.

Dr. Raghu Nath, Appellant v. Competent Officer, Delhi and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 36 of 1967, D/- 20-8-1970.

Evacuee Interest (Separation) Act (1951), S. 10 and Rule 11B of the Rules made under the Act — Mortgagee becoming evacuee and his interest vesting in Custodian — Leases and allotments by Custodian — Payment of mortgage debt by mortgagor — Competent Officer can accept payment but cannot give vacant possession to mortgagor — He can give only symbolical possession to him — (Administration of Evacuee Property (Central) Rules (1950), R. 14) — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 35).

The result of the relevant provisions of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act and the Evacuee Interest (Separation) Act and the rules made under these Acts is that though the Competent Officer must accept the mortgage amount when tendered by a mortgagor and the mortgage debt thereupon would be satisfied, he cannot exercise the power to redeem the mortgaged property and order the Custodian to deliver up its vacant possession to the mortgagor in the absence of any agreement between the mortgagor and the Custodian, and that in exercising his jurisdiction under Sec. 10 the Competent Officer cannot direct the Custodian to cancel or vary the terms of the leases or allotments made or granted by the latter firstly because he has no such power under Sec. 10 or any other provision of the Separation Act, and secondly, because such an order would amount to compelling the Custodian to act in a manner contrary to the provisions of Rule 14 of Administration of Evacuee Property (Central) Rules (1950). The only thing which the Competent Officer can do is to accept the mortgage amount whereupon interest would cease to run. In the absence of agreement the mortgagor-claimant cannot demand from the Competent Officer that the latter should accept the mortgage amount tendered by him and direct simultaneous delivery of possession of the mortgaged property. The power to redeem the mortgaged property being subject to Rule 11B(b), the only thing that the Competent Officer can at the most do is to order symbolical possession. If after the Competent Officer has ordered sale of the property and satisfaction of the mortgage debt from the sale proceeds thereof, the mortgagor has paid up full mortgage amount and the Competent Officer has accepted the same under Sec. 10 Proviso and has paid the amount to the Custodian, the order for sale cannot stand and has to be set aside. As the mortgage stands discharged the Competent Officer is bound to direct symbolical possession though not vacant possession of the property to the mortgagor. AIR 1960 All 626 & 1969-3 SCC 79; Relied on. (Paras 9, 10, 12)

The order for costs of the appeal would ordinarily follow the result, but in view of the fact that the Competent Officer was entitled to pass the order of sale in the circumstances then prevailing it is fair and equitable, though this order is set aside, that the parties should bear their own costs.

(1960) AIR 1960 All 626 (V 47) = 1960 All LJ 492, Ek Nawaz Khan v. Competent Officer	11

SHELAT, J.—In 1933 the appellant built a bungalow situate at 27, Curzon Road, New Delhi on a plot acquired by him under a permanent lease from the Secretary of State for India. In 1943 he mortgaged the said property with possession in favour of one K. B. Bunyad Hussain but obtained a lease thereof at the same time from the mortgagee and continued to reside therein as a tenant. In November 1949, the mortgagee left for Pakistan whereupon the Custodian of Evacuee Property under the Administration of Evacuee Property Act, 1950 (hereinafter referred to as the Administration Act) declared him to be an evacuee and his interest in the said property as the mortgagee as evacuee property. The appellant alleged that sometime in November 1949 the Custodian forcibly dispossessed him and either allotted or let out, or allowed the said premises to be occupied by certain persons. In 1954, the appellant made an application to the Competent Officer under the Evacuee Interest (Separation) Act, 1951 (hereinafter referred to as the Separation Act) for separating his interest as the mortgagor and tenant in the said property. In those proceedings a sum of Rs. 1,45,735/- was ultimately held to be due as the mortgage debt under the said mortgage. The appellant claimed that he was entitled to obtain vacant possession of the said property against payment by him of the mortgage debt. The claim was rejected on the ground that there was no agreement between the appellant and the Custodian for getting the vacant possession and also on the ground that the Competent Officer, under the Separation Act, had no power to direct the Custodian to hand over to the appellant vacant possession. From that time onwards the appellant made diverse applications to the Competent Officer and the Appellate Officer under the Separation Act for obtaining vacant possession against payment of the mortgage debt. In one such application made in 1958 he alleged that a compromise had been arrived at between him and the Custodian under which he would pay the mortgage debt and the Custodian thereupon would simultaneously hand over to him vacant possession. By his order dated March 23, 1959, the Appellate Officer, however, held that no such compromise had been entered into by the Custodian and that the correspondence between the appellant and that authority merely indicated that what was agreed to was that upon the appellant lodging certain verified claims an open portion shown as A, B, C and D in the plan of the property would be handed over to him. On this finding the Appellate Officer dismissed the appellant's application as he had neither paid the mortgage money nor put in the verified claims as suggested in the said correspondence and confirmed the order of the Competent Officer under which the property had been ordered to be sold in the absence of any agreement with the Custodian or the payment of the mortgage debt.

2. The appellant then filed a writ petition in the High Court of Punjab (in the Circuit Bench at Delhi) for quashing the said order of sale and for a direction to the Competent Officer to hand over vacant possession against payment by him of the mortgage debt. A learned Single Judge dismissed the petition holding that the Competent Officer had no jurisdiction to order such vacant possession against the Custodian or against the tenants or allottees inducted on the property by the Custodian. The Letters Patent appeal against that judgment and order was also dismissed. The appellant then filed the present appeal after obtaining special leave from this Court.

3. It is not disputed that until the time when the Competent Officer passed his order for sale of the property and the Appellate Officer confirmed it the appellant had not paid the mortgage amount, nor was there any agreement between him and the Custodian whereunder the latter would hand over vacant possession of the property against payment of the mortgage debt. However it is conceded by counsel for respondents 1 and 3 that the appellant has since then paid the entire mortgage debt and the Competent Officer has under Sec. 10 of the Separation Act accepted that amount. Two questions on these facts, therefore, arise for determination; (1) whether the order for sale passed by the Competent Officer and confirmed by the Appellate Officer was rightly passed although the appellant had repeatedly offered to pay the mortgage debt on condition, however, that he would be given vacant possession at the same time, and (2) assuming that the Competent Officer had no power to direct the Custodian to hand over vacant possession, what was the effect of the repayment of the mortgage debt by the appellant since then and the acceptance thereof by the Competent Officer.

4. The rights in the property in question which vested in the Custodian were those of the mortgagee on his being declared an evacuee and his rights as such mortgagee in the property in question as evacuee property. Under the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 the interest which the Custodian could claim was the interest in the property transferred to the mortgagee for securing repayment of the money advanced by him. Since the mortgage was usufructuary, the mortgagee, and after his having been declared an evacuee, the Custodian, could claim and retain possession till the mortgage debt was paid and the mortgage was discharged. If the property is let out in the meantime, the mortgagee and those claiming his interest therein are entitled to receive the rents and profits accruing from the property in lieu of interest or towards part payment of the mortgage debt. Under Sec. 60 of that Act, the mortgagor has a right at any time after the principal amount has become due to require the mortgagee on payment or tender of the mortgage debt (a) to deliver to him the mortgage deed and all other documents relating to the mortgaged property which are in the mortgagee's possession or power, (b) to deliver possession where the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property and (c) to retransfer the mortgaged property to him or to such third person as he may direct at his cost. Under Sec. 76, the mortgagee in possession has to manage the property as a person of ordinary prudence would manage it if it were his own. Under Sec. 83, the mortgagor, provided his right of redemption is not barred, may deposit in the court where he might have instituted a suit for redemption to the account of the mortgagee the mortgage debt then due. The court thereupon has to issue a notice to the mortgagee and on the mortgagee stating the amount due to him and his willingness to accept the money so deposited in full discharge of the mortgage debt, pay the amount to the mortgagee on his depositing the mortgage deed and all other documents relating to the mortgaged property. Where the mortgagee is in possession of the property, the court before paying the amount has to ask him to deliver possession thereof to the mortgagor. When the mortgagor has tendered or deposited in court the mortgage debt together with interest thereon and has done all that is to be done by him to enable the mortgagee to take such amount out of court, and a notice, as aforesaid, has been served on the mortgagee under S. 83 interest ceases to run. If the mortgagee thereafter refuses to accept the amount so deposited or to deliver the mortgage deed and other documents or possession of the property where it is in his possession, the remedy of the mortgagor is to file a suit for redemption. The position, therefore, is that upon the mortgage being paid off, the mortgagor is entitled to have the property restored to him free from the mortgagee's security. The repayment of the debt would be made against delivery of possession and of the mortgage deed and other documents, and these have to be simultaneous transactions. A tender of the mortgage deed or a deposit thereof in court conditional upon the mortgagee then and there delivering possession or executing reconveyance, if required, and handing over the deeds would be a good tender so that if it were to be refused interest would cease running. It follows that a mortgagee is not permitted to deal with the property in such a way that upon discharge of the debt the property cannot be restored. (see Fisher and Lightwood's Law of Mortgage (8th Ed.) p. 482).

5. Is the position of a mortgagor any the different than under the Transfer of Property Act by reason of the evacuee property legislation? In other words, could not the appellant have tendered to the Competent Officer the mortgage amount due by him on condition that he should be given physical and not merely symbolical possession of the mortgaged property.

6. Upon the mortgagee being declared an evacuee and his interest as such mortgagee in the premises in question an evacuee property, his interest in the mortgaged property vested under Sec. 8 of the Administration Act in the Custodian from the date of the notice issued under Sec. 7 of the Act. Under Sec. 8 (4) any person in possession of the mortgaged property would be deemed thenceforth to be holding the property on behalf of the Custodian and would be bound on demand by him to surrender possession to him. The Act having under Sec. 4 an overriding effect on any other law for the time being in force or any instrument having effect by virtue of any such Act, the Custodian, under the powers conferred on him by Section 10, could take all such measures he might consider necessary for securing, administering, preserving and managing any evacuee property including transferring "in any manner whatsoever" the evacuee property "notwithstanding to the contrary contained in any law or agreement relating thereto." Under Section 12, the Custodian is empowered, notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, to cancel any allotment, terminate any lease or amend the terms of such lease or agreement under which any evacuee property is held or occupied by a person whether such allotment, lease or agreement was granted or entered into before or after the commencement of the Act. Under sub-sec. (3), he is authorised to eject such person and take possession, if such person fails to surrender possession on demand made by him in the manner provided by Sec. 9, i. e., by even using such force as would be necessary for taking possession. It is conceded by the respondents that under these powers the Custodian had taken over possession of the mortgaged property and the property has since then been in possession of persons who were either allotted portions of it or who were inducted therein as tenants by the Custodian. It is also conceded that the Custodian has refused, notwithstanding demands made by the appellant, to evict these persons from the property and hand over vacant possession to the appellant even on the appellant tendering the mortgage amount. This was presumably done by reason of the fact that though Section 12 empowers him to cancel an allotment or a tenancy made or created by him, Rule 14 (2) of the Administration of Evacuee Property (Central) Rules, 1950 lays down that in the case of a lease or an allotment granted by the Custodian he may evict a person on a ground justifying eviction of a tenant under a law relating to the Rent Control or for any violation of the conditions of the lease or allotment. From the provisions dealing with the vesting of the evacuee property, the powers of the Custodian, appeals and revisions from his order and the overriding nature of the provisions of the Act it is clear that the Administration Act is a self-contained code.

7. In 1951, Parliament passed the Evacuee Interest (Separation) Act, LXIV of 1951 (hereinafter referred to as the Separation Act). The Statement of Objects and Reasons shows that it was passed on account of the difficulty of administering evacuee properties in which there were both evacuee and non-evacuee interests and to solve the hardship felt by non-evacuees, who by reason of such properties being in possession of the Custodian, were unable to obtain satisfaction of their claims in view of the prohibitive provisions of the Administration Act and in particular its Section 17. The Act, as its long title declares, was passed for the separation of interests of evacuees from those of non-evacuee persons in composite properties. Sections 4 and 5 of the Act provide for the appointment of Competent Officers and their jurisdiction. Section 7 provides for submission of claims by a person claiming interest in a composite property. Clause (e) of sub-sec. (2) requires that where a claim is made by a mortgagor the total amount due on the mortgage debt and the particulars necessary to determine the same should be set out in such a claim. Section 8 provides for an inquiry to be made by the Competent Officer and provides that the order to be made by him shall contain, amongst other things, the amount due to the evacuee in a case where the claim is made by a mortgagor. Sub-sec. (2) of Sec. 8, however, provides that where the Custodian has determined that the property in question or any interest therein is evacuee property, such determination is binding on the competent officer. The proviso to that sub-section lays down that nothing contained in sub-sec. (2) shall debar the competent officer from determining the mortgage debt in respect of such property or any interest therein or from separating the interest of the evacuee from that of the claimant under Sec. 10. Section 10 provides that notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any law or contract or any decree or order of the civil court or other authority, the competent officer may, subject to any rules that may be made in this behalf, take all such measures as he may consider necessary for the purpose of separating the interest of the evacuee from those of the claimant in any composite property and in particular may:

"(b) in the case of any claim of a mortgagor or a mortgagee,—

(i) pay to the Custodian or the claimant the amount payable under the mortgage debt and redeem the mortgaged property; or

(ii) sell the mortgaged property for satisfaction of the mortgage debt and distribute the sale proceeds thereof; or

(iii) partition the property between the mortgagor and the mortgagee having regard to the share to which the mortgagee would be entitled in lieu of his claim;"

Clause (c) empowers him to adopt a combination of all or some of these measures. The proviso to the section provides that in any case where the claimant is a mortgagor and tenders the amount due, the competent officer shall accept the same in full satisfaction of the mortgage debt. The competent officer, by virtue of the proviso, is thus under an obligation, where the claimant is a mortgagor and tenders the mortgage amount due, to accept such amount in full satisfaction of the mortgage debt and thereupon interest on the mortgage amount would cease to run. Under clause (b), he is also empowered in such a case to redeem the mortgaged property.

8. The argument was that where the mortgage amount is tendered by the mortgagor and the competent officer accepts it in satisfaction of the debt due under the mortgage, the mortgage debt is satisfied, interest thereon ceases to run and the mortgage is discharged. Consequently, there would be no question of the competent officer adopting any of the measures provided in sub-clauses (ii) and (iii) of clause (b) of the section, that is to say, there could be no occasion for him either to sell the property for satisfaction of the mortgage debt or to partition the property between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, as, on satisfaction of the mortgage debt the mortgage is discharged and the mortgagee's interest in the mortgaged property ceases or comes to an end. The only measure which in that event he can adopt would be that under clause (b) (i), i. e., to pay to the Custodian the mortgage debt and redeem the mortgaged property. It was said that that being the position under Sec. 10, the appellant was entitled to tender the mortgage amount in satisfaction of the debt due under the mortgage on condition that the mortgage should be redeemed and possession of the property given to him. The Competent Officer in the proceedings before him under Section 7 was bound to accept the mortgage amount and redeem the mortgaged property. The argument would be valid if Section 10 had been untrammelled and the powers given therein to the Competent Officer were not made subject to the Rules which may be made under the Act. The Legislature, it seems had a purpose in making the powers contained in Sec. 10 and their exercise by the Competent Officer subject to the rules. It must have been aware of (i) that the Administration Act is, as aforesaid, a self-contained code; (ii) that the Custodian appointed thereunder is not an authority subject to the power or control of the Competent Officer and (iii) that the Administration Act, by Sections 10 and 12 thereof, confers several powers on the Custodian including the power to transfer the property vested in him. He can, therefore, create a lease or grant allotment and thus induct on the property tenants or allottees.

Under Sec. 12 of that Act the Custodian has been empowered to cancel or terminate a lease or allotment. But no such power is conferred on the Competent Officer either under Sec. 10 or under any other section of the Separation Act, nor have the powers of the Custodian been made subject to the powers of the Competent Officer or his orders. On the other hand, it would appear from a reading of the provisions of the Separation Act that the object of enacting it was to enable non-evacuees to have their interests separated in composite properties and to grant power to the Competent Officer to achieve that object. But we do not find anywhere in either of the two Acts any provision by which the Custodian is made subject to the power or control of the Competent Officer or enabling the Competent Officer to pass any order which would curtail or otherwise affect the powers of the Custodian. It would seem that the two Acts have different objects and schemes and the authorities established under them are independent of each other. The powers conferred on the Competent Officer had, therefore, to be so provided that they could be exercised in harmony and consistently with the provisions of the Administration Act and the duties and functions of the Custodian thereunder. It was for that reason that the Legislature laid down in Section 10 of the Separation Act that the powers conferred thereunder on the Competent Officer were to be subject to the rules made under that Act. Had it not been so, there would have resulted a conflict in the exercise of the respective powers given to the Custodian and the Competent Officer by the two Acts, and consequently, a failure in the smooth working out of the provisions of the two Acts.

9. Rule 11B of the Rules made under the Separation Act provides that a Competent Officer "having regard to the provisions of the proviso to Sec. 10 of the Act" shall, for the purpose of separating the evacuee interest from other interests in a composite property, adopt any of the measures in the order of preference set out therein. Clause (b) of that rule provides that in the case of a claim by a mortgagor or a mortgagee (i) where both the Custodian and claimant agree, the Competent Officer can exercise the powers conferred on him under sub-clause (i) or sub-clause (ii) of clause (b) of Section 10 of the Act, and (ii) where there is no such agreement, he can sell the mortgaged property for satisfaction of the mortgage debt and distribute the sale proceeds thereof. The effect of this rule read in conjunction with Section 10 of the Act, however harsh it may apparently seem to be, is that though the Competent Officer has to accept the mortgage amount tendered by a mortgagor and thus discharge the mortgage debt and interest thereupon ceases to run on the principal amount and though he can adopt any one of the measures set out in Sec. 10, including redemption of the mortgage, he cannot order such redemption and direct the Custodian to deliver vacant possession of the property in the absence of an agreement between the Custodian and the mortgagor-claimant. It follows that in the absence of such agreement the mortgagor-claimant cannot demand from the Competent Officer that the latter should accept the mortgage amount tendered by him and direct simultaneous delivery of possession of the mortgaged property. The power to redeem the mortgaged property being subject to R. 11B (b), the only thing that the Competent Officer can at the most do is to order symbolical possession, but he cannot direct the Custodian to give vacant possession. The reason is clear, for, such an order would in effect be an order directing the Custodian to cancel the leases or allotments granted by him and eject the tenants or allottees from the property. Such an order would at once be in conflict with R. 14 of the Administration of Evacuee Property (Central) Rules, 1950. That rule provides that while exercising his power under Section 12 of that Act, namely, the power to cancel or vary the terms of a lease or allotment, the Custodian, in the case of a lease or allotment granted by him, can evict a person only on any of the grounds justifying eviction of a tenant under any rent control law for the time being in force in the State concerned or for any violation of the conditions of the lease or the allotment. Cl. 4 of that rule further lays down that before cancelling or varying the terms of the lease or before evicting any leases the Custodian must serve a show cause notice on such lessee and afford him a reasonable opportunity of being heard. If the custodian is satisfied on hearing the concerned lessee that he is not liable to eviction under a rent control Act in force in the State where the property is situate or has not contravened any of the provisions of the lease, he cannot cancel the lease nor can he evict the lessee except only as provided by clause 5 of that rule on the ground that such eviction is necessary or expedient for the preservation or proper administration or management of such property or for carrying out any other object of the Act. He, therefore, cannot evict a tenant or an allottee on the ground that it is necessary to do so for the separation of an interest of a non-evacuee mortgagor as that would not be one of the purposes of the Administration Act.

10. The result which emerges from the discussion of the relevant provisions of the two Acts and the rules thereunder made is (1) that though the Competent Officer must accept the mortgage amount when tendered by a mortgagor and the mortgage debt thereupon would be satisfied, he cannot exercise the power to redeem the mortgaged property and order the Custodian to deliver up its vacant possession to the mortgagor in the absence of any agreement between the mortgagor and the Custodian, and (2) that in exercising his jurisdiction under Sec. 10 the Competent Officer cannot direct the Custodian to cancel or vary the terms of the leases or allotments made or granted by him, firstly because he has no such power under Sec. 10 or any other provision of the Separation Act, and secondly, because such an order would amount to compelling the Custodian to act in a manner contrary to the provisions of the aforesaid Rule 14. The exercise of the power to redeem being subject to the rules, it would not be competent for the Competent Officer, by reason of Rule 11B (b), to order delivery of possession by the Custodian in the absence of an agreement between him and the mortgagor-claimant.

11. In view of this position, the appellant could not have insisted that he would tender or pay the mortgage debt only against delivery of vacant possession of the property in the absence of any agreement between him and the Custodian. The only thing which the Competent Officer could do in the circumstances was to accept the mortgage amount whereupon interest would cease to run. It is not in dispute that the appellant, insisting as he was all throughout upon being given vacant and not merely symbolical possession, did not actually tender or make payment of the mortgage debt. The mortgage debt, therefore, remained outstanding. The mortgage also stood intact, and therefore, the only measure which the Competent Officer could adopt and which in fact he adopted was to order sale of the property and satisfy the mortgage debt from the sale proceeds thereof. The order which he passed and which was confirmed by the Appellate Officer was in the circumstances then prevailing validly and competently made. The appellant's grievance against it, therefore could not be sustained. (Cf. in this connection the position of an auction purchaser as decided in Ek Nawaz Khan v. The Competent Officer, AIR 1960 All 626).

12. But it is conceded that since the passing of the said order the appellant has paid up the full mortgage amount and the Competent Officer has, as he was bound to do under Section 10, proviso, accepted that amount. Presumably that amount has been paid by him to the Custodian. Therefore, the mortgage debt is no longer outstanding. Though this event has happened after the impugned order was passed, we must in fairness take notice of the fact that the mortgage debt is no longer outstanding and the mortgaged property is now free from the mortgagee's security, and therefore, from the interest vested in the Custodian. It is true that the Competent Officer, as already stated, can adopt any of the three measures set out in Sec. 10 (b) of the Separation Act or adopt a combination of all or some of them, but as emerging from the discussion above, he cannot redeem the property and order delivery of vacant possession in the absence of an agreement between the Custodian and the appellant. That is quite clear. But the order of sale passed by him and confirmed by the Appellate Officer also cannot stand, firstly, because the mortgage debt now stands satisfied, and secondly because he can order sale only for satisfaction of the mortgage debt and for distribution of the sale proceeds thereof between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. There being now no question of the satisfaction of the mortgage debt since it now stands satisfied and the property being now freed from the mortgagee's security, the order for sale cannot stand and cannot be allowed to stand. At the same time the Competent Officer cannot order the Custodian to deliver vacant possession although the appellant has paid the mortgage amount and the Competent Officer has accepted it in satisfaction of the mortgage debt. In view of Ss. 10 and 12 of the Administration Act, the powers and duties of the Custodian thereunder and under the rules made under that Act, the provisions of Sec. 10 of the Separation Act and Rule 11B of the rules made thereunder, the only thing that could be offered and given to the appellant was symbolical possession of the property. Such a result, no doubt, would be inconvenient, and may even appear to be harsh and unfair as the appellant would be driven to file proceedings for eviction of tenants and allottees now in possession of the property. (See All India Film Corporation Ltd. v. Raja Gyan Nath, Civil Appeals Nos. 2416 and 2417 of 1966, D/- 26-9-1969 (SC)).

13. In view of the payment of the mortgage amount by the appellant and the acceptance of it by the Competent Officer, the order directing sale has now become untenable and has, therefore, to be set aside. The mortgage stands discharged and the Competent Officer is bound to direct symbolical possession of the mortgaged property to the appellant. To this extent the appeal succeeds. The order for costs of the appeal would ordinarily follow the result, but in view of the fact that the Competent Officer was entitled to pass the order of sale in the circumstances then prevailing it is fair and equitable, though this order is set aside, that the parties should bear their own costs.

Appeal partly allowed.

K. S. HEGDE AND A. N. GROVE, JJ.

The Union of India and others, Appellants v. Mohanlal Ishwar Dass Panchal and another, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 557 of 1966, D/- 31-8-1970.

Administration of Evacuee Property Act (1950), Section 2 (f) (as it stood before Amending Act 11 of 1953) — Custodian of Evacuee Property holding 51 per cent or more shares of a company — Property of that company becomes evacuee property. Spl. C. A. No. 1055 of 1965 (Guj). Reversed.

If the Custodian of Evacuee Property holds 51 per cent or more of the shares of any company then the property of that company becomes an evacuee property. The shares of the company which had already vested in the Custodian under the law as stood before 1953 are not diverted by the Amending Act of 1953 as the amendment was not given retrospective effect. (Paras 8, 9)

Where 51 per cent shares of a company "A" were held by another company "B" which was declared evacuee in 1951 as its all shareholders had become evacuee, the property of the company "A" also becomes evacuee property. Spl. C. A. No. 1055 of 1965 (Guj), Reversed. (Para 11)

HEGDE, J.:— This appeal by certificate arises from the judgment of a Division Bench of the Gujarat High Court in Spl. Civil Appln. No. 1055 of 1965 on its file.

2. The 1st respondent herein is the Chairman of the Board of Directors of Kathiawar Industries Ltd. The Custodian of Evacuee properties sought to proceed against that company under Section 10 (2) (ii) of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act, 1950 (to be hereinafter referred to as the 'Act'). The 1st respondent challenged those proceedings before the High Court of Gujarat by means of a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution. The High Court has allowed that petition and quashed the impugned proceedings. Hence this appeal.

3. The issued capital of Kathiawar Industries Ltd., is Rs. 5 lacs. The total number of shares subscribed, preferential as well as ordinary are 1,21,961. One of the shareholders of that company is a company by name Bhawani Investment Company Ltd. That company held 12,100 shares. The case of the appellants is that all the shareholders of Bhawani Investment Co. Ltd., had become evacuees and therefore the Bhawani Investment Co. Ltd. has become an evacuee property. The 1st respondent denied the fact that all the shareholders of Bhawani Investment Co. Ltd., had become evacuees. That issue had not been gone into by the High Court. The High Court has assumed for the purpose of this case that all the shareholders of Bhawani Investment Co. Ltd., had become evacuees but it opined that that fact cannot make the Bhawani Investment Co. Ltd., an evacuee property. It observed that an incorporated company has a personality of its own different from that of its shareholders and that personality does not disappear with the transfer of the shares of its shareholders.

4. The appellants sought to take over the management of Kathiawar Industries Ltd., on the ground that more than 51 per cent of the shares of that company had vested in the Custodian of Evacuee Property. Admittedly if the property of the Bhawani Investment Co. Ltd., is held not to be an evacuee property then all the shares of that company cannot automatically vest in the Custodian. Only the shares of the evacuee shareholders can vest in him. The 1st respondent has challenged the right of the Custodian to claim to take over the management of Kathiawar Industries Ltd., on various grounds. The High Court has not adjudicated upon most of those grounds because it was of the opinion that its decision as regards the shares of Bhawani Investment Co. Ltd., coupled with the decision of that High Court in another proceeding as regards another block of shares is sufficient to take the case out of the purview of Section 10 (2) (ii) of the Act. Hence all that we have to consider in this appeal is whether the High Court was right in holding that even if all the shareholders of Bhawani Investment Co. Ltd., had become evacuees, the property of that company cannot be held to have vested in the Custodian. For the purpose of this appeal, we shall proceed on the basis that all the shareholders of Bhawani Investment Co. Ltd., had become evacuees at the relevant time and on that basis proceed to examine whether the property of that company had vested in the Custodian of Evacuee Property.

5. The case for the appellants is that all the shareholders of the Bhawani Investment Co. Ltd., had become evacuee prior to July 19, 1951. This is clear from a notice issued by the Assistant Custodian to the Bhawani Investment Co. Ltd., on July 19, 1951. That is also the view taken by the Custodian General. Whether this assumption on the part of those authorities is correct or not is a matter that has to be decided by the High Court. The High Court has not decided that question. Therefore we shall assume for the purpose of this appeal that all of them had become evacuees sometime prior to July 19, 1951.

6. Section 2 (f) of the Act as originally enacted defined "evacuee property" thus:

" "evacuee property" means any property of any evacuee (whether held by him as owner or as trustee or as a beneficiary or as a tenant or in any other capacity, and includes any property which has been obtained by any person from an evacuee after the 14th day of August, 1947, by any mode of transfer which is not effective by reason of the provision contained in Section 40) but does not include—

(i) any ornament and any wearing apparel, cooking vessels, or other house-hold effect in the immediate possession of an evacuee;

(ii) any property belonging to joint stock company the registered office of which was situated before the 15th day of August, 1947 in any place now forming part of Pakistan and continues to be so situated after the said date."

7. That section was amended by S. 2 (1-A) of the amending Act of 1951. Section 2 of the amending Act reads:

"In clause (f) of Section 2 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act, 1950 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act), after sub-clause (1), the following sub-clause shall be inserted and shall be deemed always to have been inserted namely:—

(1-A) belonging to a joint stock company of which not less than fifty-one per cent of the shares are held by evacuees, notwithstanding that the registered office of such company is situated in any part of the territories to which this Act extends or"

8. In view of this clause if the Custodian of Evacuee Property held 51 per cent or more of the shares of any company then the property of that company became an evacuee property. This definition was given retrospective effect. In view of this provision the property of Bhawani Investment Co. Ltd. must be held to have become evacuee property.

9. By Act 11 of 1953, the Act was further amended. That amending Act also amended clause 2 (f) and the definition of the "evacuee property" was substantially altered. The new definition does not take in the contents of Section 2 (f) (1-A) referred to earlier. The provisions of the amending Act 1953 were not given retrospective effect. Therefore it follows that the shares of the company which had already vested in the Custodian under the law as it stood before 1953 were not divested. The 1953 Act incorporated an additional clause in Section 10 (2) of the Act. After Section 10 (2) (i), a new clause 10 (2) (ii) was added. That clause reads:

"In any case where the evacuee property which has vested in the Custodian consists of fifty one per cent, or more of the shares in a company, the Custodian may take charge of the management of the whole affairs of the company and exercise, in addition to any of the powers vested in him under this Act, all or any of the powers of the directors of the company, notwithstanding that the registered office of such company is situated in any part of the territories to which this Act extends, and notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in this Act or the Indian Companies Act, 1913 (VII of 1913) or in the articles of association of the company:

Provided that the Custodian shall not take charge of such management of the Company except with the previous approval of the Central Government."

10. It may be noted that this clause was not given retrospective effect.

11. The learned Judges of the High Court while deciding the case under appeal did not advert to the definition of the "Evacuee property" after the same was amended in 1951 which definition as seen earlier was in force till the Act was further amended in 1953. Evidently their attention was not invited to that definition. In view of that definition, if the contention of the appellants that all or even a substantial portion of the shareholders of the Bhawani Investment Co. Ltd., had become evacuees before 1953 is correct then the property of that company must be held to have become an evacuee property. In that view, it is unnecessary to consider the broader question whether under law a limited company can be an evacuee. In this case we are not concerned with the "evacuees", we are only concerned with "evacuee property".

12. For the reasons mentioned above we allow this appeal, set aside the judgment of the High Court and remit the case to that Court for deciding the other questions arising for decision. The costs of this appeal shall be costs in the cause.

Appeal allowed.

(1963) AIR 1963 SC 1685 (V 50) =

(1964) 3 SCR 164, Union of India v. A. L. Rallia Ram 5

GROVER, J.:— This is an appeal from a judgment of the Rajasthan High Court in which the sole question for determination is whether the agreements which were executed between the appellant and the respondent fulfil the requirements of Article 299 of the Constitution.

2. In a suit filed by the respondent against the appellant for recovery of Rs. 86,000 as damages for breach of contract on the basis of agreements which were executed by the Inspector-General of Police Rajasthan a preliminary issue was framed to the following effect:

"Whether the agreements are not in accordance with Art. 299 of the Constitution of India and hence the suit is not maintainable?"

The trial court held that the agreements complied with the provisions of the aforesaid Article. Its decision was upheld by the High Court where the matter was taken on the revisional side.

3. Para. 1 of the main agreement which was executed on March 22, 1960 was as follows:

"An agreement made on 22nd day of March, 1960 between Messrs. Daveco's Garments, Jaipur (hereinafter called the approved Contractor which expression shall, where the context so admits, be deemed to include his heirs, successors, executors and administrators) of the one part and the Governor of the State of Rajasthan (hereinafter called the Government which expression shall, where the context so admits be deemed to include his successors in office and assigns) of the other part." In Clause 4 (1) it was clearly provided that the payment was to be made by the Government through the Inspector-General of Police, Rajasthan, at the rate set forth in the schedule. In clause 3 (a) the Government agreed that if the contractor duly fabricated the contracted articles and complied with the terms and conditions of the contract the Government, through the Inspector General of Police, would pay to the contractor the amount payable for each and every consignment.

The concluding portion of the agreement was as follows:

"In witness whereof the parties hereto have set their hand on 22nd day of March, 1960.

Signature of the approved contractor.

Accepted.

Witness: 1.

Witness: 2

Sd.

I. G. of Police,

Rajasthan, Jaipur."

4. Article 299 (1) of the Constitution provides that all contracts made in the exercise of the executive power of the Union or of a State shall be expressed to be made by the President or by the Governor of the State, as the case may be, and all such contracts and all assurances of property made in the exercise of that power shall be executed on behalf of the President or the Governor by such person and in such manner as he may direct or authorise. It is common ground that the agreement Annexure B was expressed to be made by the Governor of the State of Rajasthan who was to be called the "Government" in its other clauses and that the Inspector General of Police had been duly authorised to execute the same on his behalf. The sole objection taken was to the form of execution inasmuch as it was not stated in so many words that the Inspector General of Police had signed the agreement on behalf of the Governor. This gave rise to the contention which was pressed in the courts below and before us that all the requirements of Art. 299 of the Constitution were not satisfied.

5. The present appeal stands concluded by the judgment of this court in Union of India v. A. L. Rallia Ram, (1964) 3 SCR 164 = (AIR 1963 SC 1685), in which it was held that the letter of acceptance of the tender signed by the Chief Director of Purchases fulfilled all the requirements of Section 175 (3) of the Government of India Act, 1935. That section employed the same language as is to be found in Art. 299 (1) of the Constitution. The Chief Director of Purchases had subscribed his signature in his official designation and had not stated in the description that the contract was executed on behalf of the Governor-General but the court found that on a fair reading of the contents of the letter in the light of the obligations undertaken thereunder it would be reasonable to hold that the contract was executed on behalf of the Governor-General. It was added that no rule made by the Governor-General had been placed before the court showing that in executing a contract for the sale of "war disposal goods" the officer authorised in that behalf must describe himself as signing on behalf of the Governor-General of India. There can be no manner of doubt that in the present case on a reading of Annexure B and in particular clauses 1 and 4, the agreement was expressed to be made by the Governor and was also executed on his behalf.

6. The learned Additional District Judge and the High Court referred to Rule 255 of the General Finance and Account Rules which deal with the purchase of stores for use in the public service but it was rightly held that they did not govern the execution of contracts for the fabrication of garments. In the absence of any properly framed rule requiring the specific mention of the words "on behalf of the Governor" at the place where the authority authorised by the Governor to enter into the contract has to append his signature it is not possible to hold that the agreements in the present case did not fully comply with the requirement of Art. 299 (1) of the Constitution. The appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

7. It is unfortunate that the suit has remained stayed on account of the pendency of the proceedings arising out of the interlocutory order disposing of the preliminary issue. It is hoped that the trial court will now proceed to dispose of the suit expeditiously.

Appeal dismissed.

State Bank of Travancore, Appellant v. Elias Elias and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 1720 of 1968, D/- 4-9-1970.

(A) Banking Regulation Act (1949), Sec. 45 (5) (i) — Guarantee under — Nature — Merger of Banks — Rank and status of employee of transferor Bank must be maintained.

The guarantee under clause (i) of Sec. 45 (5) of the Act does not cover merely the remuneration: it covers the terms and conditions of service as well. It would be a gross denial of the guarantee if the employee is not given the rank and status which he had in the transferor bank. It is not open to the transferee bank to "fit" an employee of the transferor bank performing the duties of a clerk into a subordinate cadre manned by employees performing duties which are not clerical, but of peons, watchmen, sweepers and the like. On the ground of lack of experience and qualifications a person cannot be deprived of his rank and status in the transferee bank. Clause (ii) to the first proviso of Sec. 45 (5) (i) does not authorise the transferee bank to "fit" an employee in the transferee bank into a post with rank and status lower than the rank and status enjoyed by the employee in the transferor bank.

Where a person was working as a Civil Agent in transferor Bank and he was given the status of a clerk in that Bank, on merger of that Bank the transferee Bank could not fix him in the cadre of "subordinate staff" on ground that he lacked in educational qualifications and experience. He was entitled to be fixed in the "clerical cadre" in view of the guarantee given under Sec. 45 (5) (i). Even though the employee was assured the remuneration which he was drawing, classification of his post in the subordinate cadre affected the terms and conditions of his service. Writ Appeal

(B) Banking Regulation Act (1949), S. 45 (5) (i) Second Proviso — Reserve Bank of India determining status of employee of transferor Bank — Not a final order within meaning of Second Proviso.

The decision of the Reserve Bank that the qualifications and experience of any of the employees of the transferor bank are the same as or equivalent to the qualifications and experience of the other employees of corresponding rank or status of the transferee bank, is declared by the Act to be final. But finality is not attached to any other matter decided by the Reserve Bank. Where the Reserve Bank of India purported to determine the rank and status of an employee of the transferor Bank and observed that his status corresponded with subordinate staff and not with clerical status, such decision cannot be deemed as final within second proviso to Sec. 45 (5) (i). The Orient Central Bank Ltd. was amalgamated with the Kottayam Bank Ltd. The amalgamated bank was named the Kottayam Orient Bank Ltd. — hereinafter called 'the K. O. Bank'. The services of Elias were transferred to the K. O. Bank. Elias continued to perform the duties of a 'Civil Agent' of that Bank and certain specific duties relating to court cases were assigned to him by the K. O. Bank. The K. O. Bank issued a circular sanctioning the salary and allowances payable to all its subordinate staff under three heads — Assistants, Clerks and Peons. The salary and allowances paid to the clerks were Rs. 46-2-50-

3-80 EB-4-100 plus dearness allowance Rs. 20/. No separate scale was fixed for "Civil Agents" and it is common ground that Elias was given the salary and allowances payable to Clerks.

2. Pursuant to a scheme of amalgamation prepared by the Reserve Bank under S. 45 (4) (d) (ii) of the Banking Regulation Act 10 of 1949, the K. O. Bank was amalgamated with the State Bank of Travancore — hereinafter called the "State Bank". Under that scheme, Elias was admitted as an employee of the State Bank and he was allotted the duties of a "Civil Agent". To fix the remuneration and the terms and conditions of the employees under the State Bank, the Board of Directors constituted a Committee to assess the qualifications of all its employees. Pursuant to a report received from the Committee, the State Bank directed that the "Civil Agents" be treated as "subordinate staff" and that their remuneration be refixed. The "subordinate staff" consisted of peons, watchmen, sweepers and employees with similar duties. Their scale of remuneration was Rs. 28—2—86—1—96—EB—1—101. The scale of remuneration of the clerical staff was Rs. 112—307.

3. Elias submitted a representation to the Deputy General Manager that in absorbing him in the subordinate staff he was denied the statutory guarantee of remuneration and terms and conditions of service. This representation was rejected by the Deputy General Manager by letter dated October 19, 1963, and Elias was informed that "having regard to his educational qualifications and experience it had been decided by the State Bank to place him in the subordinate cadre." Elias made a representation to the General Manager which was rejected on December 11, 1963 and he was informed that the Bank was unable to grant his request for absorption into the "clerical cadre".

4. Elias then moved a petition in the High Court of Kerala for a writ of certiorari or other appropriate writ quashing the orders dated October 19, 1963 and December 11, 1963, fixing his rank in the cadre of subordinate staff. A Single Judge of the High Court dismissed the petition. He observed that since there was no post of a "civil Agent" in the State Bank, that Bank was competent to place Elias in the subordinate cadre. The learned Judge also observed that, having regard to the educational qualifications and experience Elias was properly placed in the "subordinate cadre", and no ground was made out to quash the fixation of the rank and status based on an assessment of his qualifications and experience.

5. Elias appealed to a Division Bench of the High Court. During the pendency of the appeal, the State Bank applied for taking on record the decision dated September 15, 1967, of the Reserve Bank of India, holding that the State Bank was justified in not giving Elias the status of a clerk, and in placing him in the residual classification of "subordinate staff". This document was admitted on the record. The Court in allowing the appeal observed that on a consideration of the relevant circumstances, Elias was entitled to the rank and status of a clerk under the State Bank, and the order of the Reserve Bank being in violation of the statutory provisions contained in the Banking Regulation Act, 1949, the orders dated October 13, 1963 and December 11, 1963 were liable to be set aside. This appeal has been filed with special leave granted by this Court.

6. Two contentions were urged by the State Bank in support of the appeal:

(1) that the decision of the Reserve Bank dated September 15, 1967, was final by virtue of Section 45 (5) (i) read with proviso (ii) of the Banking Regulation Act X of 1949 and could not be ignored by the Court; and

(2) that the State Bank having assured to Elias the remuneration which he was drawing, a mere classification of his post in the subordinate cadre did not affect the terms and conditions of his service under the State Bank.

7. Section 45 of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949, by sub-s. (4) authorises the Reserve Bank in certain eventualities to prepare a scheme for reconstruction of a banking company or for amalgamation of the banking company with any other banking institution. By sub-s. (5), insofar as it is relevant, it is provided:

"The scheme aforesaid may contain provisions for all or any of the following matters, namely:—

x x x x x x

"(i) the continuance of the services of all the employees of the banking company (except such of them as not being workmen within the meaning of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, are specifically mentioned in the scheme) in the banking company itself on its reconstruction, or, as the case may be, in the transferee bank at the same remuneration and on the same terms and conditions of service, which they were getting or, as the case may be, by which they were being governed, immediately before the date of the order of moratorium:

Provided that the scheme shall contain a provision that—

(i) x x x x x x

(ii) the transferee bank shall pay or grant not later than the expiry of the aforesaid period of three years, to the said employees the same remuneration and the same terms and conditions of service as are applicable to the other employees of corresponding rank or status of the transferee bank subject to the qualifications and experience of the said employees being the same as or equivalent to those of such other employees of the transferee bank:

Provided further that if in any case under clause (ii) of the first proviso any doubt or difference arises as to whether the qualifications and experience of any of the said employees are the same as or equivalent to the qualifications and experience of the other employees of corresponding rank or status of the transferee bank, the doubt or difference shall be referred to the Reserve Bank whose decision thereon shall be final;"

In exercise of the authority under sub-sections (4) and (5) of Section 45 of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949, the Reserve Bank prepared a scheme under which employees under the K.O. Bank were transferred to the employment of the State Bank. The terms of Cl. (ii) of the first proviso to sub-section (5) of Section 45 were expressly included in the scheme.

8. The decision of the Reserve Bank that the qualifications and experience of any of the employees of the transferor bank are the same as or equivalent to the qualifications and experience of the other employees of corresponding rank or status of the transferee bank is declared by the Act to be final. But finality is not attached to any other matter decided by the Reserve Bank. The Reserve Bank by its decision dated Sept. 15, 1967, purported to determine that the rank and status of the Civil Agents working in the K. O. Bank corresponded with the rank and status of the subordinate cadre under the State Bank. That decision is not declared final under the Act. The Reserve Bank of India observed that "the Civil Agent has nothing to do with the office work in the Bank just as in the case of clerks and other employees and his work is essentially different from the work of the ordinary staff in the bank". The Bank then proceeded to observe that:

"In fitting an employee of the transferor bank into the transferee bank, the rank and status of the employee as also the nature of the duties performed by the employee in the transferor bank have to be ascertained. The mere fact that the employee in transferor bank bore a particular designation either as a clerk or otherwise does not conclude the issue and that does not necessarily follow that he should, in the transferee bank, be placed in a post having the same designation: x x x On examining the position the Reserve Bank of India is of opinion that the duties which the employee was discharging in the transferor bank do not relate to the duties which a clerk has to do in the office."

In the view of the Bank the duties performed by the Civil Agent were "essentially different from those of a clerk and called for a much lower degree of qualifications, skill and competence than those which a clerk normally brings to bear on his work", and since the subordinate cadre of the State Bank in which Elias was fitted was "in effect a residual classification" there was no change and the Bank was justified in placing him in that classification. It was also observed that there was "no change in the work" allotted to Elias nor was he expected to do the work of a chaprasi or a peon and that his emoluments were better than those in the transferor bank. The fact that prior to the fitment in the transferee bank, in terms of the provisions of paragraph 15 of the Scheme, Elias was addressed as a civil clerk did not confer on him the status of a clerk in the transferee bank. These observations relate to matters which could not be referred to the Reserve Bank and the decision of the Reserve Bank thereon is not made final under the second proviso to sub-section (5) (i) of S. 45 of the Act. Only the question whether the qualifications and experience of any of the employees of the transferor bank are the same as or equivalent to the qualifications and experience of the other employees of corresponding rank or status under Clause (ii) of the first proviso is intended to be referred to the Reserve Bank. In that view the first argument advanced on behalf of the appellant must be rejected.

9. It is said that Elias "had studied only upto 5th Form". But that is not decisive of the corresponding rank or status in which "he could be fitted" in the State Bank. Elias was employed in the K. O. Bank as a Civil Agent. The duties of a Civil Agent were clerical and not menial. In the K. O. Bank no separate scale was prescribed for the post of a Civil Agent. The salary paid to Elias was that of a Clerk and his duties were those of a Clerk. In the State Bank, Elias was also performing the duties of a Civil Agent and there was no separate classification of the office of a Civil Agent. The subordinate cadre consisted of peons, watchmen and sweepers and of employees performing similar duties and a Civil Agent performing duties which were clerical in nature could not appropriately be placed in that classification. The decision of the Reserve Bank that the subordinate cadre was a residual cadre, is, in our judgment, not supported by any evidence. It was conceded before the High Court that Elias satisfied "three conditions as to the rank, status and qualifications" of a Clerk in the State Bank. It was only urged that he had not the requisite experience. Under Clause (ii) of the first proviso to Section 45 (5) (i) the transferee bank has to grant the same remuneration and the same terms and conditions of service as are applicable to employees of corresponding rank or status of the transferee bank subject to the qualifications and experience of the said employees being the same as or equivalent to those of such other employees of the transferee bank. The guarantee under Clause (i) of Section 45 (5) of the Act does not cover merely the remuneration; it covers the terms and conditions of service as well. It would be a gross denial of the guarantee if the employee is not given the rank and status which he had in the transferor bank. It is in our judgment, not open to the transferee bank to "fit" an employee of the transferor bank performing the duties of a clerk into a subordinate cadre manned by employees performing duties which are not clerical, but of peons, watchmen, sweepers and the like.

10. The Banking Regulation Act, 1949, guarantees the same terms and conditions of service, and the transferee bank is entitled to "fit" the employees of the transferor bank into the corresponding rank or status. In doing so it has to take into account the qualifications and experience of the employees of the transferor bank. But in "fitting" an employee into the transferee bank, the rank and status enjoyed by an employee in the transferor bank cannot be ignored. A person performing certain duties in the transferor bank when admitted into the service of the transferee bank may be so "fitted" in a cadre which is equivalent in status and rank with the status and rank of the employees in the transferee bank, but in grading him into the cadre of equivalent status and rank experience and qualifications must be taken into account. On the ground of lack of experience and qualifications a person cannot be deprived of his rank and status in the transferee bank. Clause (ii) to the first proviso of Section 45 (5) (i) does not, in our judgment, authorise the transferee bank to "fit" an employee in the transferee bank into a post with rank and status lower than the rank and status enjoyed by the employee in the transferor bank. To accept the contention raised on behalf of the State Bank is in effect to defeat the guarantee relating to the terms and conditions of service under Clause (i) of Section 45 (5) and the first proviso thereto.

11. In our judgment the High Court was right in holding that the orders passed by the State Bank "fitting" Elias into a subordinate cadre infringed the guarantee under Section 45 (5) (i) of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949.

12. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs in favour of Elias.

Appeal dismissed.

(V 58 C 38)

(From Madras: ILR (1966) 2 Mad 357)
J. C. SHAH, G. K. MITTER, K. S. HEGDE, A. N. GROVER AND A. N. RAY, JJ.

Estate of late Rangalal Jajodia, Appellant v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, Respondent.

Civil Appeals Nos. 2332 to 2335 and 2336 to 2339 of 1966, D/- 19-11-1977).

Income-tax Act (1922), S. 34 (3) Second Proviso and S. 24B (3) — Income-tax returns filed by one R — Assessment completed after his death, describing the assessee as estate of R by heirs and legal representatives of R — Fresh assessments ordered in accordance with provisions of S. 24B — Held Sections 34 (3) Second Proviso and 24B (3) applied to the facts of the case. ILR (1966) 2 Mad 357, Reversed.

One R filed income-tax returns for the years 1942-43 and 1943-44. On the receipt of the returns the Income-tax officer issued the statutory notices under Ss. 22 (4) and 23 (2) but before the assessments could be made, R died. The assessment was completed describing the assessee as the estate of deceased R by legal heirs and representatives, his son S by first wife, wife A and her children. In appeal by S who contended that he was not legal representative of R under the latter's will, the assessment was set aside on the ground that no notice was issued to A and fresh assessment was directed to be made on the executors of R in accordance with Section 24B. Fresh assessment was made on the estate of deceased R by executors A and another in 1954, more than four years after the end of assessment years 1942-43; 1943-44 respectively:

Held (1) that A was an assessee in the income-tax proceedings, but the proceedings were not in compliance with the Act by reason of the failure of giving the requisite notice of assessment and the requisite notice of demand to A. The expression 'any person' in Section 34 (3) Second Proviso must be confined to a person intimately connected with the assessments of the year under appeal.

In the present case as the finding was that the assessment was made on A but no notice was given to her, and the necessary direction was therefore given that notice should be given to her and A was heard and the assessment was made, she was not merely intimately connected with the assessment, but she was in fact an assessee. Therefore the Second Proviso to section 34 (3) applied. The High Court was in error in holding that the assessment proceedings were barred by limitation. AIR 1963 SC 1356 distinguished. Finding in AIR 1965 SC 342 that income belonged to the year 1948-49 held was not a finding necessary for the disposal of an appeal in respect of the year of assessment in question. ILR (1966) 2 Mad 357, Reversed. (Paras 14, 15, 16)

(2) Section 24B (3) which deals with the case of a person dying after having furnished a return applied to the present case. (Para 17)

Nos. 2332 to 2335 of 1966 and for Appellant in C. As. Nos. 2336 to 2339 of 1966.

RAY, J.: These appeals are by certificate against the judgment dated 16 August, 1965 of the High Court of Madras on a reference under S. 66 (1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (hereinafter referred to as the Act).

2. Seven questions were referred to the High Court. The reference involved first the construction of the second proviso to sub-section (3) of section 34 of the Act, and, secondly, the applicability of section 24B (3) of the Act to the assessments made on the executor to the estate of late Rangalal Jajodia.

3. In order to appreciate the scope of the reference, it is necessary to refer to the facts which gave rise to the questions. Rangalal Jajodia (hereinafter referred to as the deceased) filed income-tax returns for the years 1942-43 and 1943-44 as well as his excess profits tax returns for the corresponding chargeable accounting periods ending 31 December, 1941 and 31 December, 1942 before the Income-tax Officer, Excess Profits Tax Officer, Madras, Special South Circle. On receipt of the returns, the officer issued the requisite statutory notices to the assessee for production of accounts and also other evidence in support of the returns under Sections 22 (4) and 23 (2) of the Act and under the corresponding provisions of section 30 of the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940. Rangalal Jajodia complied with the aforesaid notice. But before the assessments to the income-tax and excess profits tax could be made Rangalal Jajodia died on 11 January, 1946.

4. Rangalal Jajodia was survived by Shankar Lal Jajodia son by a pre-deceased wife, Aruna Devi, the second wife and children by the second wife. Rangalal Jajodia had made a will on 16 April, 1945 whereby Aruna Devi and one Ram Kumar Bhuwalka were executrix and executor respectively. Shankar Lal Jajodia was disinherited under the will. Shankarlal Jajodia however performed the funeral obsequies for the deceased. The Revenue on the basis of that information issued notice to Shankarlal Jajodia asking him to show cause why the assessment of the deceased should not be made on him as the legal representative. Shankarlal Jajodia objected to the course stating that he was not the legal representative and that his step-mother Aruna Devi and Ram Kumar Bhuwalka as the executrix and executor respectively were the proper persons on whom proceedings were to be taken. The Revenue called for a copy of the will which however was not produced. The assessment was completed on 28 February, 1947 on the materials describing the assessee as "the estate of late Shri Rangalal Jajodia by legal heirs and representatives, Shri Shankarlal Jajodia, son of Rangalal Jajodia, Srimati Aruna Devi, wife of Rangalal Jajodia and her children".

5. The assessment orders were served on Shankarlal Jajodia who appealed to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner contending that he was not the legal representative. At the hearing of the appeals on 30 April, 1952 Shankarlal Jajodia produced a copy of the will. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner set aside the assessment and directed the Revenue Officer to make a fresh assessment on the executors in accordance with section 24B of the Act. Pursuant to the direction of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner the Revenue Officer informed the executors and Ram Kumar Bhuwalka of his proposal to make assessment on them as the legal representatives of Rangalal Jajodia. Ram Kumar Bhuwalka who had refused to act as an executor intimated the fact to the Revenue Officer. Aruna Devi the executrix accepted the notice but requested the Revenue Officer to furnish her with copies of the returns, notes of examination and correspondence between the deceased and the Revenue to enable her to make representations. The Revenue Officer however took the view that under section 24B of the Act it was not necessary to go through all the formalities once again and that the assessments were required to be done only for the purpose of inviting objections, if any, to the locus standi of Aruna Devi as the legal representative of the deceased. On the said view the Revenue Officer completed the income-tax and excess profits tax assessments on the estate of late Rangalal Jajodia by executors Mrs. Aruna Devi and another. The assessments were made on 29 October, 1952 more than four years after the end of assessment years 1942-43 and 1943-44 respectively.

6. The executrix Aruna Devi appealed against the assessments contending before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner that the assessments were barred by limitation and that the previous Appellate Assistant Commissioner's direction to make assessments on her was invalid. It was also contended that reasonable opportunities were not given to Aruna Devi before the assessments were made. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner on 16 April, 1955 held that the assessments were validly made on a valid direction by the previous Appellate Assistant Commissioner. He however set aside the assessments directing the Revenue Officer to complete them after giving the executrix a fresh opportunity to object to the assessment. Aruna Devi appealed to the Appellate Tribunal. The Tribunal rejected the appeals on the ground that the assessments had been set aside by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner with the direction to give sufficient opportunities to her. On a reference taken by Aruna Devi to the High Court, the High Court held that the Tribunal ought to have properly disposed of the appeals on all the contentions raised therein. Pursuant to the order of the High Court the Tribunal heard the appeals on merits on 9 June, 1961 and held that the re-assessment made by the Revenue Officer on Aruna Devi, the executrix was valid and that the assessments were saved from the bar of limitation by the second proviso to Section 34 (3) of the Act. The Tribunal also held that the assessments were validly made under Section 24B (3) of the Act.

7. The High Court on reference under Section 66 (1) of the Act held that the second proviso to Section 34(3) applied to save re-assessment from the bar of limitation but that in the present appeals, the first assessments which were made on Shankarlal Jajodia were set aside on appeal because these were not made on the real legal representatives of the deceased and therefore no direction or finding could be made by the Revenue Authority in any such appeal as would remove the bar of limitation on the re-assessment later made on the executor who was to be regarded as an entirely different assessee. The High Court also held that the direction or finding given by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner for making the assessment on the executors was unnecessary for the disposal of the appeals filed by Shankarlal Jajodia and therefore the direction and the findings were outside the scope of the second proviso to section 34 (3) of the Act.

8. As to section 24B sub-clause (3) of the Act, the High Court held that the section applied to the assessments in the present appeals but the High Court negatived the contention of the Revenue that the assessments made on the executrix were made in proper compliance with the procedure prescribed under section 24B (3) of the Act. The High Court held that it was a condition precedent to the validity of assessment to be made on the legal representatives that the procedure prescribed for making the assessment on the deceased assessee was to be repeated as regards the assessment on the legal representative irrespective of the fact that such procedure was followed during the lifetime of the deceased.

9. The relevant provisions of S. 34 (3) of the Act necessary for the purpose of the present appeals are the second proviso to the said sub-section. The said second proviso is as follows:

"Provided further that nothing contained in this section limiting the time within which any action may be taken or any order, assessment or re-assessment may be made, shall apply to a re-assessment made under S. 27 or to an assessment or re-assessment made on the assessee or any person in consequence of or to give effect to any finding or direction contained in an order under section 31, section 33, section 33A, S. 33B, section 66 or section 66A".

10. Counsel for the Revenue in C. As. Nos. 2336-2339 of 1966 contended that the second proviso saved the assessment from the bar of limitation by reason of an order of assessment having been made in consequence of a finding or direction given by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and secondly that Aruna Devi was a person intimately connected with the assessment and that in fact the assessment was made on her, but the assessment was set aside because no notice was given to her. Counsel for the appellant Aruna Devi in C. As. Nos. 2332-2335 of 1966 on the other contended first that Aruna Devi was not an assessee and therefore the benefit of the second proviso to S. 34 (3) of the Act would not avail. Secondly, it was said that Aruna Devi was not intimately connected with the assessment and was not an assessee, because there was no proceeding in law under the Act against Aruna Devi and therefore she was not an assessee.

11. An assessee is defined in S. 2 (2) of the Act meaning a person by whom income-tax or any other sum of money is payable under this Act, and includes every person in respect of whom any proceeding under the Act has been taken for the assessment of his income or of the loss sustained by him or of the amount of refund due to him. It was said on behalf of the appellant Aruna Devi that the estate cannot be an assessee and in order to make the legal representative an assessee a proceeding must be taken against the executor under the Act. It was also said that in the final assessment Aruna Devi was assessed as an executrix but no proceeding for assessment was taken against Aruna Devi as an executrix. Emphasis was placed on the fact that the proceeding was against the estate which was unknown to law and even if the proceeding against the estate could be held to be a valid proceeding Aruna Devi was never given any notice and therefore no proceeding was taken against her.

12. The assessment order shows the name of the assessee as the estate of late Shri Rangalal Jajodia by legal heirs and representatives Shri Shankarlal Jajodia son of Shri Rangalal Jajodia, Smt. Aruna Devi wife of Rangalal Jajodia and her children. Rangalal Jajodia had filed the return. He died before the assessment was completed. The assessment was made on Aruna Devi as legal representative. She was described as legal representative but not as an executrix. The liability under the Act in case of death of a person is of the executor, administrator or legal representative to be liable to pay out of the estate of the deceased person to the extent to which the estate is capable of meeting the charge the tax assessed as payable by such person or any tax which would have been paid by him under the Act if he had not died. The Revenue in the assessment proceedings described the estate of Rangalal Jajodia by the legal heirs and representatives. It cannot be denied that an executor is also a legal representative.

13. What happened in the present assessment proceedings was that the proceedings were commenced during the lifetime of Rangalal Jajodia by reason of the returns being filed by and notices under sections 22 (3) and 23 (2) of the Act having been served on Rangalal Jajodia during his lifetime. The assessment order contains intrinsic evidence to that effect as also of repeated intimation having been given to Shankarlal Jajodia after the death of Rangalal Jajodia. No reply having been received from Shankarlal Jajodia, the assessment was completed under section 24B of the Act through the legal heirs and representatives including Aruna Devi. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner on an appeal preferred by Shankarlal Jajodia set aside the assessment because no notice was given to Aruna Devi though the assessment proceeding was against her as a legal representative. The lack of a notice does not amount to the Revenue Authority having had no jurisdiction to assess but that the assessment was defective by reason of notice not having been given to her. An assessment proceeding does not cease to be a proceeding under the Act merely by reason of want of notice. It will be a proceeding liable to be challenged and corrected. Similarly, if there is a mistake as to name or there is a misdescription of the name, the proceeding will be liable to be challenged and corrected by giving notice to the assessee subject to such just exceptions as an assessee can take under law. The direction given by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner was to make fresh assessment on Aruna Devi in accordance with the provisions of the Act.

14. Counsel for Aruna Devi relied on the decision of this Court in Income-tax Officer, Sitapur v. Murlidhar Bhagwandas, (1964) 52 ITR 335 = (AIR 1965 SC 342) in support of the proposition that no finding was necessary in the present case because Aruna Devi was not an assessee and was a different person. We find that Aruna Devi was an assessee in the income-tax proceedings, but the proceedings were not in compliance with the Act by reason of the failure of giving the requisite notice of assessment and the requisite notice of demand. In Murlidhar's case, (1964) 52 ITR 335 = (AIR 1965 SC 342) (supra) the assessee appealed against an assessment order and the Appellate Assistant Commissioner held that the income was received in the previous accounting year and directed that the amount should be deleted from the assessment year 1949-50 and included in the assessment year 1948-49. Pursuant to that direction the Income-tax Officer initiated re-assessment proceedings in respect of the year 1948-49 and served a notice on 5 December, 1957. The question was whether the second proviso applied and saved the notice in respect of the year 1948-49. It was held that the jurisdiction of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner under section 31 of the 1922 Act was strictly confined to the assessment order of the particular year under appeal and the assessment or re-assessment made in consequence of or to give effect to any finding or direction contained in an order under S. 31, section 33A, section 33B, section 66 or section 66A must necessarily relate to the assessment of the year under appeal. The expression 'finding and direction' in the second proviso to section 34 (3) was held to be a finding necessary for giving relief in respect of the assessment in question and that a direction which the appellate or the revisional authority was empowered to give under the sections mentioned in that proviso. The finding in Murlidhar's case, (1964) 52 ITR 335 = (AIR 1965 SC 342) (supra) that the income belonged to the year 1948-49 was not a finding necessary for the disposal of an appeal in respect of the year of assessment in question.

15. Counsel for Aruna Devi contended that the expression 'any person' occurring in the second proviso to section 34 (3) of the Act could not be referable to a stranger and that Aruna Devi was a stranger. In support of that proposition reliance was placed on the decision of this Court in S. C. Prashar v. Vasantsen Dwarkadas, (1963) 49 ITR 1 = (AIR 1963 SC 1356). The facts of that case are entirely different and are of no assistance for the reason that in the present appeals Aruna Devi was impleaded as a party to the assessment proceedings as a legal representative of Rangalal Jajodia. The words 'any person' were construed in Murlidhar's case, (1964) 52 ITR 335 = (AIR 1965 SC 342) (supra) to be confined to a person intimately connected with the assessment year under appeal. It was said in that case that modification or setting aside of assessment made on a firm, joint Hindu family, association of persons, for a particular year may affect the assessment for the said year on a partner or partners of the firm, member or members of the Hindu undivided family or the individual, as the case may be. In such cases though the latter are not eo nomine parties to the appeal, their assessments depend upon the assessments on the former. The said instances are only illustrative. It is not necessary to pursue the matter further. We would, therefore, hold that the expression 'any person' in the setting in which it appears must be confined to a person intimately connected in the aforesaid sense with the assessments of the year under appeal. In the present appeals the finding was that the assessment was made on Aruna Devi but no notice was given to her. The necessary direction was therefore given that notice should be given to her. Aruna Devi was heard and the assessment was made. She was not merely intimately connected with the assessment. She was in fact an assessee. Therefore the second proviso to Section 34(3) applied.

16. We are therefore of opinion that the second proviso to Section 34(3) of the Act applies to the present appeals because first the proceedings against Rangalal Jajodia commenced on filing of returns before the income-tax authorities; secondly, the assessment proceedings continued after the death of Rangalal Jajodia against the legal representatives Shankarlal Jajodia and Aruna Devi; thirdly, the assessment proceedings on being set aside and not cancelled pursuant to the appeal filed by Shankarlal Jajodia on the ground that notice was not given to Aruna Devi were continued, and, fourthly, the setting aside of the assessment was only on the ground that notice was not given to Aruna Devi and therefore the finding and direction was vital to the assessment proceedings. The High Court was in error in holding that the assessment proceedings were barred by limitation.

17. The other question is as to the applicability of section 24B of the Act. Counsel on behalf of Aruna Devi repeated the contentions advanced in the High Court that section 24B does not cover the entire field of procedure to be followed in assessing the income of the deceased person. The High Court held that section 24B of the Act applied but Aruna Devi should have been given opportunities to object to the assessment by repeating the entire procedure of section 24B of the Act as during the lifetime of the deceased. Counsel for the Revenue did not impeach the conclusion of the High Court that in relation to Aruna Devi the provisions of section 24B of the Act were to be followed de novo. We are of opinion that the High Court correctly held that section 24B of the Act applies to the present case. The third sub-section of section 24B deals with a case of a person dying after having furnished a return. Further, in the present case the Income-tax Officer had reason to believe the return to be incorrect or incomplete, and he called upon Rangalal to furnish evidence. The Act further confers power on the Revenue officer to make the assessment and determine the tax payable by the deceased on the basis of the assessment and for that purpose to issue appropriate notice which would have had to be served upon the deceased had he survived and in that behalf to require from the executor, administrator or other legal representative of the deceased person any accounts, documents or other evidence which he might under the provisions of sections 22 and 23 require from the deceased person. These provisions adequately answer the contention of the appellant Aruna Devi.

18. For these reasons we hold that the High Court was in error in holding that the second proviso to section 34 (3) of the Act did not save the assessments and therefore we set aside the judgment of the High Court and allow the appeals of the Revenue in C. As. Nos. 2336-2339 of 1966.

19. As for appeals C. As. 2332-2335 of 1966 we uphold the conclusion of the High Court and dismiss the appeals. Each party will bear and pay its own costs in all these appeals.

Appeals in C. As. Nos. 2336-2339 of 1966 allowed; Appeals in C. As. Nos. 2332-2335 of 1966 dismissed.

Mysore Excise Act (5 of 1901), S. 18 — Mysore Elementary Education Act (6 of 1941), S. 9 and Schedule (as amended in 1955) — Levy of education cess on excise revenue — "Shop rent" paid by excise contractor is not excise revenue.

A payment for the exclusive privilege of selling toddy from certain shops is called "shop rent". The licensee pays what he considers to be equivalent to the value of the right and it has no relation to the production or manufacture of toddy and such "shop rent" is not excise duty within the meaning of Entry 51 List 2 of Sch. 7 of Constitution. "Shop rent" therefore is not excise revenue within the meaning of the Schedule to the Mysore Act (1941) and no education cess can be levied thereon. AIR 1967 SC 1512, Foll. (Para 9)

The education cess is not levied as an independent cess but is levied as a cess on all items of land revenue, forest revenue and excise revenue and therefore the question whether it falls under entry 62 of List II Sch. 7 left open. (Para 11)

SHAH, J.— Under the Mysore Excise Act, 1901, the Government of the State was authorised to grant exclusive privilege of selling by retail Indian made liquor on such conditions and for such period as the Government deemed fit, and to levy duty on manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquor. In exercise of that power the Government of Mysore framed rules regulating sale of "excise privileges". In the Note to Rule 23 in respect of toddy, "tree-tax", "tree-rent" and "shop-rent" were chargeable at the rate of 9 pies per rupee.

2. Under the Act the exclusive privilege of retail vending of toddy in different areas was sold by auction. Every licensee had to secure toddy by tapping toddy-yielding trees either in Government groves assigned to his shops or trees of private ownership. The licensee was required to pay to the State "tree-tax" at the prescribed rates for the number of trees tapped by him. When he tapped trees belonging to the Government he had to pay, in addition, "tree-rent" to the State. Consideration paid by the licensee to the State for the exclusive privilege of retail vending of toddy, or Arrack or beer was popularly known as "shop-rent". In the notifications inviting bids or tenders for the exclusive privilege of retail vending of toddy, arrack, and beer it was stipulated that education cess shall be paid in accordance with Condition 23 of the General Conditions applicable to all excise licences.

3. Originally the Government used to charge "shop-rent", "tree-tax" and "tree-rent" separately. But in 1907 a notification was issued abolishing separate levies of "tree-tax" and "tree-rent". The Mysore Revenue Manual (1938 Edn.) Vol. I, at page 334 read as follows:—

"Formerly, the local cess was being levied on the following items:—

(i) x x x
(ii) Toddy — both date and bagani.

(iii) x x x
But in the marginal note dated G. O. (F. I. 9243-54 S. R. 145-06-1 dated 16th June, 1907), the following directions have been given:—

(a) The separate levy of local cess on tree-tax is abolished and the cess at present levied merged in the main item, the rates of tree-tax on the various kinds of trees being as follows:—

x x x
(b) Levy of a local cess on toddy shop rental is also abolished;

(c) The cess on tree-rent is merged in the main item itself.

N. B.:— 1/17th of the tree-tax, the shop rental and tree-rent collected should be credited to Local Funds, in lieu of the one-anna cess formerly levied on these items.

(Vide also Article 41 — Mysore Accounts Code Vol. I.)"

After the merger of a part of the Bellary District pursuant to the settling up of the State of Andhra in 1953 the Mysore Excise Act, 1901 was extended to the Bellary Area so merged in 1955.

4. The Mysore Excise Act, 1901, was repealed and replaced by the Mysore Excise Act, 1965. But no substantial alteration was made in the scheme of levy of excise revenue under the new Act.

5. Under the Mysore Elementary Education Act, 1941 an education cess was levied as a percentage inter alia of excise revenue. The Mysore Elementary Education Act, 1941, was not extended to the Bellary Area and the excise contractors in that area were not liable to pay education cess. The Mysore Elementary Education Act, 1941, was replaced by the Mysore Compulsory Education Act, 1961. By Section 25 of that Act Chapters VI and VII of the 1941 Act were repealed and the rest of the 1941 Act continued to remain in force in the old Mysore Area. Accordingly S. 9 of the 1941 Act which occurred in Chapter III under which education cess was levied remained in operation. Section 9 (1) of the Mysore Elementary Education Act, 1941, as amended by the Elementary Education (Amendment) Act, 1944 read as follows:—

"The Government may for carrying out the purpose of this Act, levy throughout or in any part of Mysore, an education cess on any or all of such items of State revenue or of tax levied under any Act, or rule constituting Local Bodies in Mysore and at such rates as are specified in the Schedule to this Act."

After the Mysore Elementary Education (Amendment) Act, 1955, the relevant provision of the Schedule read as follows:—

Items on which cess may be levied.	Maximum rate of levy.
All items of land revenue, forest revenue, and excise revenue on which education cess is now being levied.	9 pies in the rupee.

The Government of Mysore levied the "education cess" from excise contractors in the old Mysore Area of the New State of Mysore. From time to time cash amounts were collected by the Government of Mysore.

6. A large number of excise contractors moved petitions under Article 226 of the Constitution before the High Court of Mysore challenging the levy of "education cess" on "shop-rent" in respect of toddy, arrack and beer and on "tree-tax" and "tree-rent". They claimed a declaration that they were not liable to pay the "education cess" and an injunction restraining the State from levying and collecting the education cess and also for an order refunding the amount already collected.

7. It appears that even after the notification of 1907 merging the "tree-tax" and "tree-rent" with the "shop-rent" was issued, the State was in fact collecting the education cess from the excise contractors. In the view of the High Court under the Schedule as amended by the Mysore Elementary Education (Amendment) Act, 1955, liability to pay education cess arose in respect of all items of excise revenue on which education cess was being levied and since no education cess was being lawfully levied in the year 1955 and for a long time before that year, the liability to pay education cess did not arise. They held that the expression "now being levied" used in the Schedule as amended meant "now being lawfully levied". By virtue of Article 265 of the Constitution no tax could, they observed, be levied or collected except by authority of law: if there was no authority of law, collection of the education cess under the amended Schedule could not authorise collection of the education cess. The High Court observed that the Schedule to the Education Act was amended after the commencement of the Constitution and it was reasonable to impute to the State Legislature not merely knowledge of, but also anxiety to comply with Article 265 of the Constitution, and that was clear from the fact that neither the original Education Act nor the Amending Act of 1955 contained any provisions for validating any levy or collection made without the authority of law. Accordingly the High Court held that the State was incompetent to levy the education cess because it did not fall within the charging provision. After expressing that opinion the High Court proceeded to interpret the Schedule and held that the Education Act does not impose the charge of education cess on Arrack shop-rent, toddy "shop-rent" and beer shop-rent, "tree-tax" and "tree-rent" and that "shop-rent" is not a duty of excise and hence education cess cannot be levied on Arrack "shop-rent," toddy "shop-rent" or beer "shop-rent". The High Court also held that the excise contractors may question the validity of the levy of education cess on "shop-rent," "tree-tax" and

"tree-rent," even if they had agreed to pay education cess on those items. The High Court declared the levy of education cess on toddy, Arrack and beer "shop-rent," "tree-tax" and "tree-rent" as invalid. The State of Mysore has appealed to this Court with certificate granted by the High Court.

8. Mr. Chagla contended that under List II, Entry 8 the State Legislature is competent to legislate for levy of cess in respect of "intoxicating liquors, that is to say, the production, manufacture, possession, transport, purchase and sale of intoxicating liquors". Legislative power normally includes all incidental and subsidiary powers, but the power to tax is neither incidental nor subsidiary to the power to legislate on a matter or topic: M. P. V. Sundararamier and Co. v. State of Andhra Pradesh, 1958 SCR 1422 = (AIR 1958 SC 468). Entries in the Lists I and II in Schedule VII dealing with certain specific topics do not grant power to levy tax on transactions relating to those topics. Power to tax must be derived from a specific taxing entry. Tax could therefore not be levied on intoxicating liquors relying upon Entry 8, List II.

Entry 51, List II authorises the State Legislature to legislate for — "Duties of excise on the following goods manufactured or produced in the State and countervailing duties at the same or lower rates on similar goods manufactured or produced elsewhere in India:—

(a) alcoholic liquors for human consumption;

(b) opium, Indian hemp and other narcotic drugs and narcotics;

but x x x

The taxing power in respect of alcoholic liquors for human consumption is therefore circumscribed: it may only be levied as excise duty, that is a duty levied on the manufacture and production of alcoholic liquors: R. C. Jall v. Union of India, (1962) Supp 3 SCR 436 = (AIR 1962 SC 1281).

9. Mr. Chagla for the State urged that the High Court was in error in holding that "shop-rent" was not excise revenue. But this question is concluded by a judgment of this Court. In M/s. Guruswamy & Co. v. State of Mysore, 1967-1 SCR 548 =

(AIR 1967 SC 1512) this Court held that the Mysore State Legislature was incompetent to levy health-cess on the items of the State excise revenue. The Court further held that the levy of health-cess could only be made if it be shown that the duty had been levied on goods which had been produced or manufactured, the taxable event being production or manufacture of goods. The Court observed that the essential characteristics of an excise duty was uniformity of incidence, and that the duty must be closely related to production or manufacture of goods. It did not matter if the levy was made not at the moment of production or manufacture but at a later stage. If a duty had been levied on an excisable article, but the duty was collected from a retailer it did not necessarily cease to be an excise duty. If a levy was made for the privilege of selling an excisable article and the excisable article had already borne the duty and the duty had been paid, there must be clear terms in the charging section to indicate that what was being levied for the purpose of the privilege of sale was in fact a duty of excise. The Court further held that a payment for the exclusive privilege of selling toddy from certain shops was called shop-rent. The licensee paid what he considered to be equivalent to the value of the right and it had no relation to the production or manufacture of toddy, and that the "shop-rent" was not excise duty within the meaning of Entry 51 of List II of the Constitution. We are bound by this judgment. "Shop-rent" is accordingly not excise revenue within the meaning of the Schedule to the Mysore Elementary Education Act, 1941 and no education cess could be levied on "shop-rent".

10. Mr. Chagla however contended that in any event the State is entitled to levy "tree-tax" and "tree-rent" at the rates prescribed. It is unnecessary for the purpose of this case to determine whether "tree-tax" and "tree-rent" are excise revenue within the meaning of the Schedule to the Mysore Elementary Education Act. Granting that "tree-tax" and "tree-rent" are excise revenues, those imposts ceased to be levied separately after the year 1907: they merged in "shop-rent" and a fixed percentage was regarded as local cess and diverted to the Local Bodies. If under the order of 1955 and before that date education cess on "tree-tax" and "tree-rent" was not being levied lawfully, liability to pay "tree-tax" and "tree-rent" could not be enforced by the State against the excise contractors.

11. Mr. Chagla also urged that even if education cess on "shop-rent" is not within the competence of the State Legislature under Entry 51, List II, it is still a tax on "luxuries" within the meaning of Entry 62 of List II, and a cess may be levied thereon. The argument is, in our judgment, misconceived. Education cess is not levied as an independent cess: it is levied as a cess on all items of land revenue, forest revenue and excise revenue. The "shop-rent" collected under the terms of the auction not being land revenue, forest revenue or excise revenue, the question whether education cess could be levied by the State Legislature under Entry 62 of List II does not fall to be determined before us. Counsel also urged that under the terms of the auction the excise contractors had agreed to pay education cess. But the liability to pay cess is statutory: if the statute does not effectuate the levy, no liability may arise for payment of the cess merely from the conditions of the auction.

12. Counsel for the State informed us that since the judgment of the High Court the Schedule has been amended by the State Legislature, but he did not very properly ask us to determine the question whether under the amended Schedule the cess is leviable. We express no opinion on the question whether the State is competent to levy the cess after amendment of the Schedule to the Mysore Elementary Education Act, 1941. It will be open to the State to agitate the question if hereafter the education cess is sought to be levied under the authority of the amended Schedule.

13. The appeals therefore fail and are dismissed with costs. There will be one hearing fee.

Appeals dismissed.

J. M. SHELAT AND C. A. VAIDIALINGAM, JJ.

State of West Bengal and others,
Appellants v. Bata Krishna Barman, Respondent.

17-11-1970.

(A) Civil Services — Government Servants' Conduct Rules (1926), Rules 20 and 23 — Disciplinary proceedings against sub-Inspector on certain charges involving breach of Rules 20 and 23 — Suspension pending enquiry with 4th basic pay as subsistence allowance — Charges not proved at enquiry — Only conclusion arrived at was 'he was politically connected' — Order by disciplinary authority asking him to resume duty from date of order with a warning administered as a disciplinary penalty held was without any basis and could not be sustained — (Constitution of India, Article 311).

The respondent, a Sub-Inspector, in the Department of Food of W. B. Government was placed under suspension pending disciplinary enquiry against him on certain charges involving breach of Rules 20 and 23 of the Government Servants' Conduct Rules, 1926, and it was ordered that he would be paid 25 per cent of his basic pay for the period of suspension. The main charge on which the other three charges were based was that he had published a pamphlet without obtaining the prior sanction of the Government as required by Rule 20. After the conclusion of the enquiry, the order passed by the disciplinary authority did not contain any finding on the specified charges levelled against the respondent, but the order provided that the period of suspension will be treated as on duty and he would be paid for that period at the rate admissible under the rules as a disciplinary measure. He was directed to resume his duty from the date of order with a warning that he should not take part in any political activities in future. On a writ petition filed by the respondent challenging the order, the affidavit filed by the disciplinary authority made it clear that there was not enough data at the enquiry to hold the respondent guilty of any of the four charges but that the only conclusion it could arrive at was that the respondent was politically connected.

Held, that as the respondent could not be held guilty of having violated Rule 20 or Rule 23, the order of suspension with payment of 25 per cent of his basic pay and the warning administered to him, all as disciplinary measures, could not be allowed to stand. (Paras 6, 9, 10)

M/s. S. P. Mitra, G. S. Chatterjee and Sukumar Basu, Advocates, for Appellants.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHELAT, J.:— This appeal founded on a certificate, is against the judgment and order passed by the Letters Patent Bench of the High Court of Calcutta which, setting aside the judgment and order of a learned Single Judge, allowed the writ petition filed by the respondent and issued a mandamus directing the appellant-State not to enforce its orders issued under Rule 20 (1) and Rule 23 (1) (i) of the Government Servants' Conduct Rules, 1926.

2. The respondent was appointed in June 1945 as a sub-inspector under the Director General (Transportation and Storage) of the Civil Supplies Department of West Bengal Government. In December 1951, he was attached to the movement section under the Directorate of Transportation in the Department of Food. He was placed under suspension by an order dated December 21, 1951. That order provided that he would be paid 25 per cent of his basic pay during the period of suspension. On January 19/21, 1952 he was served with a charge-sheet containing four charges: (1) that he published a certain pamphlet without obtaining the previous sanction required by Rule 20 of the said Rules, (2) that the said pamphlet contained criticism of the Government capable of embarrassing the relations between the Government and the public, thus violating Rule 20 (1) (a), (3) that the pamphlet showed that he was taking active part in politics in breach of R. 23 and (4) that the said publication constituted propaganda in connection with general elections and therefore, was in breach of Rule 23 and the standing orders of the Government in that regard. The rules on which the charges were thus founded were Rules 20 (1) (a) and (2), and Rule 23 (1) (i) of the said Rules. Though the charges mentioned standing orders of the Government, it was conceded in the High Court that there were no such standing orders.

3. The explanation of the respondent was that he had neither printed nor published the said pamphlet, that a pamphlet of the kind mentioned in the charge-sheet was printed by one M. K. Mukhopadhyaya and that his name (the respondent's) was printed therein as its publisher without his knowledge or consent. As regards the rest of the charges, he denied them all. Since they flowed from the first charge, and that charge depended upon his having published the said pamphlet, those charges, according to him, were not sustainable in view of his not having been responsible for its publication.

4. After a departmental enquiry, the Directorate of Transportation passed an order dated June 7, 1952 allowing the respondent to resume duty with effect from the date when the order would be served upon him. The order, however, provided that:

"For his period of suspension at the rate admissible under the rules, as a disciplinary measure.

The period of his suspension will be treated as on duty."

Along with this order, and as was conceded in the High Court, as part of it, a warning also was administered to the respondent drawing his attention to Rule 23 and directing him not to take part in any political activities in future.

5. It may be noticed that the order did not contain any finding on the four charges served on the respondent or any one of them. It did not also state that the respondent had published the said pamphlet or that in consequence of his having published it, he was responsible for embarrassing the Government in its relations with the public or any section thereof, or that the publication by him constituted his participating actively in politics, or that because of such alleged publication by him he was guilty of carrying on propaganda in connection with any general elections, or that he was, therefore, guilty of breach of Rules 20 and 23 of the said rules.

6. As appearing from the counter-affidavit, filed by the Director (Transportation), no such finding was possible as none of the said charges was brought home to the respondent. Indeed, the Director, in the said affidavit, could only say that the documentary and oral evidence adduced in the said enquiry showed; (a) that the petitioner was the secretary of the Arya Samaj at whose instance the said pamphlet had been printed and the respondent's name was printed as its publisher, (b) that it was admitted by the respondent that the books and pamphlets of the Arya Samaj were printed at the Satyanarain Press and (c) that the respondent had actively been participating in politics. He conceded that the only conclusion he could come to was that "the petitioner (i.e., the respondent) was politically connected although it was difficult to establish the same from the available records and as a disciplinary measure the petitioner was granted a subsistence allowance during the period of his suspension and warned not to take part in any political activities." It is clear from this concession that it was not possible for the Director to hold, on the available data before him, the respondent guilty of any of the four charges preferred against him. A fortiori, he could not be held guilty of having violated Rule 20 or Rule 23. That being so, it is impossible to understand how the order of suspension, the payment to the respondent of only 25 per cent of his basic pay and the warning administered to him, all as disciplinary measures, i.e., as penalties, could possibly be passed.

7. Rule 20 (1) prohibits a Government servant from making any statement of fact or opinion in a document published under his own name or in any public utterances delivered by him which is capable of embarrassing: (a) the relations between the Government and the people of India, or any section thereof, or (b) the relations between His Majesty's Government or the Governor-General in Council and any foreign country or the ruler of any State in India. Sub-rule (2) provides that a Government servant, who intends to publish any document under his name or to deliver any public utterance containing statements in respect of which any doubt as to the application of the restrictions under sub-rule (1) may arise, shall submit to the Government a copy or draft of the document which he intends to publish or of the utterance which he intends to deliver and shall not publish the document or deliver such utterance save with the sanction of the Government. R. 23 (1) (i) provides that subject to the provisions of R. 22 or of any general or special order of the local Government no Government servant shall take part in, subscribe in aid of or assist in any way any political movement in India or relating to Indian affairs. The explanation to that rule lays down that the expression "political movement" includes any movement or activity tending, directly or indirectly, to excite disaffection against, or to embarrass the Government as by law established or to promote feelings of hatred or

8. Assuming for the time being the validity of Rules 20 and 23, Rule 20 could not be invoked against the respondent for the simple reason that there was no finding, as the counter-affidavit filed by the Director shows, that the respondent was responsible for the publication of the said pamphlet. It is true, as the counter-affidavit stated, that the respondent was the secretary of the Arya Samaj at whose instance the said pamphlet had been printed and the respondent's name was published therein as its publisher. But the respondent's case all throughout was that his name was mentioned in the said pamphlet as its publisher without his knowledge or consent. There was no finding that the respondent's case was untrue. In the absence of such a finding and holding the respondent responsible for the publication of the said pamphlet, the charge of violating Rule 20 against him was clearly unsustainable. Further, there was no finding that the said pamphlet contained any statement of fact or opinion which was capable of embarrassing the relations between the Government and the people of India or any section thereof, or the relations between the Government on the one hand and any foreign country or the ruler of any State in India as required by Rule 20 (1).

9. The position in regard to Rule 23 was even less sustainable. None of the four charges preferred against him alleged that he had taken part in or subscribed in aid of or assisted in any way any political movement in India or relating to Indian affairs. There was no finding, nor was there any allegation in the Director's said counter-affidavit that the Arya Samaj, of which the respondent was the secretary, was a political movement in which the respondent had taken part or had rendered any assistance. There being no such charge or finding, the respondent obviously could not be held guilty of any breach of Rule 23. As already stated, the only conclusion arrived at by the Director, if it could at all be characterised as a conclusion, was that the respondent was "politically connected". Such a statement was not a conclusion because the Director did not specify with what movement or party or organisation the respondent was politically connected. The only connection referred to was with the Arya Samaj which was not found or named by the Director as a political movement or a political organisation. The statement, therefore, was not only vague but was a mere speculation on the part of the Director, since it was not based on any evidence and as the Director himself confessed in his counter-affidavit "it was difficult to establish the same from the available records". Such a finding was, therefore, no finding based on any evidence, and could not be depended upon and made the basis for any disciplinary penalty.

10. There was, therefore, no question of either R. 20 or R. 23 being enforced against the respondent. The order imposing the penalty of withholding 3/4th of the basic pay and directing to pay to the respondent only 1/4th thereof and the warning issued to him both as and by way of penalties was without any basis and was therefore bad. The Letters Patent Bench of the High Court, therefore, was right in allowing the respondent's writ petition and setting aside the order even on the assumption that the said two rules were valid.

11. The aforesaid conclusion of the Letters Patent Bench really concluded the matter and the respondent's writ petition had to be allowed. But the learned Single Judge, as also the learned Judges forming the Letters Patent Bench, went into the question of the validity of the said rules. That, in our view, was not necessary for the purposes of the case. It is true that the learned Single Judge went into the question of the validity of the said rules as it was contended before him that the said rules placed unreasonable restrictions on the respondent's freedom of speech and expression guaranteed by Art. 19 (1) (a) and (b), and were not saved by cl. (2) of that article. Reliance was placed before him on an earlier decision of Sinha, J. in Krishna C. Chatterjee v. Chief Supdt. Central Telegraph Office Calcutta, AIR 1955 Cal 76 where the words in R. 20 (1), namely, "capable of embarrassing" were held to be vague and the freedom of speech and expression having been made therein subject to "the arbitrary subjective satisfaction" of a few persons in authority. In the opinion of the learned Single Judge, the word "embarrassing" could not be regarded as vague or uncertain, as expressions such as "tending to embarrass the administration of justice" and "calculated to prejudice the fair trial of a case" were well known judicial expressions used in cases of contempt of court, and therefore, R. 20 (1), according to him, could not be held to be vague or uncertain. On merits, he found that the impugned order itself showed that the Director had not wholly condoned "the misconduct" of the respondent and that on the other hand, he had been administered a warning not to take part in politics in future. Therefore, the grant of 25 p.c. of his pay only during the suspension period was justified. In this view he dismissed the respondent's writ petition. The Letters Patent Bench disagreed with the reasoning of the learned Single Judge and thought that the decisions of this Court in Kameshwar Prasad v. State of Bihar 1962 Supp (3) SCR 369 = (AIR 1962 SC 1166) and O. K. Ghosh v. E. X. Joseph, 1963 Supp (1) SCR 789 = (AIR 1963 SC 812) in relation to R. 4 (A) of the Bihar Government Servants' Conduct Rules, 1956 and R. 4 (A) and 4 (B) of the Central Civil Services (Conduct) Rules, 1955, applied against R. 23 (1) (i) of the rules in question, and held that that rule violated Art. 19 (1) (a) and (b) and was not protected by cl. (2) of that Article, and consequently, held that rule to be invalid.

12. We are of the opinion that in view of the clear statements made by the Director in his counter-affidavit the respondent could not be held responsible for the publication of the said pamphlet. As aforesaid, there was not and could not be such a finding, and therefore, R. 20 could not be invoked against him. Similarly, since even according to the Director, the respondent was connected only with the Arya Samaj, in the absence of any finding that the Arya Samaj was either a political movement or a political organisation, R. 23 also could not be invoked against him. That being the position, the impugned order passed as a disciplinary measure against him was not sustainable under either of the said two rules and had, therefore, to be quashed. In this view the Letters Patent Bench could have concluded the appeal before it without going into the question as to the validity of the said two rules.

13. It is true that the learned Single Judge had cast doubt on the correctness of the decision of Sinha, J. on R. 20 of the said Rules in the case of Krishna C. Chatterjee, AIR 1955 Cal 76. But he had not based his decision in the present case on any finding that the respondent had published the said pamphlet and was therefore guilty of breach of R. 20. Consequently, R. 20 could not be applied by him against the respondent in the absence of any finding by the Director that the respondent had published the said pamphlet. It was, therefore, not necessary for the Letters Patent Bench to go into the question of the validity of R. 20. Regarding R. 23, that rule was not the subject matter in the case of Krishna C. Chatterjee, AIR 1955 Cal 76. For the reasons already set out above, R. 23 also could not be pressed into service against the respondent. The learned Single Judge, no doubt, upheld the impugned order but that was on an assumption by him that the respondent was guilty of misconduct, i.e., misconduct of being politically connected. But that assumption was unjustified as there was no such charge against the respondent nor was any finding that he was connected or associated with any political organisation or party. On this ground alone the judgment of the learned Single Judge was liable to be reversed. Thus it was not necessary for the Letters Patent Bench to decide the question of validity of either R. 20 or R. 23 and that question was only academic.

14. In these circumstances, we ourselves do not feel called upon to go into the question of the validity of the said two rules on which, we feel, much can be said by both the sides. It may be that the view taken by the Letters Patent Bench will bind the State Government whenever it seeks to take action against any one of its servants in future. But the correctness of the view taken by the Bench in this case can be challenged in future by the Government, if it considers it necessary, in a more suitable case. So far as the present case is concerned the controversy is altogether academic as on merits neither of the two rules could be invoked against the respondent.

15. For the reasons stated above, we are in agreement with the Letters Patent Bench of the High Court that the impugned order could not be sustained on merits and the writ petition of the respondent was rightly allowed.

16. The appeal fails and is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

(V 58 C 41)

(From: Madras)*

J. C. SHAH, G. K. MITTER, K. S. HEGDE, A. N. GROVER AND A. N. RAY, JJ.

Khajamian Wakf Estates etc. Appellants v. The State of Madras etc. Respondents.

Civil Appeals Nos. 2480 to 2509, 2543 to 2546, 2547 to 2553, 2559, 2575, 2576 & 2602 of 1966, 214 to 217, 672 to 674, 1053, 1054, 1055, 1062, 1063, 1457 and 1458 of 1967, and 162, 672, 67E and 1000 of 1968, D/- 18-11-1970.

(A) Constitution of India, Art. 31A—Madras Inam Estates (Abolition and Conversion Into Ryotwari) Act (26 of 1963), Pre. — Madras Lease-Holds (Abolition and Conversion Into Ryotwari) Act (27 of 1963) Pre. — Madras Minor Inams (Abolition and Conversion Into Ryotwari) Act, (30 of 1963), Pre. — Constitutionality — Acts cannot be challenged on ground of violation of Arts. 14, 19 and 31 of Constitution.

The Acts are completely protected by Art. 31A from challenge on the ground that they violate Arts. 14, 19 and 31 of the Constitution. (Para 4)

The Acts are laws providing for the acquisition by the State "estate" as contemplated by Art. 31-A. They seek to abolish all intermediate holders and to establish direct relationship between the Government and the occupants of the concerned lands. These legislations were undertaken as a part of agrarian reform. Hence the provisions relating to acquisition or the extinguishment of the rights of the intermediate holders fall within Art. 31-A. AIR 1969 SC 453, Followed.

(Para 6)

The question whether as a result of Madras Act 40 of 1956, certain Inams have ceased to be Inams, is immaterial as they are "estate" within the meaning of Art. 31-A because they fall either under sub-clauses (I) or (II) or (III) of Clause (a) of Art. 31-A (2) and therefore the provisions of the Acts cannot be challenged on the ground that they infringe Arts. 14, 19 and 31.

(Para 7)

It may be that for some of the properties included in the Inam no compensation is provided, but, it cannot be said that no compensation is provided for the acquisition of the Inam as a whole in view of S. 18 of Act 26 of 1963 which provides that compensation shall be determined for each Inam as a whole and not separately for each of the interests in the Inams.

(Para 8)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 246 — Madras Inam Estates (Abolition and Conversion Into Ryotwari) Act (26 of 1963), Pre. — Madras Lease-Holds (Abolition and Conversion Into Ryotwari) Act (27 of 1963), Pre. — Madras Minor Inams (Abolition and Conversion Into Ryotwari) Act (30 of 1963), Pre. — Validity — Acts are not invalid on ground that provisions in the Acts reducing liability of tenants in payment of arrears of rent are beyond legislative competence of the State Legislature.

The Acts are not invalid on ground that the provisions in the Acts reducing the liability of the tenants in the matter of payment of the arrears of rent, whether decreed or not are beyond the legislative competence of the State legislature. (Para 10)

The arrears contemplated by the Acts are either arrears of rent or debts due from agriculturists. If they are treated as arrears of rent then the State legislature had power to legislate in respect of the same under Entry 18 of List II of the VIIth Schedule. If they are considered as debts due from the agriculturists then the State legislature had competence to legislate in respect of the same under Entry 30 of the same list.

(Para 10)

(C) Constitution of India, Arts. 31 (2) and 31-A — Madras Inams Estates (Abolition and Conversion Into Ryotwari) Act (26 of 1963), Pre. — Madras Lease-Holds (Abolition and Conversion Into Ryotwari) Act (27 of 1963), Pre. — Madras Minor Inams (Abolition and Conversion Into Ryotwari) Act (30 of 1963), Pre. — Validity — Acts do not violate Art. 31 (2) merely because in regard to Inams belonging to religious and charitable institutions Acts provided payment of compensation to them every year as Tasdik and not in lump sum — Moreover, the provision is protected by Art. 31A. (Para 11)

(D) Constitution of India, Arts. 31 and 26 — Madras Inam Estates (Abolition and Conversion Into Ryotwari) Act (26 of 1963), Pre. — Madras Lease-Holds (Abolition and Conversion Into Ryotwari) Act (27 of 1963) Pre. — Madras Minor Inams (Abolition and Conversion Into Ryotwari) Act (30 of 1963) Pre. — Validity — Acts are not invalid on ground that they provide for acquisition of properties belonging to religious denomination.

The Legislature by providing in the Acts for acquisition of properties belonging to religious denominations has not violated Art. 26 of the Constitution. (Para 12)

The provisions in Art. 26 (c) and (d) do not take away the right of the State to acquire property belonging to religious denominations. Those denominations can own, acquire properties and administer them in accordance with law. That does not mean that the property owned by them cannot be acquired. Article 26 does not interfere with the right of the State to acquire property. (Para 12)

(E) Constitution of India, Art. 31A Second Proviso—Acquisition in breach of second Proviso to Art. 31A will be invalid to that extent. (Para 13) Cases Referred: Chronological Paras (1969) AIR 1969 SC 453 (V 56)=

Ramamurthy and Vineet Kumar, Advocates, with him) for Respondent No. 2 (In Civil Appeals Nos. 2488 to 2490 of 1966).

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

HEGDE, J.: In this batch of appeals, the validity of the Madras Inam Estates (Abolition and Conversion Into Ryotwari) Act, 1963 (Madras Act 26 of 1963); the Madras Lease-Holds (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act, 1963 (Madras Act 27 of 1963) and the Madras Minor Inams (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act 1963. (Madras Act 30 of 1963) is challenged on the ground that the material provisions in those Acts are violative of Arts. 14, 19 (1) (f) and 31 of the Constitution. The provisions in these Acts reducing the tenants' liability to pay the arrears of rent are also challenged on the ground that the legislature had no competence to enact those provisions. A few other minor contentions are also raised in these appeals to which reference will be made in the course of the judgment. All these contentions had been unsuccessfully urged before the High Court. Dealing with the allegation of infringement of Arts. 14, 19 and 31, the High Court in addition to holding that there has been no infringement of those Articles has further held that the challenge to the validity of these Acts on the basis of those Articles is precluded in view of Art. 31-A. Dealing with the contention relating to the reduction of rent the High Court came to the conclusion that the legislature had power to enact the impugned provisions. The High Court also has given reasons for rejecting the other contentions advanced before it. Aggrieved by the decision of the High Court these appeals have been brought by special leave.

2. The impugned statutes deal with agrarian reforms. They purport to deal with Inam lands. It is pointless to go to the origin of Inams or about their early history. Suffice it to say that the Urdu word "Inam" means a gift. The Inams grants were made by the Rulers for various purposes. Some of them were granted to institutions and some to individuals. Broadly speaking there were three types of Inams. The first type consisted of the grant of the melwaram right alone. The second category consisted of the grant of both the melwaram as well as the kudivaram right. In addition to these two Inams, there were what are known as Minor Inams. Sometime prior to 1862, the Government took up the question of enfranchising the Inams. The Inams Commissioner went into the rights of various persons claiming to be Inamcars. Thereafter the Madras Enfranchised Inams Act, 1862 (Madras Act IV of 1862) was passed for declaring and confirming the title of the Inamcars. Section 2 of that Act provided that the title deeds issued by the Inams Commissioner or an authenticated extract from the register of the Commissioner or Collector shall be deemed sufficient proof of the enfranchisement of land previously held on Inam tenure. By Madras Inams (Assessment) Act, 1956 (Madras Act 40 of 1956), full assessment was levied on all Inam lands except melwaram Inams granted on service tenure, without affecting in any way the rights as between the Inamdar and other persons, if any, in possession or enjoyment of the Inam land.

3. Where the Inam comprised the entire village, the same was treated as an "estate" in the Madras Proprietary Estates' Village Service Act, 1894 (Madras Act 2 of 1894) and the Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act, 1895 (Madras Act 3 of 1895) as well as in Madras Estates Land Act, 1908 (Madras Act 1 of 1908). Madras Estates Land Act, 1908 recognised the ryots' permanent tenure. That Act secured a permanent right of occupancy to every ryot who at the commencement, was in possession of "ryoti" land or who was subsequently admitted to the possession of such land. Then came the Madras Estates Land (Third Amendment) Act, 1936 (Madras Act 18 of 1936). That Act amplified the definition of the "estate" in the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, so as to bring within its scope all Inam villages, of which the grant was made, confirmed or recognised by the Government. It also provided that when a question arises whether any land was the landholder's private land or not, the land should be presumed not to be Inamdar's private land until the contrary was proved. In 1937, the Madras Government appointed the Prakasam Committee to enquire into and report the conditions which prevailed in the Zamindari and other proprietary areas in the State. That committee submitted its report together with a draft bill on the lines of its recommendations, but no action was taken on that report as the Congress Ministry which appointed it resigned. Then we come to the Madras Estates (Abolition and Conversion Into Ryotwari) Act, 1948 (Madras Act 26 of 1948). This Act applies to all estates i.e. Zamindari and under-tenure estates and all Inam villages in which the grant consisted of melwaram alone. That Act as its preamble says is an Act to provide for the repeal of the permanent settlements, the acquisition of the rights of landholders in permanently settled and certain other estates in the Province of Madras and the introduction of the ryotwari settlement in such estates. To complete the agrarian reform initiated by this Act, the impugned Acts appear to have been enacted. The Preamble to Madras Act 26 of 1963 says that it is an Act to provide for the acquisition of all rights of landholders in Inam estates in the State of Madras and the introduction of the ryotwari settlement in such estates. That Act follows by and large the provisions in Act 26 of 1948. In Act 26 of 1963 Inams estates are divided into two categories namely (1) existing Inam estate and (2) a new Inam estate. The existing Inam estate refers to the estate consisting of the whole village and the new Inam estate means a part village Inam estate of Pudukkottai Inam estate. The "New Inam estate" was not an estate known to law earlier. It is merely a name given to part village Inam estate or a Pudukkottai Inam estate for drafting convenience. Act 27 of 1963 is an Act to provide for the termination of the leases of certain lease-holds granted by the Government, the acquisition of the rights of the lessees in such lease-holds, and the introduction of the ryotwari settlement in such leaseholds. Act 30 of 1963 is an Act to provide for the acquisition of the rights of the Inamdars in minor Inams and the introduction of the ryotwari settlement in such Inams.

4. We do not think it necessary to go into the contention that one or more provisions of the impugned Acts are violative of Arts. 14, 19 and 31, as in our opinion these Acts are completely protected by Art. 31-A of the Constitution which says that:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in article 13, no law providing for—

(a) the acquisition by the State of any estate or of any rights therein or the extinguishment or modification of any such rights. . . shall be deemed to be void on the ground that it is inconsistent with, or takes away or abridges any of the rights conferred by article 14, article 19 or article 31."

5. The expression "estate" is defined in sub-art. (2) of Art. 31-A. That definition includes not merely Inams but also land held under ryotwari settlement as well as land held or let for the purpose of agriculture or for purposes ancillary thereto, including waste land, forest land, land for pastures or site or buildings and other structures occupied by the cultivators of land, agriculturists and village artisans.

6. The impugned Acts are laws providing for the acquisition by the State "estate" as contemplated by Art. 31-A. They seek to abolish all intermediate holders and to establish direct relationship between the Government and the occupants of the concerned lands. These legislations were undertaken as a part of agrarian reform. Hence the provisions relating to acquisition or the extinguishment of the rights of the intermediate holders fall within the protective wings of Art. 31-A — see B. Shankara Rao v. State of Mysore, (1969) 3 SCR 1 = (AIR 1969 SC 453).

7. It is next contended on behalf of the appellants that the lands on which full assessment was levied under Act 40 of 1956 ceased to be inams and therefore provisions of the Madras Act 26 of 1963 cannot be applied to the same. We have not thought it necessary to go into the question whether as a result of Madras Act 40 of 1956, certain Inams have ceased to be Inams, as in our opinion, whether they continued to be Inams or not they are still "estate" within the meaning of Art. 31-A because they fall either under sub-clauses (I) or (II) or (III) of Clause (a) of Art. 31-A (2) and that being so the provisions of the impugned Acts cannot be challenged on the ground that they infringe Arts. 14, 19 and 31. The contention that as the State purported to abolish Inams and not other intermediaries the law cannot be held to be valid if the intermediaries sought to be removed are not Inamdars is an untenable one. If the impugned legislation can be traced to a valid legislative power, the fact that the legislature wrongly described some of the intermediaries sought to be removed does not make the law invalid. From the above observations, it should not be understood that we have come to the conclusion that the intermediaries concerned were not Inamdars. We have not gone into that question. From the provisions of the impugned Acts, it is quite clear that the intention of the legislature was to abolish all intermediaries including the owners of those "estates" that were subjected to full assessment by Act 40 of 1956.

8. It was next urged that Article 31-A does not protect a legislation where no compensation whatsoever has been provided for taking the "estates". We do not think we need go into that question. This contention bears only on the provisions of the Madras Act 26 of 1963. Section 18 of that Act provides that compensation shall be determined for each Inam as a whole and not separately for each of the interests in the Inams. The validity of this section was not challenged before us. All that was urged was that for some of the properties included in the Inam, no compensation was provided. Even if we assume this contention to be correct, it cannot be said that no compensation was provided for the acquisition of the Inam as a whole. Hence Art. 31-A bars the plea that there was contravention of Art. 31 (2) in making the acquisition in question. One of the contentions taken on behalf of the appellants is that the impugned Acts to the extent they purport to acquire mining lands are outside the purview of Art. 31-A. It is not known whether the lands in which mining operations are going on were let or held as "estates". There is also no evidence to show that the owners of those lands are entitled to the mines. Hence it is not possible to uphold the contention that lands concerned in some of the appeals have been acquired without paying compensation.

9. In order to avoid the bar of Art. 31-A, a curious plea was put forward. It was urged that when the concerned bills were submitted to the President for his assent as required by the first proviso to Art. 31-A, the President was not made aware of the implications of the bills. This contention is a wholly untenable one. There is no material before us from which we could conclude that the President or his advisers were unaware of the implications of those bills. We must proceed on the basis that the President had given his assent to those bills after duly considering the implication of the provisions contained therein.

10. It was next urged that the provisions in the impugned Acts reducing the liability of the tenants in the matter of payment of the arrears of rent, whether decreed or not were beyond the legislative competence of the State legislature. This contention is again untenable. Those arrears are either arrears of rent or debts due from agriculturists. If they are treated as arrears of rent then the State legislature had legislative power to legislate in respect of the same under Entry 18 of List II of the VIIth Schedule. If they are considered as debts due from the agriculturists then the State legislature had competence to legislate in respect of the same under Entry 30 of the same list.

11. In regard to the Inams belonging to the religious and charitable institutions, the impugned Acts do not provide for payment of compensation in a lump sum but on the other hand provision is made to pay them a portion of the compensation every year as Tasdik. This is only a mode of payment of the compensation. That mode was evidently adopted in the interest of the concerned institutions. We are unable to agree that the method adopted is violative of Art. 31 (2). At any rate that provision is protected by Art. 31-A.

12. It was next urged that by acquiring the properties belonging to religious denominations, the legislature violated Art. 26 (c) and (d) which provide that religious denominations shall have the right to own and acquire movable and immovable property and administer such property in accordance with law. These provisions do not take away the right of the State to acquire property belonging to religious denominations. Those denominations can own, acquire properties and administer them in accordance with law. That does not mean that the property owned by them cannot be acquired. As a result of acquisition they cease to own that property. Thereafter their right to administer that property ceases because it is no longer their property. Article 26 does not interfere with the right of the State to acquire property.

13. Mr. S. V. Gupte appearing for some of the appellants urged that the impugned Act contravenes the second proviso to Art. 31-A. From the material before us it is not possible to hold that any property under the personal cultivation of any of the appellants had been acquired. Further there is no material to show what ceiling is? Hence it is not possible for us to examine the correctness of that contention. If in any particular case, the second proviso to Art. 31-A has been breached, then to that extent, the acquisition will become invalid.

14. It was urged by Mr. Sastri appearing for some of the appellants that the impugned Acts do not acquire the lands concerned in some of the appeals. This contention was not gone into by the High Court. Dealing with that contention, the High Court in its judgment observed:

"But the applicability of the impugned Acts to the Inams in question cannot be conveniently investigated in the present writ proceedings. The question will have to be determined with reference to the terms of the grant, the extent of the grant has to be ascertained by reference to the relevant materials. Section 5 of Madras Act XXXI of 1963 (XXX of 1963?) makes special provision for determination of the question whether any non-ryotwari area is or is not an 'existing Inam Estate' or 'part village Inam Estate' or a minor Inam or whole Inam village in Pudukkottai. It is stated at the bar that in most of the cases now before us the parties have applied under the provisions of the said Act for determination of the character of the Inams respectively held by them. It is needless to point out that the Tribunal constituted under the Act will be entitled to decide that a particular property is neither an 'existing Inam estate' nor a part village Inam estate nor a whole Inam village in Puddukkottai and completely out of the coverage of Acts XXVI and XXX of 1963. We also make it clear that the disposal of these writ petitions now does not preclude the Inamdars from agitating the question that a particular property is not an Inam at all and does not fall under any of the aforesaid four categories or falls under one or other of the categories as may be urged for the Inamdars."

15. We agree with the High Court that the contention in question can be more appropriately gone into in the manner suggested by the High Court.

16. In the result these appeals fail and they are dismissed. But under the circumstances, we make no order as to costs in these appeals.

Appeals dismissed.

The Megna Mills Co., Ltd., (In both the Appeals); Appellant v. Ashoka Marketing Ltd., (In both the appeals), Respondent.

Civil Appeals Nos. 2012 and 2013 of 1966, D/- 6-11-1970.

Forward Contracts (Regulation) Act (1952), Sections 15 and 11 — East India Jute and Hessain Exchange Ltd., Bye-laws, Bye-laws 1 (b), 15 and 17 — Bye-law 1 (b) is mandatory — Non-compliance thereof invalidates contract.

Bye-law 1 (b) of Chapter V is mandatory when read with bye-laws 15 and 17. The bye-law requires details in the form in Appendix II to be completed in all cases. Condition No. 2 cannot be regarded as inconsequential because it must be stipulated in the contract as to how many working days' notice has to be given by the buyers to place the contracted goods along side "export vessel in the port of Calcutta". Literal compliance with the prescribed form may not be essential but if the contract does not contain all the terms and conditions set out in the form the contract will be void under the provisions of the Act and the bye-laws. AIR 1933 PC 55, Followed; Matters Nos. 26 and 27 of 1966, D/- 4-4-1966 (Cal), Affirmed.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

GROVER, J.:— These two appeals by special leave are from a judgment of the Calcutta High Court holding that the disputes between the parties could not be referred to arbitration.

"We have today bought from you the following goods:

Description	: Jute Carpet Backing cloth bound on card-board cores 152" wide.
Weight	: 9 oz. on 36".
Warp Ends	: Per Inch 15.
Weft Ends	: Per Inch 13.
Oil contents	: Upto 2%.
Quantity	: 5,000 Rolls, each roll having continuous length of 300 yards approximately Rate	: Rs. 4,000/- per ton.
Delivery	: 500 Rolls monthly; March 63 to December 1963.

All other terms and conditions of the East India and Hessain Exchange standard contract will be applicable to this contract. Please sign your acceptance on the duplicate copy of this letter."

3. The appellant from time to time delivered certain Rolls of Jute Carpet Backing cloth under the aforesaid contract, the price of which was paid by the respondent. As regards the balance number of Rolls deliverable under the contract the appellant purchased back and the respondent resold the balance quantities of goods by a contract dated December 9, 1963 which transaction was embodied in a letter of the appellant to the respondent dated December 9, 1963 and which was countersigned by the respondent. According to the appellant it was agreed or understood between the parties that deliveries under the two contracts of December 21, 1962 and December 9, 1963 would be set off against each other. As regards 1,000 Rolls deliverable for the months of August and September 1963 under

2. It is necessary to state the facts only in Civil Appeal No. 2012/66. The appellant was and still is a member of the East India Jute and Hessain Exchange Limited, hereinafter called the "Exchange", which is the only association recognised under the provisions of the Forward Contracts (Regulation) Act, 1952, hereinafter called the "Act". The respondent is not a member of the said association. On December 21, 1962 transaction was entered into between the parties by means of a letter written by the respondent to the appellant. This letter was in the following terms:

the contract dated December 21, 1962 the appellant is stated to have received from the respondent difference in the price of goods but in respect of the balance of 1500 Rolls the respondent did not pay the difference. The appellant demanded the difference payable by the respondent under the said contracts. Disputes and differences having arisen between the parties in the matter the appellant referred its claim to the arbitration of Bengal Chamber of Commerce and Industry. This was purported to have been done on the footing that the contracts provided that all terms and conditions thereof would be governed by the bye-laws of the exchange for trading in transferable specific delivery contracts. The standard contract forms and the rules and bye-laws of the Exchange, inter alia, provided for arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce and Industry. When the Chamber proceeded with the arbitration pursuant to the reference the respondent filed a petition before the Calcutta High Court on February 19, 1966 under Section 33 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1940. It was prayed that the extent and validity of the arbitration agreement contained in the contracts be determined and it be declared that there was no valid arbitration agreement between the parties in respect of the contracts dated Dec. 21, 1962 and December 9, 1963. The main point raised in the respondent's petition was that the contracts were not in accordance with the provisions of the Act or the bye-laws of the Exchange and were not in the forms prescribed and were, therefore, void and illegal. This petition was heard by A. N. Sen, J., who allowed the petition and held that the contracts were illegal and there was no valid arbitration agreement between the parties.

4. The Act provides for regulation of certain matters relating to forward contracts, the prohibition of options in goods and for matters connected therewith including the setting up of a Forward Markets Commission, recognition of association for the purpose of the Act, for issuing notifications for regulating or prohibiting forward contracts and option in goods etc. Section 11 empowers a recognised association to make bye-laws for the regulation and control of forward contracts subject to previous approval of the Central Government. Sub-section (3) of Section 11 is as follows:—

(3) "The bye-laws under this section may—

(a) specify the bye-laws the contravention of any of which shall make a contract entered into otherwise than in accordance with the bye-laws void under sub-section (2) of Section 15;

(aa) specify the bye-laws the contravention of any of which shall make a forward contract entered into otherwise than in accordance with the bye-laws illegal under sub-section (3-A) of Section 15.

Under Section 15 (1) the Central Government may by notification declare the circumstances in which the forward contracts in notified goods would be void and illegal. Sub-section (2) of Section 15 provides that any forward contract in goods entered into in pursuance of sub-section (1) which is in contravention of any of the bye-laws specified in this behalf under clause (a) of sub-section (3) of Section 11 shall be void. Sub-section (3-A) makes any forward contract in goods entered into in pursuance of sub-section (1) which at the date of the contract is in contravention of any of the bye-laws specified in this behalf under clause (aa) of sub-section (3) of Section 11 illegal.

5. By means of a notification dated March 29, 1958, the Central Government declared as follows:—

"In exercise of the powers conferred by sub-section (1) of Section 15 of the Forward Contracts (Regulation) Act, 1952 (74 of 1952) the Central Government hereby declares that the said section shall apply to jute goods (hessian cloth made of jute or bags of such hessian cloth and sacking cloth) in the City of Calcutta."

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 11 of the Act the Exchange made bye-laws for trading in transferable specific delivery contracts in jute goods. These bye-laws and the forms of the contract prescribed are contained in Working Manual Volume III. Chapter V of the Bye-laws contains the general trading provisions. According to bye-law 1 (b) all Transferable Specific Delivery Contracts shall be in writing in the prescribed forms (Appendix II for jute goods and Appendix IV for raw jute). Clause (g) of the aforesaid bye-law (1) laid down that all transferable specific delivery contracts shall be subject to the provisions of the bye-laws. Bye-laws 15 and 17 may be reproduced:

"15 "No member shall enter into a transferable specific delivery contract in raw jute and/or jute goods otherwise than on the terms and conditions prescribed under these Bye-laws."

17 "Any transferable specific delivery contract entered into in raw jute and/or jute goods which at the date of the contract is in contravention of the provisions of any of the Bye-laws 1 (c), 13, 14, 15 and 16 of Chapter V shall be illegal under the provisions of Section 15 (3-A) of the Forward Contracts (Regulation) Act, 1952."

6. The main controversy has centered on the question whether the contracts out of which the disputes arose were in the form set out in Appendix II in the Working Manual. It was maintained by the appellant that although the contracts out of which the disputes arose did not strictly conform to the prescribed form but they were substantially in the same terms as were contained in the form. As only substantial compliance was necessary the appellant could not be denied the benefit of bye-laws contained in Chapter X of the Working Manual relating to arbitration. Bye-law I of that Chapter provides that arbitration of any claims and disputes whether admitted or not arising out of or in relation to all transferable specific delivery contracts in raw jute and/or jute goods between members or between members and non-members under the provisions of the bye-laws shall be referred to the Tribunal of Arbitration either of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce and Industry or of the Indian Chamber of Commerce, Calcutta, as is agreed in the contract in accordance with the rules framed by the said Chamber for the purpose of arbitration by its tribunal from time to time provided where in a T. S. D. contract the name of the Tribunal of Arbitration of either of the aforesaid two Chambers is omitted, such reference shall be made to the Tribunal of Arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce and Industry. The case of the respondent, however, was that the contracts were not in the form contained in Appendix II in the Working Manual which was the prescribed form under the bye-laws and therefore the bye-laws including the one relating to arbitration in Chapter X could not be made applicable for the purpose of referring the disputes to the Tribunal of Arbitration which, in the present case, was the Bengal Chamber of Commerce and Industry, Calcutta. The High Court came to the conclusion that the contracts in question violated bye-laws 1 (b) and 15 in Chapter V of the Working Manual. The contravention of these bye-laws rendered the contracts illegal under the provisions of bye-law 17 of the same Chapter. The learned Judge noticed in particular the absence of any term in the contracts similar to clause (2) in the prescribed form in Appendix II which is as follows:

"Buyers to give clear working days notice to place goods along-side."

Now in the contracts no such term appeared that the buyers would give clear notice to place goods along-side, of the number of working days specified. It has been contended before us on behalf of the appellant that the mere absence of this condition or term in the contract was not sufficient to take them outside the prescribed form which had only to be substantially complied with and it was not necessary that blanks in each and every condition in the form should have been filled up. It has further been urged that bye-law 1 (b) of Chapter V could not be regarded as mandatory requiring the details in the form in Appendix II to be completed in all cases. Even with reference to condition (2) in the prescribed form it has been submitted that if the number of days was not specified a reasonable time should have been read into that condition. In other words the buyers were to give notice to place goods along-side within a reasonable time.

7. In our opinion, the High Court was right in holding that the contracts in question were not in the prescribed form and thus they did not comply with the requirement of bye-law 1 (b) of Chapter V. There can be no manner of doubt that that bye-law is mandatory when read with bye-laws 15 and 17. It must be remembered that under bye-law 15 no member shall enter into any transferable specific delivery contract otherwise than on terms and conditions prescribed under the bye-laws and under bye-law 17 if there is a contravention, inter alia, of bye-law 15 the contract shall be rendered illegal by virtue of the provisions contained in Section 15 (3-A) of the Act. Section 11 (3) (aa) specifically empowers the Exchange to make bye-laws the contravention of any of which shall make a forward contract entered into otherwise than in accordance with such bye-laws illegal. If, therefore, the contracts in question did not comply with the requirement of bye-law 1 (b) of Chapter V they would be rendered illegal and void.

8. It is true that in the letters evidencing the contracts it was mentioned "all other terms and conditions of the East India and Hessian Exchange standard contract will be applicable", which may be taken to import conditions 1 to 7 given in the penultimate column of the prescribed form. There would still be non-compliance with condition No. 2 reproduced before. Even if it was not necessary to use the same language the number of clear working days had to be specified which was not done in the contracts in dispute. Condition No. 2 cannot be regarded as inconsequential because it must be stipulated how many working days notice has to be given by the buyers to place goods along-side "export vessel in the Port of Calcutta". Literal compliance with the prescribed form may not be essential but if the contract does not contain all the terms and conditions set out in the form the contract will be void under the provisions set out before; (See the ratio of the decision in Radhakisson Gopikisson v. Balmukand Ramchandra, 60 Ind App 63 = (AIR 1933 PC 55).)

9. For the reasons given above the appeals must fail and they are dismissed with costs. One hearing fee.

Appeals dismissed.

Additional Collector of Customs, Calcutta and another, Appellants v. M/s. Best & Co. Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 2003 of 1966, D/- 23-10-1970.

Imports and Exports (Control) Act (1947), S. 5 (as amended by Act 4 of 1960) — Breach of conditions of licence — No order confiscating goods can be made — (Sea Customs Act (1878), Section 167 (8)).

Contravention of any condition of a licence granted under any order is liable to be punished under S. 5 as amended. But on the terms of S. 5 as amended, the right to impose penalty for contravention of any condition of a licence may be exercised under the Sea Customs Act, 1878, and not under the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947. For breach of any condition of a licence, it is open to the authorities to direct prosecution, but no order confiscating goods and imposing penalty in lieu thereof can be made. The order of confiscation can only be made under S. 167 cl. 8 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878. The provisions of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, cannot be invoked to punish the breach of a condition of a licence granted under the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947. (Paras 9, 10, 11)

M/s. Ram Panjvani and S. P. Nayar, Advocates, for Appellants.

SHAH, J.: On March 31, 1959, the Ministry of Commerce and Industry, Government of India, granted to the respondents a licence permitting them to import from West Germany certain machinery described therein of the maximum C. I. F. value of Rs. 45,000/-. Condition No. 1 of the licence provided that:

"The x x application is accepted and import licence is hereby granted having quantity and value as the limiting factors and is not valid for clearance if the actual value of any item exceeds the C.I.F. value indicated in the licence by more than 5%". The respondents submitted a bill of entry dated July 1, 1960, disclosing the C.I.F. value of the consignment as Rs. 45,179-92 inclusive of landing charges, and cleared the consignment after paying duty assessed by the Customs authorities on the real value of the goods as disclosed in the bill of entry.

2. On June 20, 1961 the Customs authorities issued a notice requiring the respondents to show cause why penal action should not be taken against them under S. 167 (8) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, as being persons concerned in the unauthorised importation of the goods. This notice was amended by notice dated September 21, 1961, whereby the respondents were charged with having committed offences under S. 167 (8) read with S. 3 (2) of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947, for illegally importing the machinery. The respondents claimed that no breach of the conditions of the licence was committed. The Additional Collector of Customs, Calcutta, by order dated March 17, 1962, directed confiscation of the machinery under S. 167 (8) of the Sea Customs Act read with S. 3 (2) of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947, and permitted the respondents to pay a fine of Rs. 20,000/- in lieu of confiscation. A personal penalty of Rs. 25,000/- was also imposed on the respondents.

3. The respondents then moved a petition before the High Court of Calcutta under Art. 226 of the Constitution praying for a writ quashing the adjudication order dated March 17, 1962. A Single Judge of the Calcutta (Contd. on Col. 2)

High Court dismissed the petition, but in appeal under the Letters Patent the High Court reversed the decision and issued a writ of certiorari quashing the order dated March 17, 1962. The Additional Collector of Customs, Calcutta, has appealed to this Court with certificate granted by the High Court.

4. The only question which falls to be determined is whether for breach of a condition of the licence penalty may be imposed under S. 5 of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947, read with the Sea Customs Act, 1878.

5. The relevant statutory provisions may first be noticed. Under Section 167 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, the offences mentioned in the first column of the Schedule are punishable to the extent mentioned in the third column of the same with reference to such offences respectively:

Offences.	Section of this Act to which offence has reference.	Penalties.
8. If any goods, the importation or exportation of which is for the time being prohibited or restricted by or under Chapter IV of this Act, be imported into or exported from India contrary to such prohibition or restriction; or	18 & 19	such goods shall be liable to be confiscated; and any person concerned in any such offence, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding three times the value of the goods, or not exceeding one thousand rupees.

Chapter IV of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, contains three sections: Ss. 13, 19 & 19A. By Section 18 an absolute prohibition is imposed in respect of importation of goods by land or by sea specified therein. Section 19 provides that the Central Government may from time to time, by notification in the Official Gazette prohibit or restrict the bringing or taking by sea or by land goods of any specified description into or out of India across any customs frontier as defined by the Central Government.

6. The Central Legislature enacted the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947, with the object of authorising prohibition and control on imports and exports. By Section 3 of that Act it was provided:

"(1) The Central Government may by order published in the Official Gazette, make provisions for prohibiting, restricting or otherwise controlling in all cases or in specified classes of cases, and subject to such exceptions

if any, as may be made by or under the order:—

(a) the import, export, carriage coastwise or shipment as ships, stores of goods of any specified description;

(b) the bringing into any port or place in India or goods of any specified description intended to be taken out of India without being removed from the ship or conveyance in which they are being carried.

(2) All goods to which any order under sub-section (1) applies shall be deemed to be goods of which the import or export has been prohibited under Section 19 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, and all the provisions of that Act shall have effect accordingly, except that Section 183 thereof shall have effect as if for the word "shall" therein the word "may" were substituted.

(3) x x x x

Section 5 of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947, as originally enacted, provided:

"If any person contravenes any order made or deemed to have been made under this Act, he shall, without prejudice to any confiscation or penalty to which he may be liable under the provisions of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, as applied by sub-section (2) of section 3, be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both."

7. In exercise of the power conferred by Sections 3 and 4-A of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947, the Central Government issued the Imports (Control) Order, 1955. Clause 3 of the Imports (Control) Order prevented importation of any goods of the description specified in Sch. I, except under, and in accordance with, a licence or a customs clearance permit granted by the Central Government or by any officer specified in Sch. II. By sub-cl. (2) of cl. 3 it was provided that if in any case, it was found that the goods imported under a licence did not conform to the description given in the licence or were shipped prior to the date of issue of the licence under which they were claimed to have been imported, then, without prejudice to any action that may be taken against the licensee under the Sea Customs Act, 1878, in respect of the said importation, the licence may be treated as having been utilised for importing the said goods. By cl. 5 certain conditions could be imposed by the Licensing Authority issuing a licence.

8. It may be recalled that one of the conditions of the licence issued to the respondents was that the value of any item shall not exceed the C.I.F. value indicated in the licence by more than 5%. It was the case of the Customs authorities that the real value of the machinery imported exceeded the declared value, and on that account the respondents had infringed the conditions of the licence. In East India Commercial Company Ltd., Calcutta v. Collector of Customs, Calcutta, 1963-3 SCR 338 = (AIR 1962 SC 1893) this Court held that S. 167 cl. 8 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, read with S. 3 (2) of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947, authorised the imposition of penalty, if goods were imported in contravention of any order under the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947; but the section did not, expressly or by implication, authorise confiscation of goods imported under a valid licence on the ground that a condition of the licence not imposed by the order was infringed.

9. This view was reiterated by this Court in Boothalinga Agencies v. V. T. C. Poriaswami Nadar, (1969) 1 SCR 65 = (AIR 1969 SC 110). These cases were decided on the interpretation of S. 5 of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947, as it stood before it was amended by Act 4 of 1960. By the Imports and Exports (Control) Amendment Act 4 of 1960, in S. 5, after the words "any order made or deemed to have been made under this Act", the words "or any condition of a licence granted under any such order" were inserted. Contravention of any condition of a licence granted under any order was therefore liable to be punished under S. 5 as amended.

10. In the present case the Customs authorities did not direct prosecution for contravention of any condition of a licence: they directed confiscation of the machinery and imposed penalty in lieu thereof. But on the terms of S. 5 as amended, the right to impose penalty for contravention of any condition of a licence may be exercised under the Sea Customs Act, 1878, and not under the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947. For breach of any condition of a licence it is open to the authorities to direct prosecution, but no order confiscating goods and imposing penalty in lieu thereof could be made. The order of confiscation could only be made under S. 167 cl. 8 of the Sea Customs Act 1878: in terms cl. 8 of S. 167 provides for confiscation of the goods importation or exportation of which is for the time being prohibited or restricted by or under Ch. IV of the Sea Customs Act, 1878. The notification of which the contravention is said to have been made, is not issued under S. 19 of the Sea Customs Act, but under the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947. It has not been urged before us, and rightly, that penalty of confiscation is incurred under the provisions of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, for breach of the conditions of the licence.

11. In our judgment, the High Court was right in holding that the scope of power under the Sea Customs Act was not enlarged by the amendment to S. 5 of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, and there is nothing in the amended S. 5 of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act which warrants the view that the provisions of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, may be invoked to punish the breach of a condition of a licence granted under the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947.

12. The appeal fails and is dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Constitution of India, Art. 311 (2) — Date of compulsory retirement must be determined on basis of service record — Deprivation of guarantee under Art. 311 (2) — Plea of — When open. AIR 1967 Assam 13, Reversed.

The date of compulsory retirement under Fundamental Rules, R. 56 (a) must be determined on the basis of the service record and not on what the Government servant claims to be his date of birth unless the service record is first corrected consistently with appropriate procedure. Until the record is so corrected, employee cannot claim that he had been deprived of the guarantee under Art. 311 (2) by having been compulsorily retired on attaining age of superannuation as determined on basis of entry of his date of birth in the service record.

Mr. Naunit Lal, Advocate, for Appellants; Mr. R. Gopalakrishnan, Advocate, for Respondent No. 1.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHAH, J.: Daksha Prasad Deka—hereinafter called 'the respondent'—was appointed Assistant Sub-Inspector of Police with effect from January 17, 1929. On a representation made by the respondent the date of his birth was entered in the service record as July 1, 1910. Under F.R. 56 (a) the respondent was liable to be compulsorily retired on July 1, 1965. In 1955 the respondent applied that the date of birth entered in his service record, be shown as August 1, 1911. That application was rejected. The respondent again applied in 1963 for correction of his date of birth. The application was rejected and by order dated June 26, 1965, the respondent was informed that he will stand superannuated on June 30, 1965. His representation made to the Government of Assam against that order was unsuccessful.

2. The respondent then applied to the High Court of Assam praying for a writ in the nature of mandamus requiring the State of Assam to forbear from giving effect to the order dated June 26, 1965. The High Court quashed the order dated June 26, 1965, and directed the State of Assam to give an opportunity to the respondent to show cause against the order directing compulsory retirement and an opportunity to prove his true date of birth. Against that order, this appeal is preferred with special leave.

3. In the opinion of the High Court if the true date of birth of the respondent was August 1, 1911, the order compulsorily retiring the respondent on June 30, 1965, without giving him an opportunity to prove his true age, infringed the guarantee of Art. 311 (2) of the Constitution. In our judgment, the High Court was wrong in holding that there was any infringement of Art. 311 (2) of the Constitution.

4. In the service record of the respondent his date of birth was recorded as July 1, 1910 and under F. R. 56 (a) the respondent was liable to be compulsorily retired on the date on which he attained the age of 55 years. The date of compulsory retirement under F. R. 56 (a) must in our judgment, be determined on the basis of the service record, and not on what the respondent claimed to be his date of birth, unless the service record is first corrected consistent with the appropriate procedure. A public servant may dispute the date of birth as entered in the service record, and may apply for correction of the record. But until the record is corrected, he cannot claim that he has been deprived of the guarantee under Art. 311 (2) of the Constitution by being compulsorily retired on attaining the age of superannuation on the footing of the date of birth entered in the service record.

5. It is true that the State authorities did not give to the respondent an opportunity to support his case that he was born on August 1, 1911, and that the service record was erroneous. But in view of S. R. 8 Note, which governed the employment of the respondent an application for correction of the service record could not be entertained if it was made within three years before the date of "actual superannuation". S. R. 8 Note provides:

"No alteration in the date of birth of a Government servant should be allowed except in very rare cases where a manifest mistake has been made. Such mistakes should be rectified at the earliest opportunity in the course of—(1) periodical reattestation of the entries in the first page of service book, and (2) preparation of the annual detailed statement of a permanent establishment (Financial Rule Form No. II) in which is noted the date of incumbent's birth. In no case the request for change in the date of birth of a Government servant made on a date within three years of the date

Validity of the Rule is not challenged by the respondent. We are unable to agree with the view of the High Court that the date of "actual superannuation" within the meaning of S. R. 8 Note is the date of superannuation computed with reference to the claim made by the public servant, and not with reference to the date as entered in the service record. If such an interpretation be accepted, S. R. 8 Note would prove in a majority of cases of no practical utility. It is intended by S. R. 8 Note that any error in the service record shall be rectified at the earliest opportunity and in no case should an application for rectification be entertained within three years of the "date of actual superannuation" i.e. the date of superannuation according to the service record.

6. Again, if the contention of the respondent were correct, on the date on which he entered service he was a minor. If on a representation that he had attained the age of majority on the date on which he entered service, it would not be open for him after being admitted to the service, to contend that under the appropriate service rules he could not have been admitted to the service, but for the misrepresentation made by him.

7. Counsel for the respondent relied upon the judgment of this Court in State of Orissa v. Dr. (Miss) Binapani Dei, (1967) 2 SCR 625 = (AIR 1967 SC 1269) in support of the contention that a public servant must be given an opportunity to prove his true date of birth before he is superannuated, and any order passed without such opportunity is illegal. In our judgment Dr. (Miss) Binapani's case, (1967) 2 SCR 625 = (AIR 1967 SC 1269) enunciates no such proposition. In that case in the service record of a public servant, April 10, 1910 was entered as the date of her birth. An enquiry was held and the public servant was required to show cause why her date of birth should not be accepted as April 4, 1907. Thereafter the Government of Orissa determined her date of birth as April 16, 1907, and declared that she should be deemed to have been superannuated on April 16, 1962. This order was challenged by the public servant in a petition to the High Court of Orissa. The High Court held that the order of the State Government amounted to compulsory retirement before she attained the age of superannuation and was contrary to the rules governing her service conditions and amounted to removal within the meaning of Art. 311 of the Constitution, and since she was not given a reasonable opportunity of showing cause against the action proposed to be taken in regard to her, the order was invalid. This Court confirmed the order passed by the High Court of Orissa. It was observed by this Court that even an administrative order which involved civil consequences must be made consistently with the rules of natural justice. The person concerned must be informed of the case of the State and the evidence in support thereof and must be given a fair opportunity to meet the case before an adverse decision is taken. The public servant according to the service record could not be superannuated before April 10, 1965. But by an enquiry which was not held in a manner consistent with the rules of natural justice an order was made altering the date of birth as entered in the service record, and declaring that she was born in 1907. That was plainly an order passed to the prejudice of the public servant without giving an opportunity to meet the case of the State. In the present case, however, the State did not seek to modify the service record; it was the respondent who sought modification of the service record and claimed that he be declared superannuated only on the basis of the rectification prayed for by him. It is true that ordinarily when an application is made for rectification of age by a public servant concerned, the State should give the applicant proper opportunity to prove his case and should give due consideration to the evidence brought before it. But in the present case, since the application for rectification was made within three years of the date of actual superannuation, according to S. R. 8 Note the application could not be entertained. The principle of Dr. (Miss) Binapani's case, (1967) 2 SCR 625 = (AIR 1967 SC 1269) has no application to this case.

8. The appeal is allowed and the order passed by the High Court is set aside. The petition filed by the respondent shall stand dismissed. There will be no order as to costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

J. C. SHAH, K. S. HEGDE AND A. N. GROVER, JJ.

D. D. Suri, Appellant v. A. K. Barren and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 679 of 1970, D/- 22-10-1970.

Constitution of India, Article 226 — Writ petition — Serious allegations of improper motive and mala fides by a senior member of Indian Administrative Service against other senior officers and State Government — Dismissal of petition in limine not justified. O. J. C. No. 82 of 1968, D/- 16-4-1968 (Orissa), Reversed.

Where serious allegations including those of improper motive and mala fides have been made, in the writ petition, by a senior member of the Indian Administrative Service against other senior officers and the State Government, the High Court is not justified in dismissing the petition in limine by just writing the word 'dismissed', even without calling for affidavits in reply to the allegations contained in the petition. In such circumstances the High Court ought to call upon the opposite parties to make a return and then consider whether allegations have been proved or not. If it is found that the petitioner has made reckless allegations which are not founded on facts it would be in the fitness of things to take suitable action against him. But if on the other hand it is found that there is substance in his allegations there is no reason why the High Court should not grant him the necessary relief if a proper case is made out for doing so. It is quite possible that in a given case the proper course for a writ petitioner should be to seek relief by way of a suit if there are several disputed questions of fact but all these matters can be decided only if the petition is admitted and it is heard after the return has been filed by the opposite parties. The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

GROVER, J.:— This is an appeal by special leave from an order of the Orissa High Court dismissing the writ petition filed by the appellant under Article 226 of the Constitution in limine.

2. According to the appellant he joined the Indian Administrative Service on August 7, 1950. He was assigned to the Orissa State. In 1952 while he was serving as an Additional District Magistrate, Cuttack, he had to issue search warrants against some of the top leaders including Biju Patnaik and Hare Krishna Mehtab on an application filed before him by the Special Police Establishment, Delhi. The orders issued by him were challenged in the High Court but were upheld. This says the appellant, was the beginning of hostility towards him among those who wielded power in Orissa State. In 1952 he was transferred on deputation to the Government of India and was posted at Delhi. In 1955 the appellant was confirmed in the Indian Administrative Service senior scale and continued to serve on deputation with the Central Government. In 1961 the question of sending the appellant back to Orissa arose because he had already put in

9 years' service on deputation. As the appellant was apprehensive of the danger involved in his going back to Orissa because of hostility of the State Government and the statements made by some politicians as also by the then Chief Secretary he made a representation to the then Home Minister Shri Lal Bahadur Shastri bringing to his notice various facts and circumstances which showed that he was likely to be in serious trouble if he went to Orissa. He was granted a personal interview by the Home Minister and the orders for his reversion to Orissa were cancelled. He was appointed Salt Commissioner of India with headquarters at Jaipur and was concurrently posted as Managing Director Hindustan Salts Ltd. In 1961 owing to certain allegations made by some unknown persons the Special Police Establishment Delhi started an investigation against the appellant. In August 1964 a charge sheet was served upon him in which it was stated that he was in possession of assets which were disproportionate to his known sources of income. The appellant gave the necessary explanation. After an inquiry had been held by Shri P. M. Naik I. C. S. the appellant was exonerated of all charges on February 19, 1965 by the Central Government on the report made by Shri Naik. The appellant was sent back to Orissa in April 1965 and on December 19, 1966 he was appointed Commissioner Land Reforms.

3. Learned counsel for the appellant has placed before us a chronology of events subsequent to December 1966. Inter alia, it has been stated that in April 1967 the appellant wrote to the State Government complaining about interference in his work by Ramanathan, Member of the Board of Revenue Orissa. In the middle of 1967 the appellant was asked to make a report on the Transport Department. In his report he brought out certain matters against Ramanathan. In August 1967 the Chief Secretary put up a notice to the Chief Minister to constitute a committee to review the work of the appellant. One of the members of that Committee was Ramanathan. In September 1967 the appellant made two representations against the personnel of the committee, in particular, with regard to the appointment of Ramanathan as a member of that Committee.

4. In para 3 of the petition it was alleged that the appellant was subjected to a series of illegal and capricious acts committed by opposite parties particularly A. K. Barren, Chief Secretary to the Government of Orissa and S. K. Ghosh, Director of Vigilance in that State. These orders, according to the appellant, were actuated by "deepest malice and manifest mala fides". In para 4 it was alleged that on November 27, 1967 the appellant's residence was surrounded by a force of about 50 police personnel and his house was searched for two days by K. C. Patnaik, Deputy Superintendent of Police on the basis of the warrant of search purported to have been issued by D. P. Sharma, Additional District Magistrate for an alleged offence under Section 5 (2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act read with Section 5 (1) (d) (e) and Section 3 (a) of that Act. In para 5 it was alleged that on November 28, 1967 while the search was being conducted the appellant was served with an order of A. K. Barren, Chief Secretary, suspending the appellant under Rule 7 (3) of the All India Services (Discipline and Appeal) Rules 1955 with effect from the date of the service of the order. During the period of suspension the appellant was not allowed to leave Cuttack except with the prior permission of the Chief Secretary. In Para 6 of the petition it was stated that although the order purported to have been issued under the abovementioned Rule which contemplated suspension pending disciplinary proceedings there were no proceedings which were in fact pending and therefore the order was altogether illegal. In the writ petition in other paragraphs it was alleged that on December 7, 1967 the Additional District Magistrate, Sambalpur, issued a search warrant on the application of Patnaik D. S. P. for the search of the locker which had been leased out by the appellant and his wife jointly in the Delhi Safe Deposit Janpath New Delhi. During the search of the appellant's residence at Cuttack as well as the locker at Delhi the personal jewellery of the appellant's wife was even seized and such articles and papers as had no connection whatsoever with the subject-matter of the allegations were taken into possession. In para 28 quite a serious allegation was made against Ghosh, the Director of Vigilance. It was said that he had with the connivance of A. K. Barren posted a number of policemen in plain clothes to watch the appellant's movements and he was subjected to a lot of harassment and humiliation. Even the letters sent by the appellant for posting were snatched from his servant and his in-coming mail was tampered with.

5. It is unnecessary to set out the other facts alleged but we may extract the following portion from para 30 of the petition (Annexure 2) of the appellant:

"The petitioner submits that all the illegal orders relating to investigation by the Vigilance Police, searches of the petitioner's residence at Cuttack and his Locker at New Delhi, his suspension, the restraint on his movement, and the withdrawal of all facilities and entitlements of the petitioner were passed on or at the instance of opposite party No. 1 and with the active connivance and abetment of opposite party No. 2 both of whom have been maliciously hostile to the petitioner for a long time and have acted in collusion with the sole purpose of subjecting him to incalculable harm, harassment and mental torture for satisfaction of personal grudge."

6. We are wholly unable to understand how in the presence of all the allegations which had been made in the petition including those of mala fides by a senior member of the Indian Administrative Service against other senior Officers and the State Government the High Court was justified in dismissing the petition in limine by just writing the word "dismissed". The High Court did not even call for affidavits in reply to the allegations contained in the petition. This Court has repeatedly laid down (see Gianchand v. State of Haryana, Civil Appeal No. 64 of 1970, D/- 21-8-1970 (SC) following Ram Saran Dass v. State of Punjab, Civil Appeal No. 36 of 1963, D/- 16-9-1963 (SC)) that in such circumstances the High Court ought to call upon the respondents to make a return and then consider whether allegations have been proved or not. If it is found that the appellant has made reckless allegations which are not founded on facts it would be in the fitness of things to take suitable action against him. But if on the other hand it is found that there is substance in his allegations there is no reason why the High Court should not grant him the necessary relief if a proper case is made out for doing so. It is quite possible that in a given case the proper course for a writ petitioner should be to seek relief by way of a suit if there are several disputed questions of fact but all these matters can be decided only if the petition is admitted and it is heard after the return has been filed by the respondents.

7. The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the matter is remanded to the High Court for admitting the writ petition and disposing it of in accordance with law. Costs shall abide the event.

Appeal allowed.

Raj Narain, Petitioner v. Superintendent, Central Jail, New Delhi and another, Respondents.

Writ Petn. No. 330 of 1970, D/- 1/11-9-1970.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 344—Under-trial prisoner — Order of remand by Magistrate — Rule nisi by Supreme Court — Extension of remand by Magistrate — Presence of prisoner before Magistrate not necessary. (1867) 2 Weir 409 and AIR 1948 Mad 100, Overruled.

Per majority (Shelat and Vaidialingam JJ. Contra.) Prisoners, who are under-trial, are brought before the Supreme Court on rule nisi and are kept in custody of the Supreme Court. This is a transferred custody on behalf of the Magistrate. The Magistrate cannot recall the prisoner from custody of the Supreme Court by his order and he is only required to intimate to the jail authorities, the prisoner and the Supreme Court that the original remand has been extended while adjourning the case. This is sufficient compliance with the requirements of the law in such special circumstances. The object of production of the prisoner before the Magistrate is more than answered by his production before the Supreme Court because the prisoner has the protection of his interest transferred from the Magistrate to the Supreme Court. There is nothing in the law which required the personal presence of the prisoner before the Magistrate because that is a rule of caution for Magistrates before granting remands at the instance of the police. However, even if it be desirable for the Magistrate to have the prisoner produced before him, when he recommit him to further custody, a Magistrate can act only as the circumstances permit. AIR 1953 SC 277, Distinguished. (1867) 2 Weir 409 and AIR 1948 Mad 100, Overruled.

Mr. D. P. Singh, Advocate of M/s. Ramamurthi and Co., for Petitioner.

ORDER (1-9-1970) — By majority, we hold that the custody of Mr. Raj Narain is valid and that he is not entitled to release on his fresh petition. We shall give our reasons later. Judgment of Hidayatullah C. J. and Bhargava, Mitter, Ray and Dua JJ. was delivered by

HIDAYATULLAH, C. J. (11-9-1970): Mr. Raj Narain M. P. was arrested on August 20, 1970 under Ss. 107/117, Criminal Procedure Code, and was remanded to jail custody under warrant issued by the City Magistrate, Luck-

now. A petition for a writ of habeas corpus for his release is pending in this Court, and under our orders, August 22, 1970, he has been transferred to Tihar Central Jail Delhi. His original remand, as ordered by the City Magistrate, was till August 28, 1970.

2. On August 28, 1970, we were informed at 4 P.M. that his remand would expire at midnight of the 28th August 1970 and that the Superintendent, Central Jail, Delhi would not be able to detain Mr. Raj Narain thereafter. The following intimation from the Superintendent was received in this connection by the Registry:

"Sub: Production of Shri Raj Narain, M. P. in the Supreme Court. Writ Petition No. 315 of 1970.

Sir,

I have the honour to state, that Shri Raj Narain, M. P. was received in this jail on transfer from District Jail, Lucknow, for production in Supreme Court in connection with his Writ Petition in the nature of Habeas Corpus. He was produced in the Court on 25th, 26th and 27th August, 1970. Now it has been ordered by the Supreme Court dated 27-8-70 that he is not to be produced in the Court and that he may be kept in Delhi. Orders of the Court are reproduced below:

"Shri Raj Narain's petition is not to be listed tomorrow and he is not to be produced in Court tomorrow. He may however be kept in Delhi."

2. Judicial remand of Shri Raj Narain has been granted upto 28-8-70 by the City Magistrate and Magistrate 1st Class, Lucknow, vide enclosure copy of the order dated 21-8-70. In other words his judicial remand expires today. You are, therefore, requested kindly to intimate whether Shri Raj Narain is to be kept in Delhi Jail after 28-8-70 as per your orders or his further judicial remand is to be taken from the said Court.

Clarification sought may kindly be given today per bearer.

Yours faithfully."

The Court, thereupon, made the following order:

"It has been represented to us by the Superintendent of Jail that Mr. Raj Narain's remand expires at midnight and that as he has been ordered to be kept in Delhi, it would be necessary for us to say in whose custody and under whose orders he has to be detained. A similar situation had arisen in the case of Mr. Madhu Limaye when his remand expired and he became a free man, because we could not keep him under our orders in detention beyond the period originally fixed by the Magistrate. The same situation has arisen now and we can only make this order that he shall be remanded back to the custody to which he belongs and that he may be taken to U. P. if so desired, to be produced before us on the next date of hearing to be fixed in this case. If the fresh remand order is not received by the Superintendent of the Jail by midnight, the petitioner shall not be detained as directed by this Court, and he shall be set at liberty at midnight."

3. The same day a wireless message was received by the Superintendent, Tihar Central Jail from the District Magistrate Lucknow. It stated:

"Habeas Corpus Petition No. 315/70 Date 28-3-70. Shri Raj Narain M. P. remanded to further jail custody upto September 1st (1-9-70) under orders of C. M. Lucknow dated 28-8-70. Note in the Jail Warrant and inform him." The following day the message was corrected to read September tenth instead of September first. The City Magistrate Lucknow also telegraphed to the Superintendent, Tihar Central Jail the following message:

".....Reference Habeas Corpus Petition No. 315/70 dated August 28, 1970 Tiem (sic) P. M. Shri Raj Narain M. P. remanded to further jail custody upto September Ten Nineteen Seventy. Note in the jail warrant and inform him." Simultaneously this Court was informed by District Magistrate that remand of Mr. Raj Narain M. P. was extended to September 10, 1970 by the City Magistrate.

4. Mr. Rajnarain made an application in the nature of a habeas corpus petition stating that the remand orders were communicated to him on the morning of the 29th and therefore his detention after midnight of 28th was illegal and unsupported by any order of remand. Further, that in any case, as he was remanded behind his back, his remand is illegal and he is entitled to be released. The question is whether the custody of Mr. Raj Narain became illegal at midnight of August 28, 1970. In our opinion it did not.

5. Mr. Raj Narain's counsel relied upon the case reported in In re Venkataraman, 49 Cri LJ 41 = (AIR 1948 Mad 100), where it was held that an illegality was committed by a Magistrate in remanding a prisoner without having him before him and asking him whether he wished anybody to represent him and giving him an opportunity of showing cause why he should not be further remanded. The ruling restates, what was said in an old case reported in Anonymous, (1867) 2 Weir 409, where it was ruled that just as commitment required the presence of a prisoner, so did recommitment. The earlier case contains no discussion and is opinion stated on a reference by the Magistrate.

6. In Ram Narain Singh v. State of Delhi, 1953 SCR 652 = (AIR 1953 SC 277), it was ruled that an adjournment required an order in writing and so did an order of remand. The case dealt with an adjournment under Section 344 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and as there was nothing to show that the Magistrate had made an order remanding the prisoner to custody, the detention was held to have become illegal. In that case the last order by the Magistrate adjourning the case, was made on 9th March, 1953 but there was no order of remand. The only order was an endorsement on the warrant "Remanded to Judicial (sic) till 11th March 1953". This warrant was not produced earlier and there was nothing on the Court's record to show an order of remand. All that the Court had done was to adjourn the case. This Court refused to take notice of the warrant, produced after the Court rose for the day because it was not produced earlier and there was no order on the Court's record, showing a remand. The detenus were, therefore, set at liberty.

7. The facts here are different from the case cited. Mr. Raj Narain did not want bail or seek to appear by counsel. He complained of nothing except his detention which he described as illegal for the technical reason that he was not produced before the Magistrate. If he wanted bail he could have asked us as he was in our custody. There is nothing in the law which required his personal presence before the Magistrate because that is a rule of caution for Magistrates before granting remands at the instance of the police. However, even if it be desirable for the Magistrates to have the prisoner produced before them, when they recommit him to further custody, a Magistrate can act only as the circumstances permit. Where the prisoner's custody is transferred to a superior Court such as this the Magistrate can only adjourn the case at the same time extending the period of remand. It is for this Court to see that the custody by it continues under proper orders and if this Court is satisfied that the prisoner is in proper custody under a proper order of remand, the prisoner will not be released. This Court does not order detention and cannot extend the remand. Its custody is conterminous with the remand ordered by the Magistrate. If the Magistrate extends the period of remand and communicates the order to the person having the immediate custody of the prisoner with intimation to this Court and the prisoner, nothing more is expected of him. The object of production of the prisoner before the Magistrate is more than answered by his production before this Court because the prisoner has the protection of his interest transferred from the Magistrate to this Court.

8. There is no reason why we should order the release of Mr. Raj Narain when we are satisfied that he is held on a proper remand by a Magistrate and there are no circumstances justifying release by us. To expect the Magistrate to do more under Sec. 344 of the Code in such circumstances is to expect an impossibility from him and the law does not contemplate an impossibility. Indeed, similarly courts trying cases may find it necessary to order a remand in the absence of an accused, e.g. when an accused is so seriously ill that the trial has to be adjourned and he cannot be brought to court and in such case the order made without production of accused in court will not be invalid.

9. Prisoners, who are under trial, are brought before this Court on rule nisi and are kept in custody of this Court. This is a transferred custody on behalf of the Magistrate. The Magistrate cannot recall the prisoner from our custody by his order and he is only required to intimate to the jail authorities, the prisoner and this Court that the original remand has been extended while adjourning the case. This is sufficient compliance with the requirements of the law in such special circumstances.

10. It was for these reasons that we held the present custody of Mr. Raj Narain pending the decision of his main petition to be proper and rejected the application for his instant release.

The Judgment of Shelat and Vaidialingam JJ. was delivered by VAIDIALINGAM, J.—11. We regret our inability to agree with the order just pronounced by the learned Chief Justice with regard to the validity of the remand order dated August 28, 1970, in question. We now proceed to give our reasons for such disagreement.

12. In this petition for Habeas Corpus the petitioner prays for immediate release on the ground that the remand order dated August 28, 1970, passed by the City Magistrate, Lucknow is invalid and that his detention after the midnight of the 28th August, 1970, is illegal. He further attacks his detention on the ground that it is contrary to the directions given by this Court on August 28, 1970, in Writ Petition No. 315 of 1970.

13. The circumstances leading to the filing of the present petition may be briefly stated thus: The petitioner has already filed a writ petition No. 315 of 1970 for Habeas Corpus challenging his arrest on August 20, 1970 and his detention in the District Jail, Lucknow. He raised various grounds against the legality of his arrest and detention and prayed for being released forthwith. He also prayed for striking down certain sections of the Criminal Procedure Code as violative of the Constitution. The City Magistrate, Lucknow in his counter-affidavit has stated that he had issued the warrant for the arrest of the petitioner under Sections 107 and 112, Criminal P. C. and that when the petitioner was produced before him on August 20, 1970 at 9 A. M. he orally explained to the petitioner the contents of the notice under Sec. 112, Criminal P. C., a copy of which had already been served on him; and that the petitioner filed a lengthy reply thereto. It is further stated by the City Magistrate that as the petitioner did not make any application for being released on bail during pendency of the inquiry, he was remanded to jail. The City Magistrate has also maintained that the proceedings initiated against the petitioner are legal and valid and the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code challenged by the petitioner are also valid. The contentions raised by the parties in this writ petition are pending adjudication by this Court. But it may be stated that the order of remand passed on August 20, 1970 was effective till August 28, 1970.

14. In Writ Petition No. 315 of 1970, the petitioner impleaded the State of U. P., the District Magistrate, Lucknow, the Superintendent of District Jail, Lucknow and the Union of India as respondents. On August 21, 1970 when the said writ petition came up for preliminary hearing, this Court directed "issue of rule nisi returnable on August 25, 1970" and further ordered that the petitioner was to be produced before the Court on that day. The petitioner accordingly was transferred from the District Jail, Lucknow, to the Central Jail, New Delhi, for being produced before this Court. He was produced in this Court on the 25th, 26th and 27th August, 1970. On August 27, 1970, this Court passed the following order:

15. Though the State of Uttar Pradesh appeared before us through Counsel on August 27, 1970, when the above order was passed, it was not brought to our notice that the remand order passed by the City Magistrate, Lucknow, on August 20, 1970 was expiring by midnight of August 28, 1970 nor were any directions in that connection sought for from this Court at that time. It was only on August 28, 1970 at 4 P. M. when the Court was about to rise for the day that a letter of the Superintendent, Central Jail, New Delhi of the same date, received by the Assistant Registrar of this Court, seeking directions regarding detention of the petitioner, was brought to our notice. That letter has been set out by the learned Chief Justice in his order. It is clear from that letter that the judicial remand of the petitioner ordered by the City Magistrate, Lucknow would expire on that day and orders were solicited whether the petitioner is to be detained further under orders of this Court or whether his further judicial remand is to be taken from the City Magistrate, Lucknow.

16. When a person under detention has come with a grievance that his detention is illegal and invalid and seeks a writ of Habeas Corpus and is produced before this Court, the prisoner comes directly under the custody of this Court. But no orders would be passed by this Court which would have the effect of detaining a prisoner beyond the period of detention already ordered and which order is complained of. In an appropriate case, during the operation of the detention order under challenge, this Court may release the prisoner on bail or otherwise either with or without conditions pending adjudication of his grievance by this Court.

17. On the letter of August 28, 1970, of the Superintendent, Central Jail, New Delhi, this Court made an order on the same day which has been set out in full in the order of the learned Chief Justice. From that order the following points emerge:

(i) Mr. Raj Narain was remanded to the custody to which he belongs namely, the U. P. authorities;

(ii) The U. P. authorities were at liberty to take the petitioner to Lucknow pending fixation of the further date for the hearing of his writ petition.

(iii) If the Superintendent of the Central Jail, New Delhi, does not receive the fresh order of remand by midnight of August 28, 1970, the petitioner should not be detained as directed by this Court and that he should be set at liberty at midnight.

18. At this stage it may be stated that if the respondents in Writ Petition No. 315 of 1970, who were represented by counsel, had brought to our notice on August 27, 1970 (when this Writ Petition was adjourned to a later date) that the remand order of the City Magistrate was expiring on August 28, 1970 and had sought directions, this Court would have, on that date itself, passed an order similar to the one which was actually passed in the evening of August 28, 1970. In that case the respondents would have had ample opportunity to take the petitioner to Lucknow, for producing him before the City Magistrate for a further order of remand, if he considered it necessary.

19. However, the position is that the petitioner was not taken to Lucknow nor produced before the City Magistrate. Instead, he was kept in the Central Jail, New Delhi. The City Magistrate, Lucknow, passed two orders, viz., one on August 28, 1970 and another on August 29, 1970. Both the orders have been quoted in the order of the learned Chief Justice. By the first order, which is stated to have been communicated by wireless message, the petitioner was remanded to further jail custody upto September 1, 1970. By the second order which was communicated by telegram, he was remanded to further jail custody upto September 10, 1970.

20. The petitioner has in the present writ petition prayed for the issue of a writ of Habeas Corpus directing his release on the ground that his further detention is illegal. He has attacked his detention after midnight of August 28, 1970 as illegal and contrary to the directions given by this Court. He has stated that no orders of remand were communicated to him before midnight of August 28, 1970 and that the two remand orders are quite inconsistent with each other. The more serious ground of challenge in respect of the remand orders is that they are illegal as they have been passed by the City Magistrate, without his being produced before the City Magistrate and behind his back.

21. On August 31, 1970, this Court issued a notice to the Superintendent, Central Jail, New Delhi, to produce before the Court on September 1, 1970, the warrants under which "Mr. Raj Narain is presently detained." On September 1, 1970, on behalf of the jail authorities, the wireless message received on August 28, 1970 and the telegram of August 29, 1970 were brought to our notice.

22. As we were inclined to hold that the remand orders had not been passed according to law and in consequence the further detention of the petitioner was illegal, this Court passed on the same day the following order:

"By majority, we hold that the custody of Mr. Raj Narain is valid and that he is not entitled to release on his fresh petition. We shall give our reasons later."

23. The petitioner's grievance that the two orders passed by the City Magistrate on 28th and 29th August, 1970 are inconsistent, has considerable force. It is strange that a remand order extending the petitioner's custody upto September 1 1970, was followed within hours by another order extending it to a still further period upto September 10, 1970. There is nothing to show why this became necessary. Prima facie, it looks as if the Magistrate had not judicially applied his mind on the question of how long the petitioner's custody should be extended. Prima facie, it would also show that the Magistrate was passing an order of remand in a mechanical manner without even considering the period for which his remand orders are to have effect. This certainly shows non-application of judicial mind even where the personal liberty of a citizen is involved.

24. But we are not prepared to rest our decision on the above circumstance alone. The petitioner has further stated in his petition that he received intimation only in the morning of August 29, 1970 about the order of remand passed by the City Magistrate, Lucknow. If the City Magistrate was in law entitled to pass an order of remand on August 28, 1970, without the person detained being produced before him, the mere fact that it was made known to the petitioner in the morning of August 29, 1970 may not make the order of detention invalid. But we are upholding the contention of the petitioner that the City Magistrate had no power to pass an order of remand without the person in detention being produced before him, and as such the order passed on August 28, 1970 is illegal, irrespective of the time as to when it was made known to the petitioner.

25. Now coming to the question of the legality of the order passed by the Magistrate remanding the petitioner in detention, without his being produced before him, it is necessary to refer to certain provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. Such a question came up before this Court in Tlangdingliana v. State of Assam, W. P. No. 171 of 1969, D/- 25-9-1969

(SC), but was not decided as it was not necessary in that case to do so.

26. The Criminal Procedure Code contemplates the period for which a person can be detained in custody prior to the commencement of an inquiry or trial and that is broadly divided into two stages. The first stage is the maximum period of 24 hours. (See S. 61, Criminal P. C.) For this period the police have the power to detain a person during investigation. Under Art. 22 (2) of the Constitution, however, every person who is arrested and detained in custody shall be produced before the nearest Magistrate within a period of 24 hours of such arrest excluding the time mentioned therein and no such person shall be detained in custody beyond the said period without the authority of the Magistrate. If the investigation cannot be completed within 24 hours, the person arrested and detained in custody must be forwarded to the nearest Magistrate as provided under Section 167 (1), Criminal P. C. Under Sec. 167 (2) when an accused person is so forwarded, the Magistrate, whether he has or has no jurisdiction to try the accused, may authorise the detention of the accused in such custody as he thinks fit for a term not exceeding 15 days in the whole. This is the second stage of detention for 15 days. If the Magistrate to whom the accused has been forwarded has not jurisdiction to try the case or commit it for trial, and if he considers further detention unnecessary, that Magistrate has to forward the accused to the Magistrate having such jurisdiction. Under Section 167 (3) the Magistrate authorising detention in the custody of the police is bound to record his reasons for so doing.

27. But the fact to be noted in Section 167 (2) is, that the accused who is suspected or alleged to have committed an offence and who has to be tried by a court has to be forwarded to the nearest Magistrate whether he has jurisdiction to try the case or not. For the purpose of enabling the police to complete the investigation, the Magistrate before whom the accused is so produced has got power to authorise the detention of the accused for the maximum period mentioned therein. If the aforesaid Magistrate considers further detention unnecessary, the accused has to be forwarded to the Magistrate having jurisdiction. Before both the Magistrates referred to in this sub-section, production of the accused is essential. And this is the position in respect of a person against whom the commission of an offence is alleged.

28. It may happen that the 15 days detention ordered under Section 167 (2) is not found sufficient for completing the investigation. It could not have been contemplated by the Legislature that under such circumstances the arrested person must be released. Therefore it must have made provisions for continuing the arrested person's detention after 15 days in suitable cases and there is no provision permitting further remand barring that contained in Sec. 344, Criminal P. C. We have already referred to the fact that the City Magistrate has in his counter-affidavit in Writ Petition No. 315 of 1970 stated that the petitioner did not offer any bail during the pendency of the inquiry in which case Sec. 344 squarely applies. Section 170, Criminal P. C. also refers to the accused under custody being forwarded to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence upon a police report. This section also insists upon the production of the accused before the Magistrate.

29. A remand under Section 344, Criminal P. C. is to be distinguished from a remand under Section 167 (2), Criminal P. C. Section 344 is more general than Section 167 (2). But Section 344 itself contains the limitations for passing an order of remand under that provision. Sec. 344 gives power to the Court to postpone or adjourn the inquiry or trial under the circumstances and in the manner indicated therein. The first proviso to Sec. 344 states that no Magistrate shall remand an accused person to custody under that section for a term exceeding 15 days at a time. The accused is entitled to participate in the inquiry or trial and he will be present before the court concerned and it is in his presence that the order of remand under the first proviso will be made by the Court or Magistrate concerned. The accused being present at the inquiry or trial before a Magistrate or court, in our opinion, it is implicit in Sec. 344 that the order of remand under the first proviso has to be made in his presence.

30. The matter can be considered from another aspect. We have already stated that even in respect of an accused who is alleged to have committed an offence and with reference to which offence investigation is being conducted by the police, the production of the accused before the Magistrates mentioned in Section 167 (2), Criminal P. C. is absolutely essential for the purpose of the police obtaining the necessary orders for detaining the accused, beyond the period of 24 hours referred to in Sec. 61, Criminal P. C. Under Sec. 344, Criminal P. C., which deals with inquiry or trial in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed by an accused, the remand order under the proviso is to be passed in the presence of the accused. In this case even according to the averments made by the City Magistrate in his counter-affidavit in Writ Petition No. 315 of 1970, the petitioner had been arrested on the basis of a warrant issued by him under Sections 107 and 112, Criminal P. C. and that the petitioner did not offer to be released on bail pending the inquiry. A reading of Sec. 107, Criminal P. C. will clearly show that the inquiry referred to by the City Magistrate with reference to the petitioner is not in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed already, but is only for the purpose of deciding whether action is to be taken for prevention of the offence referred to therein. When an accused who is alleged to have committed a crime has to be produced before the Magistrate when an order of remand is passed under Section 344, Criminal P. C., in our opinion, it stands to reason that a person who has not committed any offence but is only sought to be proceeded against under Chapter VIII, Criminal P. C. but is proposed to be detained, must be before the court at the time when the latter passes an order of remand under S. 344, Criminal P. C.

31. We will now refer to the case law on this aspect. In 1867-2 Weirs 409, the Madras High Court had to answer a reference made by a Magistrate whether a person has to be placed before a Magistrate on each occasion of fresh remand being given. The names of the parties are not given in the Report. In High Court proceeding dated June 10, 1867 it is stated as follows:

"The High Court observe that to remand is to re-commit to custody and that a Magisterial commitment requiring the presence of the prisoner, the recommitment of the prisoner also requires that presence."

32. This decision was given under Section 344 of the Criminal Procedure Code as it then stood.

33. In Crown v. Shera, 1867 Pun Re (Cr) 72, it was held that it was illegal to remand a person on the application of the police, when the prisoner is not produced in Court.

34. In ILR (1948) Mad 279 = (AIR 1948 Mad 100), a Division Bench of the Madras High Court had to consider the legality of a remand order passed by the Magistrate under Sections 167 and 344, Criminal P. C. without the prisoners having been produced before him. In dealing with this question the High Court observes at page 281 (of ILR Mad) = (at p. 100 of AIR), as follows:

".....it does seem certain that an illegality was committed by the Magistrate in issuing an order of remand without having the prisoners produced before him and asking them whether they wished anybody to represent their cause and giving them an opportunity of showing cause why they should not be further remanded. We trust that the Sub-Magistrate issued this order through oversight and because as he later said, the prisoners were at Trichinopoly and he did not have much notice that a request for a further remand would be made. However that may be, we agree with the learned Counsel for the petitioners that an illegality involving a breach of the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code was committed; and we trust that our order will serve as a warning to the Magistrate not to repeat this illegality."

35. In 1953 SCR 652 = (AIR 1953 SC 277), this Court had to deal with the validity of the detention of an accused. Even at the outset we may state that in that decision, this Court was dealing with a case, where no order of the Magistrate remanding the accused to custody was placed before this Court. Therefore, on facts that case stands on a different footing, but the principle laid down by that decision, in our opinion, is apposite. At page 654 (of SCR) = (at p. 278 of AIR), this Court observes as follows:

"This Court has often reiterated before that those who feel called upon to deprive other persons of their personal liberty in the discharge of what they conceive to be their duty, must strictly and scrupulously observe the forms and rules of the law."

36. It will be noted that this Court has emphasised that when the personal liberty of a person is sought to be restricted or curtailed, rules of the law as well as the forms must be scrupulously observed.

37. More recently the Delhi High Court in the decision reported in Ram Rishi Anal v. Delhi Administration, Delhi, 1967 Delhi LT 126, had to deal with the legality of an order of remand passed by the Magistrates without the accused being produced before them. There were certain other illegalities pointed out in that judgment. The learned Chief Justice has held in that decision that passing of remand order behind the back of an accused, is illegal. In the judgment of the Delhi High Court there is no reference to the decisions cited by us earlier except the decision of this Court in 1953 SCR 652 = (AIR 1953 SC 277).

38. From the decision of this Court, referred to above, it is clear that the authorities seeking to curtail the liberty of a subject must strictly and scrupulously observe the forms and rules of the law. The various provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, referred to by us, as also the decisions quoted above lead to the conclusion that the accused must be present before the Magistrate or Court when an order of remand is passed. In fact the decisions quoted by us clearly lay down that an order of remand passed without the accused being produced, is illegal. We are in agreement with those decisions.

39. It stands to reason that an order of remand will have to be passed in the presence of the accused. Otherwise the position will be that a Magistrate or Court will be passing orders of remand mechanically without having heard the accused for a considerably long time. If the accused is before the Magistrate when a remand order is being passed, he can make representations that no remand order should be passed and also oppose any move for a further remand. For instance, he may rely upon the inordinate delay that is being caused by the prosecution in the matter and he can attempt to satisfy the Court that no further remand should be allowed. Again it may be that an accused, on a former occasion may have declined to execute a bond for getting himself released; but on a later occasion when a further remand is being considered, the accused may have reconsidered the position and may be willing to execute bond in which case a remand order will be totally unnecessary. The fact that the person concerned does not desire to be released on bail or that he can make written representations to the Magistrate are, in our opinion, beside the point. For instance, in cases where a person is sought to be proceeded against under Chapter VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code, it would be opened to him to represent that circumstances have materially changed and a further remand has become unnecessary. Such an opportunity to make a representation is denied to a person concerned by his not being produced before the Magistrate. As the Magistrate has to apply his judicial mind, he himself can take note of all relevant circumstances when the person detained is produced before him and decide whether a further remand is necessary. All these opportunities will be denied to an accused person if he is not produced before the Magistrate or the Court when orders of remand are being passed.

40. It is no answer that the petitioner was brought to New Delhi under the orders of this Court and hence the City Magistrate had to pass the remand order at Lucknow. We have already mentioned that no representation was made nor any directions asked on August 27, 1970, on behalf of the respondents when Writ Petition No. 315 of 1970 was adjourned. Under orders of August 28, 1970, this Court released the petitioner from its custody and restored him to the original custody and even permitted him to be taken to Lucknow, pending fixation of a fresh date of hearing of his case. The Uttar Pradesh authorities concerned did not avail themselves of the opportunity to take him back to Lucknow for being produced before the Magistrate concerned. On the other hand, they were content to have an order of remand of the prisoner in New Delhi passed by the Magistrate sitting in Lucknow. Such an order, as we have held, is illegal and hence the detention of the petitioner on the authority of such an illegal order of remand is also illegal. Such a situation has been brought about by the Uttar Pradesh authorities for which they have to thank themselves.

41. In the result we hold that the orders of remand dated 28th and 29th August, 1970 passed by the City Magistrate, Lucknow, are illegal. We further hold that the detention of the petitioner in the Central Jail, New Delhi, after the midnight of August 28, 1970 on the authority of the illegal orders of remand is also illegal. In consequence the petitioner should be set at liberty forthwith. The writ petition is allowed.

Petition dismissed.

(A) Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 344 — Order of remand — Court can pass it even if accused is not present in Court.

As a matter of law personal presence of an accused person before a Magistrate is not a necessary requirement for the purpose of his remand under Section 344, Cr. P. C., at the instance of the police, though as a rule of caution it is highly desirable that the accused should be personally produced before the Magistrate so that he may, if he so chooses, make a representation against his remand and for his release on bail. AIR 1971 SC 178, Foll.

(Para 7)

(B) Constitution of India, Article 14 — Criminal P.C. (1898), Section 344 (1-A) — Constitutionality — Section is immune from challenge on ground that it clothes Court with unfettered, arbitrary and unguided power.

Section 344 (1-A) does not clothe the Court with an unfettered, arbitrary and unguided power. (Para 9)

LN/LN/F721/70/GKC/P

Apart from the fact that it is only when either from the absence of a witness or some other reasonable cause the Court considers it either to be necessary or advisable to postpone the commencement of the inquiry or trial or adjourn the hearing of the case that the order of remand can be made, the Court is also required to record the order in writing giving the reasons why it thinks fit that the case should be postponed or adjourned. It is further open to the Court to impose terms and to fix the period which cannot exceed 15 days at one time. This discretion being vested in a Court of law has to be exercised judicially on well-recognised principles and is immune from challenge on the ground of arbitrariness or want of guidelines. If the discretion is exercised in an arbitrary or unjudicial manner remedy by way of resort to the higher Courts is always open to the aggrieved party.

(Para 9)

(C) Criminal P.C. (1898), Section 344 — Section applies even to a case which is at stage of investigation and collection of evidence.

The fact that Section 344 occurs in Chapter 24 which contains general provisions as to inquiries and trial does not justify a construction that it is inapplicable to a case which is at the stage of investigation and collection of evidence only. This is clear from sub-section (1-A). Under sub-section (1-A) the commencement of the inquiry or trial can also be postponed. This clearly seems to refer to the stage prior to the commencement of the inquiry. The explanation makes it clear beyond doubt that reasonable cause as mentioned in sub-section (1-A) includes the likelihood of obtaining further evidence during investigation by securing a remand.

(Para 10)

(D) Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 344 (1-A) Expl. — Scope Explanation merely serves to explain scope of expression "reasonable cause" occurring in sub-section (1-A).

(Para 11)

(E) Constitution of India, Article 14 — Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 344 — Constitutionality — Power of Court to remand accused — Power, although discretionary, discretion is judicial one — Absence of express, precise standard for determination of question as to when order of remand is to be passed does not render section unconstitutional.

Supdt. Central Jail, N. Delhi

Mr. P. Ram Reddy, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. P. P. Rao, Advocate, with him) for Respondents.

DUA, J.:— The petitioner, A. Lakshmanarao, an Advocate practising at Narasipatnam in the district of Visakhapatnam in the State of Andhra Pradesh has applied under Article 32 of the Constitution for a writ of habeas corpus on the following averments:

2. The petitioner, while going home from the Court, was arrested on 17th July, 1970 at about 12.30 in the afternoon. He was not shown any warrant at the time of his arrest. He was produced before a Judicial Magistrate, First Class, on 18th July and remanded to judicial custody under Section 167 (2), Criminal P. C. for 15 days. At the time of remand he was informed by the Magistrate that he was accused of offences under Sections 120-B, 121-A, 122 read with 302 and 395, I. P. C. in Crime No. 3 of 1970 (known as Parvatipuram Naxalite Conspiracy Case). The crime had been registered in January, 1970 in which more than 148 persons were sought to be proceeded against. The names of only 148 accused persons were specifically mentioned. The petitioner and one Dr. C. Ramadass were not specifically named. They were apparently included in the expression "others". On 30th March, 1970 a report was filed by the Investigating Officer describing it as a preliminary charge-sheet in which it was stated that the investigation in the case had not been completed and several accused persons had yet to be traced. This report, according to the averments, does not fall under Section 173 (1), Criminal P. C. Even in this preliminary charge-sheet the names of the petitioner and Dr. Ramadass were not included. On 1st August when the period of the petitioner's first remand expired, again no charge-sheet was separately filed against him and Dr. C. Ramadass. The prosecution, however, sought extension of the period of remand. When the petitioner objected to further remand a second preliminary charge-sheet was presented to the Court on that very day specifically including the petitioner's name. His remand was thereupon extended upto 6th August and thereafter upto 20th August. On 20th August he was not produced in the Court because of want of escort and the order of remand was made in his absence. He has expressed ignorance about the period of this remand.

3. The present petition dated 22nd August, 1970 was forwarded to this Court through the Superintendent, Central Jail, Rajahmundry (Andhra Pradesh.). The petitioner challenges the remand orders from the 1st August onwards and claims that his detention is illegal and that he is entitled to be set at liberty. The remand order dated 20th August, 1970 which was made in his absence because he could not be produced before the Court on the ground of lack of escort is challenged on the further ground that the law does not permit remand orders without the actual production of the accused before the Court.

4. According to the petitioner who himself argued his case, Section 344 (1-A), Criminal P. C. does not contain any guidelines for the Court in the matter of remand orders and he added that this section is otherwise too inapplicable to the investigation stage of criminal cases. When his attention was drawn to the explanation to Section 344, according to which the likelihood of further evidence being obtained by the remand in cases of suspicion against an accused person, raised by the evidence already obtained, he contended that the explanation could not as a matter of law serve to extend the scope of the substantive provision contained in sub-section (1-A). On this premise the petitioner questioned the vires of Section 344 (1-A) and (2) and the explanation.

5. In the counter affidavit sworn by the Judicial Magistrate in whose Court the case against the petitioner is pending, while referring to the proceedings held on 1st August, 1970, it is affirmed that the petitioner and Dr. C. Ramadass were produced in Court and it was submitted by them that since their names had not been shown in the preliminary charge-sheet the Court had no power to extend the period of remand. On that very day the prosecution filed a second preliminary charge-sheet in which the petitioner and Dr. C. Ramadass were shown as accused Nos. 149 and 150 suspected of having committed offences under Sections 120-B, 121-A, 122 read with 302 and 395, I. P. C. The Court thereupon passed an order of remand in respect of both of them. A bail application filed on behalf of the petitioner and Dr. C. Ramadass was thereafter argued by the petitioner and the matter was adjourned to 6th August, 1970 for orders when that application was disposed of.

6. On behalf of the other respondents a lengthy affidavit has been sworn by S. Veerananarayanareddi, Deputy Superintendent of Police, Crime Branch, C. I. D. Government of Andhra Pradesh, Hyderabad. It is affirmed in this affidavit that the petitioner is an active Naxalite and along with others is accused of charges under Sections 120-B read with Sections 302, 395, 397, 399, 364, 365, 368, and 386, I. P. C. in P. R. C. No. 3/70 pending in the Court of the Judicial First Class Magistrate, Parvatipuram Taluk. A separate complaint under Sections 121-A and 120-B read with 121, 122, 123, and 124-A, I. P. C. is also stated to have been filed against the aforesaid persons including the petitioner in the same Court in P. R. C. 8 of 1970. These two cases are known as Parvatipuram Naxalite Conspiracy cases and relate to 46 murders, 82 dacoities, 99 attacks on police and 15 abductions committed by the accused persons in Andhra Pradesh. The accused persons are also alleged to have committed several offences of the types just mentioned in the Agency Tracts of Orissa bordering Andhra Pradesh. The Government of Andhra Pradesh had on account of the gravity of the situation declared certain areas affected by the Naxalite menace in Srikakulam and Warangal Districts as disturbed areas under Section 3 of the

Andhra Pradesh Suppression of Disturbances Act, 1948. In the affidavit certain incidents have been traced from 1964 and it is affirmed that as a result of various political developments certain volunteers were recruited from various parts of Andhra Pradesh and the petitioner helped them in creating revolutionary bases in the agency tracts of Visakhapatnam District. There is also reference to one of the accused persons having become an approver and another having made a confessional statement. After stating various facts discovered during investigation it is affirmed that the investigation of this case is limited not only to the State of Andhra Pradesh but it extends to several States where Naxalite movement has spread, including West Bengal and Orissa, and as many as 900 witnesses have already been examined during the course of investigation, which has taken nearly nine months. Sanction of the State Government has also been obtained for the prosecution of the petitioner and the other accused persons under Section 196, Criminal P. C. On 12th October, 1970 the investigation was completed and a final charge-sheet filed in the Court of the Judicial Magistrate in P. R. C. No. 3 of 1970. The separate complaint against the petitioner and other accused persons mentioned earlier was also filed in the Court of the Judicial Magistrate under Sections 121-A, 120-B read with 121, 123 and 124-A, I. P. C. on the same day. It is admitted that the preliminary charge-sheet is not covered by Section 173(1), Criminal P. C. But it is averred that it is only a report pending further investigation seeking extension of remand under Section 344, Criminal P. C. The long period of investigation has been ascribed to the fact that there was an organised attempt on the part of the accused and their followers to thwart the efforts of the authorities in bringing the accused to book. It is admitted that the petitioner is lodged in Central Jail, Rajahmundry and that on 20th August, 1970 he could not be produced before the Court for lack of escort. The remand is also admitted to have been extended by the Magistrate, respondent No. 1 from time to time on 3rd and 17th September, and 1st October, 1970. The Court, it is pleaded, is empowered to pass an order of remand even in the absence of the accused under Section 344, Criminal P. C. unlike the remand order under Section 167, Criminal P. C. Incidentally, in this counter-affidavit there is a reference to the prejudicial activities in which the petitioner has been indulging in connection with Naxalite movement. The initial non-inclusion of his name in the array of accused persons has been explained on the ground that sufficient corroboration of the approver's testimony incriminating the petitioner was not forthcoming at that stage.

7. In so far as the question of legality of the remand order dated 20th August, 1970 without producing the petitioner before a Magistrate is concerned, the point is concluded by a recent judgment of this Court in the case of Raj Narain v. Supdt. Central Jail, New Delhi, W. P. No. 330 of 1970, D/- 11-9-1970 since reported in the notes portion of (1970) 2: Part 9 SCC 32 = (AIR 1971 SC 178). In that case this Court by majority expressed the view that as a matter of law personal presence of an accused person before a Magistrate is not a necessary requirement for the purpose of his remand under S. 344, Cri. P. C. at the instance of the police, though as a rule of caution it is highly desirable that the accused should be personally produced before the Magistrate so that he may, if he so chooses, make a representation against his remand and for his release on bail. The Court on the review of the decided cases observed:—

"There is nothing in the law which required his personal presence before the Magistrate because that is a rule of caution for Magistrates before granting remands at the instance of the police. However, even if it be desirable for the Magistrates to have the prisoner produced before them, when they recommit him to further custody, a Magistrate can act only as the circumstances permit."

8. The order of remand dated 20th August, 1970 was in the circumstances not contrary to law so as to render the petitioner's custody illegal justifying his release by this Court on habeas corpus. It is unnecessary to point out that it was and still is open to the petitioner to apply for his release on bail to the appropriate Court in accordance with law there being no illegal obstacle in his way in this respect..

9. The challenge to the constitutional validity of Section 344 (1-A), Criminal P. C. is also in our opinion misconceived. Section 344 reads:

"(1) In every inquiry or trial, the proceedings shall be held as expeditiously as possible and in particular, when the examination of witnesses has once begun, the same shall be continued from day to day until all the witnesses in attendance have been examined, unless the Court finds the adjournment of the same beyond the following day to be necessary for reasons to be recorded.

(1-A) If, from the absence of a witness, or any other reasonable cause, it becomes necessary or advisable to postpone the commencement of, or adjourn, any inquiry or trial, the Court may, if it thinks fit, by order in writing, stating the reasons therefor, from time to time, postpone or adjourn the same on such terms as it thinks fit, for such time as it considers reasonable, and may by a warrant remand the accused if in custody:

Provided that no Magistrate shall remand an accused person to custody under this section for a term exceeding fifteen days at a time:

Provided further that when witnesses are in attendance, no adjournment or postponement shall be granted, without examining them, except for special reasons to be recorded in writing.

(2) Every order made under this section by a Court other than a High Court shall be in writing signed by the presiding Judge or Magistrate.

Explanation.— If sufficient evidence has been obtained to raise a suspicion that the accused may have committed an offence, and it appears likely that further evidence may be obtained by a remand, this is a reasonable cause for a remand."

Sub-section (1-A) was originally numbered as sub-section (1). The present sub-section (1) of Section 344 was added by the Amending Act 26 of 1955 when the original sub-section (1) was re-numbered as sub-section (1-A). The impugned sub-section vests in the Court seized of a criminal case power to postpone the commencement of or adjourn any inquiry or trial before him by order in writing stating the reasons therefor from time to time on such terms as the Court thinks fit and for such time as it considers reasonable. When the case is so postponed or adjourned the Court may also by a warrant remand the accused, if in custody. This judicial power to postpone or adjourn the proceedings is to be exercised only if from the absence of witnesses or any other reasonable cause the Court considers it necessary or advisable to do so. Reasonable cause for remand according to the explanation to this section covers a case where sufficient evidence is obtained to raise a suspicion about the complicity of an accused person in the offence and it appears likely that more evidence may be obtained by remand. The Court has in the exercise of its judicial discretion in granting or declining postponement or adjournment of the case and in ordering remand of the accused, to keep in view all the relevant facts and circumstances of the case. The petitioner strongly contended that this section clothes the Court with an unfettered, arbitrary and unguided power. A plain reading of the section shows the untenability of the submission. Apart from the fact that it is only when either from the absence of a witness or some other reasonable cause the Court considers it either to be necessary or advisable to postpone the commencement of the inquiry or trial or adjourn the hearing of the case that the order can be made, the Court is also required to record the order in writing giving the reasons why it thinks fit that the case should be postponed or adjourned. It is further open to the Court to impose terms and to fix the period which cannot exceed 15 days at one time. This discretion being vested in a Court of law has to be exercised judicially on well-recognized principles and is in our view immune from challenge on the ground of arbitrariness or want of guidelines. In our opinion, therefore, not only are the guidelines clearly contained in the statute but the discretion being judicial is required to be exercised on general principles guided by rules of reason and justice on the facts of each case, and not in any arbitrary or fanciful manner. It may also be remembered that if the discretion is exercised in an arbitrary or unjudicial manner remedy by way of resort to the higher Courts is always open to the aggrieved party.

10. The second limb of the challenge is based on the contention that Section 344 falls in Chapter 24, Criminal P. C. which contains general provisions as to inquiries and trials. According to this submission this section cannot apply to a case which is at the stage of investigation and collection of evidence only. This argument appears to us to be negatived by the express language both of sub-section (1-A) and the explanation. Under sub-section (1-A) the commencement of the inquiry or trial can also be postponed. This clearly seems to refer to the stage prior to the commencement of the inquiry. The explanation makes it clear beyond doubt that reasonable cause as mentioned in sub-s. (1A) includes the likelihood of obtaining further evidence during investigation by securing a remand. The language of S. 344 is unambiguous and clear and the fact that this section occurs in Chapter 24 which contains general provisions as to inquiries and trials does not justify a strained construction. Indeed, postponement of an inquiry also seems to be within the contemplation of the general provisions as to inquiries and trials. So this challenge also fails.

11. The suggestion that the explanation could not extend the substantive provisions of sub-s. (1A) has merely to be stated to be rejected because the explanation merely serves to explain the scope of the expression "reasonable cause."

12. The last submission that there is in any event no guideline for making a remand order and, therefore, the power to remand an accused person under Section 344 is ultra vires being arbitrary and unguided is wholly unacceptable. When a case is postponed or adjourned and the accused is in custody the court has to exercise its judicial discretion whether or not to continue him in custody by making a remand order. The court is neither bound to make an order of remand nor is it bound to release the accused person. The period of remand is in no case to exceed 15 days at a time. The discretion to make a suitable order is to be exercised judicially keeping in view all the facts and circumstances of the case including the nature of the charge, the gravity of the alleged offence, the area of investigation, the antecedents of the accused and all other relevant factors which may appropriately help the court in determining whether to keep the accused in custody or to release him on bail. The court has to ensure the presence of the accused and a just, fair and smooth inquiry and trial of the offence charged. The order of remand is thus subject to judicial discretion and the order is also subject to review by the superior courts in accordance with law. The power conferred being judicial the absence of an express, precise standard for determination of the question would not render the section unconstitutional. Detention pursuant to an order of remand which appropriately falls within the terms of S. 344 is accordingly not open to challenge in habeas corpus.

13. After we had reserved orders the petitioner forwarded to this Court through jail supplementary affidavit containing written arguments. We have gone through the affidavit but we do not find any new point requiring discussion. It only discloses a further attempt to reopen the majority decision of this Court in Raj Narain's case, W.P. No. 330 of 1970, D/- 11-9-1970 (reported in AIR 1971 SC 178) (supra) by relying on the minority judgment and by submitting that Section 344 (1-A), Criminal P. C. offends Art. 19 (1) (d) of the Constitution. All that we need say at this stage is that the majority view is binding on us.

14. This petition accordingly fails and is dismissed.

Petition dismissed.

MITTER, J.: The State of Mysore has come up in appeal from a common judgment of the High Court at Bangalore disposing of a number of writ petitions and holding void the compulsory transfer of the respondents herein to the Agricultural University under the provisions of the University of Agricultural Sciences Act, 1963.

2. As the same question arises in all these appeals it will be sufficient to state the facts in Civil Appeal No. 1868 of 1969 in which one H. Papanna Gowda is the respondent. The said respondent was appointed on January 7, 1959 as an agricultural demonstrator in the Mysore Civil Service. His appointment was as a 'local candidate' which under the Mysore Civil Service Rules means a person appointed not in accordance with the rules of recruitment. His services were however regularised when he was selected by the Public Service Commission for appointment to that post on August 27 1959. By an order dated April 4, 1964 he was transferred and posted as a Chemical Assistant of the Sugarcane Research Station Mandya, in the department of agriculture. When he was thus employed, a law made by the State Legislature called the University of Agricultural Sciences Act, 1963 (hereinafter referred to as the 'Act') came into force on April 24, 1964. Before the High Court the respondents to these appeals challenged the vires of S. 7 (5) of the Act and a notification issued thereunder.

3. The preamble to the Act shows that it was an Act to establish and incorporate a University for the development of agriculture, animal husbandry and allied sciences in the State of Mysore. Under S. 3 (2) the University was to be a body corporate having perpetual succession and a common seal. The powers given under S. 6 of the Act enabled it inter alia to create administrative, ministerial and other posts and to appoint persons to such posts. Under Section 7 (1) subject to the conditions therein mentioned several agricultural and veterinary colleges were disaffiliated from the Karnatak University or the University of Mysore and were to be maintained by the new University as constituent colleges. The control and management of these colleges were to stand transferred to the Agricultural University and all its properties and assets and liabilities and obligations of the State Government in relation thereto were to stand transferred to, vest in, or devolve upon the said university. Under sub-section (4) of Section 7 the control and management of such research and educational institutions of the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Animal Husbandry and the Department of Fisheries of the State Government were, as and from such date as the State Government might by order specify, to be transferred to the University and thereupon all the properties and assets and liabilities and obligations of the State Government in relation to such institutions were to stand transferred to, vest in, or devolve upon the University. Omitting the proviso which is not relevant for our purpose, sub-section (5) provided.

"Every person employed in any of the colleges specified in sub-section (1) or in any of the institutions referred to in sub-section (4) immediately before the appointed day or the date specified in the order under sub-section (4), as the case may be, shall, as from the appointed day or the specified date, become an employee of the University on such terms and conditions as may be determined by the State Government in consultation with the Board."

4. The Board has been defined in Section 2 clause (3) as the Board of Regents of the University.

5. By notification dated September 29, 1965 the control and management of a large number of research and educational institutions were transferred to the University with effect from October 1, 1965. The Agricultural Research Institute, Mandya where the respondent was working was one such institution. Not liking the change which his future prospects were likely to undergo as a result of the notification, the respondent presented a writ petition seeking a declaration that sub-sections (4) and (5) of Section 7 of the Act were invalid and for a further declaration that he continued to be a civil servant under the State Government. To put in brief the argument on this head was that he had been removed from a civil post under the State in contravention of the provisions of Article 311.

6. A further argument was put up that the respondent had been subjected to hostile discrimination inasmuch as person who had been appointed in the same manner as himself and later in point of time than himself had been retained in the service of the State thereby infringing Articles 14 and 16 of the Constitution.

7. It is not necessary to deal with the second point as the appellant, in our opinion, must fail on the first. There can be no dispute — as indeed the learned Solicitor-General was constrained to admit — that the respondent and others who had filed writ petitions in the High Court challenging the notification ceased to hold the civil posts which they held under the State of Mysore at the time when the notification was issued if it was to have full force and effect. Whether the prospects of the respondent were or were not to be prejudicially affected if he was to become an employee of the University is not in point. However the learned Solicitor-General drew our attention to paragraph 17 of the counter-affidavit to the writ petition filed in the High Court where it was stated that the terms and conditions of transfer as agreed to by the Government and the University provided inter alia for the following:—

(1) Every employee of the Government on his transfer to the University shall enjoy the same pay scale.

(2) He was to be eligible for pensionary benefits in the same manner as he had while he was serving the Government.

(3) His claims for higher pay scales or higher positions under the University shall be deemed to be on a preferential basis in comparison with others, provided the qualifications and experience were equal; and

(4) Every employee of the Government on his transfer to the University was to be protected to the extent that the terms and conditions of his service under the University would not be altered to his detriment.

8. We are not here concerned with the question as to whether for all practical purposes the respondent was not to be a loser as a result of the transfer. Evidently the respondent held the view that as a civil servant of the State of Mysore the prospects of promotion to higher posts with better scales of pay were greater in the service of the State with its manifold activities in various departments. For better or for worse, the notification resulted in extinction of his status as a civil servant.

9. The learned Solicitor-General sought to rely on a judgment of the Punjab High Court in Amulya Kumar Talukdar v. Union of India, ILR (1960) Punj 781 = (AIR 1960 Punj 284) a case which was considered by the High Court of Mysore, in aid of his contention that the transfer of the kind effected in this case had been held to be valid by the Punjab High Court. The High Court at Bangalore went into the question rather elaborately and noted that there were many differences between the provisions of the Indian Institute of Technology (Kharagpur) Act, 1956, the Act impugned in the Punjab High Court and the Agricultural University Act of 1963. In the Punjab case the petitioner had initially been appointed by the Director, Indian Institute of Technology, Kharagpur as a peon. As a result of the Act of 1956 the Institute declared to be one of national importance, was constituted under the Act providing inter alia that the employees who were working in the Institute before were to hold office or service thereafter upon the same terms and conditions and with the same rights and privileges as to pension, leave, gratuity, provident fund and other matters as they would have held the same on the date of commencement of the Act as if the Act had not been passed. In the case before us the Act provides by sub-section (5) of Section 7 that the terms and conditions of the Government employees immediately before the appointed day or the date specified in the notification were to be such as might be determined by the State Government in consultation with the Board. The learned Judge of the Punjab High Court on the facts of that case found it unnecessary to examine the argument whether the assent given by the President to the Indian Institute of Technology Bill had the effect of terminating the status of the petitioners as Government servants by the President as also the argument raised on their behalf that their lien had been terminated under the Fundamental Rules without their consent. The Punjab decision cannot therefore apply to the case as presented before us.

10. In the result the appeals fail and are dismissed with costs. There will be one set of hearing fee. Appeals dismissed.

Post Office Act (1898), Section 72 — Complaint — Meaning — Mere information to Police not sufficient as complaint — Decision of Gujarat High Court, Reversed.

The expression "complaint" in Section 72 cannot be equated to mere information or accusation. It is a formal document indicting an officer of the postal department for a criminal offence. The purpose behind Section 72 is that officials of the postal department should not be harassed with frivolous prosecutions and that before any of the prosecutions contemplated by Section 72 is launched, the authorities mentioned in that section should have examined the appropriateness of launching a prosecution and either file a complaint themselves or authorise the filing of such a complaint. An information laid before the police or even a sanction of the concerned authority granted for a prosecution by the police would not meet the requirements of Section 72. There should be a formal complaint as contemplated by Section 4 (1) (h) of the Criminal Procedure Code. The following judgment of the Court was delivered by

HEGDE, J.:— The appellant was tried and convicted by the Judicial Magistrate 1st Class, 1st Court, Broach under Section 55 of the Indian Post Office Act, 1898 (to be hereinafter referred to as the Act) and sentenced to suffer rigorous imprisonment for one month and to pay a fine of Rs. 100/- in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for three weeks. In appeal that conviction was affirmed by the learned Sessions Judge, Broach. In his revision petition before the High Court of Gujarat, the principal contention taken by him was that the learned Magistrate was not competent to take cognizance of the case against him as there was no complaint as required by Section 72 of the Act. The revision petition was admitted for hearing and notice issued to the respondent but when the matter came up for hearing before Raju, J., the learned Judge rejected the revision petition with these cryptic remarks:

"Heard the learned Counsel for the petitioner. I do not wish to exercise my revisional jurisdiction in this matter."

2. Thereafter this appeal was brought after obtaining a certificate from the High Court under Article 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution.

3. The learned Counsel for the appellant, Mr. H. K. Puri challenged the conviction of the appellant on the sole ground that the appellant's trial was illegal as the case against the appellant was not proceeded on the basis of a complaint made by order of, or under authority from, the Director General or Post Master General as required by Section 72 of the Act.

4. The case against the appellant was taken cognizance of on the basis of a report by the police under Section 173 of the Criminal Procedure Code after making an enquiry under Ch. XIV (Pt. V) of that Code. It is true that the investigation of the case was launched on the basis of the information given by the postal authorities. We shall even assume that the investigation in question was made after obtaining the sanction of the concerned Post Master General as contended by the learned Counsel for the respondent.

5. Section 55 of the Act reads thus:

"Whoever, being an officer of the Post Office entrusted with the preparing or keeping of any document, fraudulently prepares the document incorrectly, or alters or secretes or destroys the document, shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, and shall also be punishable with fine".

6. In brief the accusation against the appellant is that he fraudulently prepared certain documents in the post office where he was serving as a delivery clerk.

7. Section 72 of the Act prescribes:

"No Court shall take cognizance of an offence punishable under any of the provisions of Sections 51, 53, 54, Clauses (a) and (b), 55, 56, 58, 59, 61, 64, 65, 66 and 67 of this Act, unless upon complaint made by order of, or under authority from, the Director General or a Post Master General".

8. The question for consideration is whether there is such a "complaint" in this case? The expression "complaint" is not defined in the Act but the "complaint" contemplated under Section 55 is one that initiates a prosecution on the basis of which the accused if found guilty is punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years and also with a fine. That being so the expression "complaint" in Section 72 cannot be equated to mere information or accusation. The context in which that expression is used in Section 72 indicates that it is a formal document indicting an officer of the postal department for a criminal offence. The purpose behind Section 72 is that officials of the postal department should not be harassed with frivolous prosecutions and that before any of the prosecutions contemplated by Section 72 is launched, the authorities mentioned in that Section should have examined the appropriateness of launching a prosecution and either file a complaint themselves or authorise the filing of such a complaint. Such a requirement will not be satisfied if the concerned authorities merely ask the police to investigate into the case and take appropriate action. An information laid before the police or even a sanction granted for a prosecution by the police would not meet the requirements of Sec. 72. If the legislature contemplated that a mere information to the police by the appropriate authority is sufficient then there was no need to enact Section 72. Further if all that was required was to obtain the sanction of the concerned authority then the legislature would have enacted a provision similar to Section 197 of the Criminal P. C. The fact that the legislature did not choose to adopt either of the two courses mentioned above is a clear indication of the fact that the mandate of Section 72 is that there should be a formal complaint as contemplated by Section 4 (1) (h) of the Criminal Procedure Code which says:

"Complaint" means the allegation made orally or in writing to a Magistrate, with a view to his taking action under this Code, that some person whether known or unknown, has committed an offence, but it does not include the report of a police officer".

9. If we understand the word "complaint" in Section 72 of the Act as defined under Section 4 (1) (h) of the Criminal P. C., as we think we should, then there was admittedly no "complaint" against the appellant which means that the learned Magistrate was incompetent to take cognizance of the case. From that it follows that the trial of the case was an invalid one and that the appellant was convicted without the authority of law.

10. The meaning of the word "complaint" in Section 72 of the Act had come up for consideration before several High Courts. The conclusion reached by those High Courts accords with that reached by us. As far back as 1906 the meaning of the word "complaint" in Section 72 of the Act came up before a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Emperor v. Rohini Kumar Sen, (1906) 19 Cal WN 1029. The Court held that the prosecution therein was vitiated because of the failure to comply with the requirements of Section 72 of the Act. A similar view was taken by the Travancore-Cochin High Court in Gnanaprakasam Barnabas v. State, ILR (1953) Trav-Co 600 = (AIR 1953 Trav-Co 537). Raju J. himself took that view in Narotamdas Bhikhabai v. State of Gujarat, (1965) 2 Cri LJ 165 (Guj). That decision was rendered by the learned Judge on September 2, 1963. The same view was taken by another bench of the Gujarat High Court in Alubhai Mujabhai v. State of Gujarat, (1966) 7 Guj LR 698. No contrary decision was brought to our notice.

11. For the reasons mentioned above we allow this appeal, set aside the conviction of the appellant and acquit him. The fine levied if it had been recovered from the appellant will be refunded to him.

Appeal allowed.

(From: Mysore)*

M. HIDAYATULLAH, C. J., A. N. RAY AND I. D. DUA, JJ.

Shivappa and others, Appellants
v. The State of Mysore, Respondent.

19-2-1970.

(A) Penal Code (1860), S. 395 — Sentence — Offence though serious no injury caused — Held sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment would meet ends of justice. (Para 7)

(B) Evidence Act (1872), S. 114 — Presumption whether accused were receivers of stolen property or were dacoits when to be drawn stated.

If there is other evidence to connect an accused with the crime of dacoity itself, however small, the finding of the stolen property with him is a piece of evidence which connects him further with the crime. There is then no question of presumption. The evidence strengthens the other evidence already against him. It is only when the accused cannot be connected with the crime except by reason of possession of the fruits of crime that the presumption may be drawn. In what circumstances the one presumption or the other may be drawn depends upon the circumstances under which the discovery of the fruits of crime are made with a particular accused. If the gap of time is too large, the presumption that the accused was concerned with the crime itself gets weakened. The presumption is stronger when the discovery of the fruits of crime is made immediately after the crime is committed. The reason is obvious. Disposal of the fruits of crime requires the finding of a person ready to receive them and the shortness of time, the nature of the property which is disposed of, that is to say, its quantity and its character determine whether the person who had the goods in his possession received them from another or was himself the thief or the dacoit. In some cases there may be other elements which may point to the way as to how the presumption may be drawn. They differ from case to case.

The goods stolen were a large quantity of cloth taken for sale to the market. Those goods were not sold and were being taken back to the dealers by the cartmen. A large number of persons said to be 20 in number pelted stones at the cartmen and looted the property. Immediately afterwards a number of searches were made and the goods were found with various persons.

Held under the circumstances it was legitimate to raise the presumption that the persons with whom the goods were found were the dacoits themselves.

(Paras 5, 6)

Mr. A. S. R. Chari, Sr. Advocate (Mr. R. V. Pillai Advocate with him), for Appellants; Mrs. Shyamala Pappu and Mr. S. P. Nayar, Advocates, for Respondent.

HIDAYATULLAH, C. J.:— These are 14 appellants who appeal against their conviction under section 395 of the Indian Penal Code and sentences of 5 years' rigorous imprisonment and fine of Rs. 10000/- passed on them. Originally 20 persons were tried and convicted for the same offence and received a like sentence. 14 alone have appealed to this Court. The incident which took place on July 28, 1962 was theft by dacoity of certain cotton pieces from two carts within the limits of Lingsugur Police Station at about 11.30 p.m.

2. The facts are that two traders in cloth sent their wares in carts for sale. The cartmen halted after the market was over on the way for food. Thereafter six carts left for Mudgal at about 10 p.m. When the carts reached a Nala called Heri Halla about three miles from Lingsugur at about 11-30 p.m. 20 persons are said to have approached the carts and pelted stones. It was a dark night and the assailants were not identified. It appears that four out of the six carts escaped, but two carts were looted. The police investigated the case and arrested the 20 persons who were accused in the case as being the culprits involved in this incident.

3. It is not necessary to go into rest of the case or the evidence on which the case of dacoity was established, because dacoity as such is not challenged before us. The accused were convicted on the sole evidence of having in their possession pieces of cloth which were later identified to belong to the traders. Searches took place between July 30, 1962 and August 17, 1962. In these searches cloth which was undoubtedly stolen at the time of the dacoity was found in their houses. The High Court and the Court below drew from this the conclusion that the appellants were themselves the dacoits, and convicted them accordingly under S. 395 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced them to 5 years' rigorous imprisonment and fine of Rs. 100/-.

4. In this appeal, the only contention raised by Mr. A. S. R. Chari is that the presumption that they were dacoits ought not to have been drawn since the circumstances do not admit the drawing of such a presumption in the case. According to Mr. Chari, the presumption to be drawn ought to have been one under Section 411 of the Indian Penal Code or at the most under S. 412 of the Indian Penal Code but not of complicity in the crime of dacoity. He contends that the circumstances under which the one presumption or the other may be drawn under Section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act have not been stated by law and therefore it is necessary always to start with the lesser presumption and draw the higher presumption only when there is some other evidence to show the complicity of the person in the crime itself. According to him there is no other evidence in the case which points to the complicity of the 14 appellants in the crime of dacoity and therefore as they cannot be suspected to be dacoits themselves, the only presumption to be drawn is one of receivers of stolen property or as receivers of property which was stolen in a dacoity.

5. In our opinion, the law advocated by Mr. Chari is not correct. If there is other evidence to connect an accused with the crime itself, however small, the finding of the stolen property with him is a piece of evidence which connects him further with the crime. There is then no question of presumption. The evidence strengthens the other evidence already against him. It is only when the accused cannot be connected with the crime except by reason of possession of the fruits of crime that the presumption may be drawn. In what circumstances the one presumption or the other may be drawn, it is not necessary to state categorically in this case. It all depends upon the circumstances under which the discovery of the fruits of crime are made with a particular accused. It has been stated on more than one occasion that if the gap of time is too large, the presumption that the accused was concerned with the crime itself gets weakened. The presumption is stronger when the discovery of the fruits of crime is made immediately after the crime is committed. The reason is obvious. Disposal of the fruits of crime requires the finding of a person ready to receive them and the shortness of time, the nature of the property which is disposed of, that is to say, its quantity and its character determine whether the person who had the goods in his possession received them from another or was himself the thief or the dacoit. In some cases there may be other elements which may point to the way as to how the presumption may be drawn. They need not be stated here for they differ from case to case. In the present case, the goods stolen were a large quantity of cloth taken for sale to the market. These goods were not sold and were being taken back to the dealers by the cartmen. A large number of persons said to be 20 in number pelted stones at the cartmen and looted the property. Immediately afterwards a number of searches were made and the goods were found with various persons who were prosecuted as offenders and they have been presumed to be involved in the dacoity itself. It may be noticed that from each person a large number of goods of the same type such as 20 choli pieces or ten pieces of cloth were found. It is impossible to think that within the short time available, these goods could have been easily disposed of to receivers of stolen property or could be placed in the custody of friends till such time as the original offenders could take them away. The time gap in some cases is as short as two days and in some others it is not more than five days. In two cases only the time gap is about 19 days. Even then we think that the time gap is too short for original offenders to have disposed of the property to these appellants or to have left the goods in their custody till such time as the original offenders could have taken them away.

6. We are, therefore, satisfied that the proper inference was drawn in this case. It must not be forgotten that the offence was committed at night by as many as 20 persons or more. The houses of 20 persons were searched and large quantities of the stolen goods were found in their houses. It is impossible to think that these 20 persons were merely receivers of stolen property from some other 20 persons who were the dacoits. It is legitimate therefore to raise the presumption in this case that the persons with whom the goods were found were the decoits themselves. This presumption has been drawn and in our opinion rightly in this case. The conviction was therefore correct in all the circumstances of the case.

7. As regards the sentence, the offence no doubt was serious. But no injury beyond one appears to have been caused. Therefore we think that a sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment will meet the ends of justice in this case. The sentence is reduced to three years' rigorous imprisonment. The sentence of fine will stand. The appeal is allowed to this extent.

Appeal partly allowed.

pleted on date of application for purchase.

In order to claim a right of purchase as against the landowner under S. 18 (1) (i), the minimum period of six years should have been completed at the time when the application for purchase by the tenant is made, and it is not necessary that he should have been a tenant of the land on April 15, 1953 when the Act came into force. Provided the other conditions are satisfied, such a tenant will be entitled to purchase the land. (1963) 65 Pun LR 652 & ILR (1967) 2 Punj & Har 120 and AIR 1970 Punj & Har 23, Distinguished. The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by VAIDIALINGAM, J.:— The common question that arises for consideration in all these writ petitions filed under Art. 32 and the civil appeals, on certificates granted by the High Court, is whether a tenant, in order to claim the right of purchase as against the landowner, under Section 18 (1) of the Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act, 1953 (Act X of 1953) (hereinafter referred to as the Act), should have been in continuous occupation of the land comprised in his tenancy for a minimum period of six years, on the date when the Act came into force (April 15, 1953), or on the date when he files the application for purchase to the concerned authority under the Act. A subsidiary point also arises for consideration viz., whether the person who claims the right to purchase, should have been a tenant on the date when the Act came into force.

2. The circumstances under which these writ petitions and appeals arose, may be briefly stated.

3. We shall first take up for consideration Civil Appeal No. 2356 of 1966.

4. Respondents 2 and 3, who are the tenants under the appellant landowner, in this appeal, filed on January 10, 1961 before the Assistant Collector, I Grade, Fazilka, an application under S. 18 (1) of the Act for purchase from their landlord 19 acres and 7 kannals of land comprised in their tenancy. Their case was that they had been in continuous occupation of the land comprised in their tenancy for a minimum period of six years and, as such, they were entitled to purchase the land. Their claim was resisted by the appellant land-owner on the ground that it was only those tenants who had completed a continuous period of six years of tenancy prior to the commencement of the Act who were entitled to purchase the land under Section 18 (1) of the Act and as the applicants did not satisfy that test, the application was not maintainable. The Assistant Collector, by his order dated March 29, 1961 overruled the objection of the land-owners and held that the application filed by the tenants was maintainable as similar purchase applications had been entertained without regard to any date of completion of six years of continuous tenancy and in this view the matter was directed to be posted for further hearing. The applicants challenged this order of the Assistant Collector by an appeal taken before the Collector, Ferozepore. The Collector, by order dated June 9, 1961 reversed the order of the Assistant Collector and held that no tenant who had not been in continuous possession for six years on the commencement of the Act could apply, under Section 18 (1) of the Act, for purchasing the property and that the six year period should have been completed at the time the Act came into force. In this view he held that the application filed by the tenants was not maintainable.

5. The tenants carried the matter in appeal before the Additional Commissioner, Jullundur Division, who, by his order dated December 14, 1962, agreed with the Collector and dismissed the appeal. The tenants went in revision before the Financial Commissioner, Revenue, Punjab, who by his order dated April 24, 1963 reversed the orders of the Collector and the Additional Commissioner. The Financial Commissioner held that the right of purchase under Section 18 (1) of the Act could be exercised by a tenant whose tenancy existed on the date of the commencement of the Act and who has been in continuous occupation of the land comprised in his tenancy for a minimum period of six years on the date of the application for the purchase of the land and the land has not been included in the reserved area of the land-owner. The Financial Commissioner further held that a tenant who, on the date of the application for purchase, owns or holds land exceeding the permissible area will not be entitled to purchase the land under his tenancy. After setting aside the orders of the Collector and the Additional Commissioner, the matters were remanded to the Assistant Collector, Fazilka, for a decision on merits.

6. The appellants-land owners filed Civil Writ No. 715 of 1963 in the High Court of Punjab to quash the orders of the Financial Commissioner, Revenue, Punjab. The tenants of certain other properties had also filed applications for purchase and their landlords had filed Civil Writ No. 716 of 1963 before the Punjab High Court. Both these Civil Writ Petitions were disposed of by common judgment of the High Court, dated October 1, 1963. After a consideration of the scheme of the Act and in particular the provisions of Section 18, the High Court held that to have the benefit of S. 18 (1) (i), the tenants must be in continuous occupation of the land under their tenancies for a period of six years on the date of making the application for purchase under that section. Accordingly the High Court agreed with the views expressed by the Financial Commissioner on this point and left open for consideration by the Assistant Collector certain other aspects that appear to have been pressed on behalf of the tenants.

7. Civil Appeals No. 2356 of 1966 and 2357 of 1966 are directed against the orders passed in Civil Writ Petitions Nos. 715 and 716 of 1963 respectively. Similarly, a group of eight civil writ petitions had been filed by other land owners before the Punjab and Haryana High Court challenging the orders passed by the Financial Commissioner, Revenue, upholding the right of the tenants to purchase the lands concerned. Civil Appeals Nos. 1471 of 1968 and 1508 to 1514 of 1968 are directed against the orders passed by the High Court dismissing those writ petitions.

8. Certain other land-owners had contested the maintainability of applications filed by their tenants for purchase under S. 18 (1) and had made request to the concerned authorities to stay the proceedings and await the decision of this Court in Civil Appeals Nos. 2356 and 2357 of 1966. Apart from questioning the maintainability of the applications filed by the tenants and the jurisdiction of the authorities to entertain those applications, certain other contentions had also been taken by the landlords. Stay of proceedings asked for by the land-owners was declined by the authorities and finally, by the Financial Commissioner, Revenue, by his order dated February 29, 1968. Against this common order Writ Petitions Nos. 116 of 1968 and 190 to 214 of 1968 have been filed, under Art. 32. In those Writ Petitions the jurisdiction of the authorities to entertain the applications under S. 18, filed by the tenants, arises for consideration.

9. At the outset we may state that in all these matters we are giving our decision only regarding the interpretation of Section 18 of the Act with special reference to the points mentioned at the beginning of this judgment, and any other matters which may arise for consideration in these proceedings are left open to be adjulicated upon by the appropriate authorities concerned, before whom proceedings may be pending.

10. On behalf of the land-owners, Mr. B.R.L. Iyengar, learned counsel, after a reference to the material provisions of the Act, urged that the interpretation put on Section 18 by the High Court is against the entire scheme of the statute and that such an interpretation will defeat the very object and purpose for which the Act had been passed. Counsel pointed out that the Act clearly indicated that the lands treated as surplus area were exclusively intended for being utilised for re-settlement of tenants already ejected from the land or who were liable to be ejected under Section 9 (1) (i) of the Act. He further pointed out that if the test of six years' continuous occupation, dealt with under S. 18 of the Act, is considered to be satisfied with reference to the date when the application for purchase is made by a tenant, as held by the High Court, there will be a conflict between S. 10-A and S. 18. Counsel finally urged that having regard to the scheme of the Act, continuous possession for a minimum period of 6 years under S. 18 of the Act must be such possession on the date the Act came into force viz., April 15, 1953 and tenants who did not satisfy this condition were not entitled to exercise the right of purchase under S. 18.

11. Mr. S. V. Gupte, learned counsel appearing for the tenants, on the other hand pointed out that the object of the Act was to put a ceiling on the extent of property that could be held by a tenant or a landlord and for stabilising tenancies of long duration and confer on such tenants the right of pre-emption and a right of purchase. Counsel pointed out that the Act did not snap the relationship of landlord and tenant, but, on the other hand, tried to maintain the same. There was no prohibition, he pointed out, anywhere in the Act against creation of new tenancies after April 15, 1953. He further urged that the scheme of the Act clearly indicated that apart from other rights, a right of purchase was given to a tenant who was in actual possession of the land and if the tenant satisfied the requirement of having been in continuous possession for a minimum period of six years on the date of his filing an application for purchase, S. 18 (1) (i) would stand attracted. It was also urged that having due regard to the various provisions of the Act, there was no warrant to restrict the right of purchase under Section 18 (1) (i) only to a tenant who had been in continuous occupation of the land for a minimum period of six years on the date of the coming into force of the Act.

12. The other learned counsel, appearing in some of these matters either for the landlords or for the tenants have adopted the arguments of Mr. Iyengar and Mr. Gupte, respectively.

13. It is necessary to broadly consider the general scheme of the Act in the first instance. The Act came into force on April 15, 1953 and it was to provide for the security of land tenure and other incidental matters. The Act has been amended from time to time in 1953, 1955, 1959 and 1962. Under the Act, as originally passed, it is to be noted that there were two other sections viz., Ss. 7 and 15, which were later omitted. Even under S. 18, originally the period provided was 12 years. By the amendment Act, Punjab Act XI of 1955, the period was reduced to 6 years.

14. As Mr. Iyengar, in the course of his arguments, has referred to Sections 7 and 15, we shall just refer to the substance of those provisions. Section 7, dealing with the minimum period of tenancy, provided that no tenant on land other than the reserved area of a landowner shall be liable for ejectment before the expiry of a period of ten years from the commencement of the Act or from commencement of his tenancy, whichever is later, and this was notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any other law and except as provided by the Act. Section 15 is a corollary to Section 7 and it provided that when a tenant, after the expiration of the period specified in Section 7 has been allowed to hold over, his tenancy shall be deemed to have been renewed for a further period of 10 years commencing from the date of its expiration, on the same terms and conditions. The object of Mr. Iyengar relying upon these provisions was to show that the only protection intended to be given to tenants on land other than on the reserved area of a landowner was to give a fixity for a period of 10 years and, if such tenants hold over, the tenancy was protected for a further period of 10 years. These sections, which have been subsequently deleted, do not, in our opinion, lend any support to Mr. Iyengar in the interpretation to be placed on S. 18.

15. By the Punjab Amendment Act XI of 1955, certain amendments were made in the parent Act.

16. Section 2 (5-a) defining 'Surplus Area' was introduced by this Amendment. Section 7 of the original Act was deleted. Section 10-A was introduced and the period of 12 years in Section 18 was substituted by a reduced period of 6 years. Section 16 of the original Act was substituted by new section.

17. Section 15 of the original Act was omitted by the Punjab Act XXXII of 1959.

18. One of the amendments in 1962 was the substitution of the new section 6 in the place of the old section.

19. We shall now refer to the material provisions of the Act, as it stands at present.

20. We have already mentioned that the Act was passed to provide for the security of land tenure and other incidental matters. Section 2 defines the various expressions. In particular, it is only necessary to refer to the definition of the expressions 'permissible area' 'reserved area' and 'surplus area'. 'Permissible area' under S. 2 (3), in relation to a landowner or tenant means thirty standard acres and where such thirty standard acres on being converted into ordinary acres exceed sixty acres, such sixty acres. It is not necessary to refer to the proviso. 'Reserved area', under S. 2 (4) means the area lawfully reserved under the Punjab Tenants (Security of Tenures) Act, 1950 as amended by President's Act of 1951. Section 2 (5-a) defines 'surplus area'. Broadly speaking, 'permissible area' related to the thirty standard acres which a landowner or a tenant could possess and the 'reserved area' meant the area lawfully reserved under the Act of 1950, as amended by President's Act of 1951. That will be an area which the landowner will be entitled to choose for himself from his holdings in order to enable him to have the permissible area of thirty standard acres. Generally speaking, excess lands not covered by the reserved area not in the possession of any tenant will be the surplus area so far as a landowner is concerned.

21. Section 5 gives a right to a landowner who owns land in excess of the permissible area to reserve out of the entire land held by him in the State of Punjab any parcel or parcels not exceeding the permissible area. Section 5-A makes it obligatory on a landowner and tenant holding land in excess of the permissible area to furnish a declaration in the manner and within the period provided therein. Section 5-B (1) enables a landowner who has not exercised his right of reservation under the Act to select his permissible area and intimate the selection to the authority concerned, in the manner and within the period stated therein. Sub-s. (2) gives power to the prescribed authority in cases where a landowner fails to select his permissible area to select the parcel or parcels of land which such landowner may be entitled to retain under the Act. Any transfer of land, excepting those mentioned under S. 6, made between August 15, 1947 and February 2, 1955 will not affect the rights of tenants of such land under the Act. Section 8 safeguards the continuity of a tenancy. Section 9 provides for the conditions under which a tenant is liable to be evicted and under sub-s. (1) (i) a tenant on the area reserved under the Act or is a tenant of a small landowner can be evicted. But, under Section 9-A, a tenant liable to ejection under cl. (i) of sub-s. (1) of Section 9, cannot be dispossessed unless he is accommodated on a surplus area in accordance with the provisions of Section 10-A or otherwise on some other land by the State Government. Section 10 gives a right of restoration to a tenant who has been ejected from any land in excess of the permissible area between August 15, 1947 and April 15, 1953 provided the land is under self-cultivation and the ejection has been on grounds other than those mentioned in Section 9. Under sub-s. (4) of S. 10, in case of such restoration, the landowner or any other person in actual possession is entitled to such compensation as may be determined by the Assistant Collector from the tenant intended to be restored. Section 10-A gives power to the State Government or any officer empowered by it in that behalf to utilise any surplus area for the resettlement of tenants ejected or to be ejected under cl. (i) of sub-s. (1) of S. 9.

22. It will seen that while providing for eviction of a tenant from a reserved area under S. 9 (1) (i), that tenant is safeguarded by S. 9-A providing that his dispossession shall not take place unless he is accommodated on a surplus area and S. 10-A provides for utilisation of surplus area for resettlement of tenants ejected or to be ejected under cl. (i) of sub-s. (1) of S. 9. These three provisions are interlinked and inter-connected. The Explanation to S. 10-A (b) makes it clear that the utilisation of any surplus area will not affect the right of a landowner to receive rent from the tenant so settled.

23. Section 12 provides for the quantum of rent payable by a tenant for the land held by him. Section 14-A provides for the procedure to be adopted by a landowner desiring to eject a tenant under the Act. Under S. 16, excepting in the case of lands acquired by the State Government or by a heir by inheritance, no transfer or disposition of lands after February 1, 1955 shall affect the rights of the tenant thereon under the Act. Section 17 gives to the tenants mentioned therein, a right of pre-emption.

24. The various provisions, referred to above, in our opinion, clearly indicate that the Act does not snap the relationship of landlords and tenants once and for all. In fact that relationship is fairly well preserved and a limited right of evicting tenants is given to the landlord and an obligation to pay rent is also cast upon the tenant. But, in respect of tenants who are evicted or are liable to be evicted under S. 9 (1) (i) of the Act, provision is made for re-settling them under S. 9-A read with Section 10-A of the Act. Such resettlement does not affect the right of the landowner to receive rent from the tenant. The provisions of S. 6 and S. 16 also indicate that excepting the particular types of transactions, referred to therein, no other, dealing with the property by the landowners will affect the rights that the tenant has under the Act. In fact these two provisions take in cases of transfer prohibited thereunder after August 15, 1947 and also subsequent to the date of the coming into force of the Act. It will also be noted that the definition of 'surplus area' under S. 2 (5-a) and Section 10-A giving power to the State Government to utilise the surplus area for re-settlement of the tenants were both brought in by the Amendment Act of 1955 and with retrospective effect from the date of the original Act, viz., April 15, 1953.

25. We then come to the material section, Section 18, which is as follows:

"18 (1) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any law, usage or contract, a tenant of a landowner other than a small landowner —

(i) who has been in continuous occupation of the land comprised in his tenancy for a minimum period of six years, or

(ii) who has been restored to his tenancy under the provisions of this Act and whose periods of continuous occupation of the land comprised in his tenancy immediately before ejection and immediately after restoration of his tenancy together amounts to six years or more, or

(iii) who was ejected from his tenancy after the 14th day of August, 1947, and before the commencement of this Act, and who was in continuous occupation of the land comprised in his tenancy for a period of six years or more immediately before his ejection, shall be entitled to purchase from the land-owner the land so held by him but not included in the reserved area of the land-owner, in the case of a tenant falling within clause (i) or clause (ii) at any time, and in the case of a tenant falling within clause (iii) within a period of one year from the date of commencement of this Act:

Provided that no tenant referred to in this sub-section shall be entitled to exercise any such right in respect of the land or any portion thereof if he had sublet the land or the portion, as the case may be, to any other person during any period of his continuous occupation, unless during that period the tenant was suffering from a legal disability or physical infirmity, or, if a woman, was widow or was unmarried;

Provided further that if the land intended to be purchased is held by another tenant who is entitled to pre-empt the sale under the next preceding section, and who is not accepted by the purchasing tenant, the tenant in actual occupation shall have the right to pre-empt the sale.

Section 18 (2) deals with the procedure to be adopted by the tenant who is desirous of purchasing land. Sub-s. (3) provides for the purchase price being three-fourths of the value of the land determined by the Assistant Collector. Under sub-s. (4) it is open to the tenant to pay the purchase price either in a lump sum or in six-monthly instalments not exceeding ten. It further provides that on the purchase price or the first instalment thereof being deposited, a tenant shall be deemed to have become the owner of the land. The other matters dealt with in Section 18 are not necessary to be gone into.

26. Under Section 18 (1) three categories of tenants have been given a right to purchase from the landowner the land so held by him, but not included in the reserved area of the land-owner and they are (i) a tenant who has been in continuous occupation of the land for a minimum period of six years; (ii) a tenant restored to his tenancy under the Act and whose period of continuous occupation of the land comprised in his tenancy immediately before ejectment and after restoration amounts to six years or more; and (iii) a tenant who was ejected from his tenancy after August 14, 1947 and before April 15, 1953 and who was in continuous occupation of the land comprised in his tenancy for a period of six years or more immediately before his ejectment.

27. Before dealing with the first category, we will refer to the tenants coming under categories (ii) and (iii). Regarding the second category, the period of occupation by a tenant both prior to and after the date of the Act are taken into account for computing the period of occupation of six years or more. It is thus clear that the occupation by him for part of the period which will be after the date of the Act is admittedly taken into account to give him a right to purchase the land. He also represents the type of tenants whose possession has been disturbed prior to the date of the Act and who gets possession again by virtue of being restored under the Act to his tenancy and such possession is counted in his favour. For persons coming in category (ii), there is no time limit within which they should exercise the right to purchase. On the other hand S. 18 (1) clearly gives such persons a right to purchase the land at any time. Category (iii) deals with tenants who have been ejected after August 14, 1947 and before April 15, 1953, but prior to such eviction they have been in continuous occupation of the land for six years or more. Admittedly, such persons were not in possession of the land as tenants on the date when the Act came into force, i. e., on April 15, 1953. But, nevertheless, if such a person who has been evicted during the particular period above-mentioned had been at the time of his ejectment in continuous occupation of land comprised in his tenancy for a period of six years or more, he is given a right to purchase the land. That is, a person who had lost all contact with the land on the date of the Act as a tenant, and who was not in possession on the date of the coming into force of the Act, is also given a right to purchase the land provided his ejectment was after August 14, 1947 and before April 15, 1953. For a tenant coming under this category the section provides that he must exercise his right to purchase within a period of one year from the date of commencement of the Act.

28. Coming to clause (i) of S. 18 (1), that clause does not expressly state as to when the tenant referred to therein should have completed his continuous occupation of a minimum period of six years. According to the landowners, such a tenant must have completed the period of six years on April 15, 1953, whereas, according to the tenants it is enough if the period of six years had been completed on the date when an application for purchase is made. The question now is whether the scheme of the Act indicates whether the six years period should have been completed on April 15, 1953, the date when the Act came into force.

29. In our opinion, having due regard to the scheme of the Act, there is no warrant for importing any such restriction in Section 18 (1) (i) of the Act. If the intention of the Legislature was that the tenant under S 18 (1) (i) should have been in continuous occupation for a minimum period of six years on the date of the Act, it would have been specifically so provided for in the said clause.

30. There is also intrinsic evidence in S. 18 (1) (i) itself that it is not necessary for a person coming under sub-cl. (i) that he should have completed his continuous occupation of six years on the date of the Act. We have already referred to the category of tenants coming under cl. (ii) and shown that the Act recognises their possession for a period a part of which must certainly be subsequent to the commencement of the Act. Then the object of the Act, as seen from cl. (ii) is to protect even tenants who get back into possession of the land after the date of the Act, we do not see any reason why a limitation should be read in cl. (i) in respect of a tenant who is in possession of the land that he should have completed the period of six years of continuous occupation even prior to the date of the Act.

31. There is an additional reason why we cannot read any such limitation into cl. (i). Clause (iii) dealing with the third category of tenants, admittedly relates to a tenant evicted from the property even before the date of the Act and who was not in possession on the day when the Act came into force. But, nevertheless, if such tenants had been in continuous possession for six years at the time of their ejection which must be before the date of the Act, they are entitled to purchase the property, but that right must be exercised within a period of one year from the date of the commencement of the Act. If Mr. Iyengar's contention, that the tenants in category (i) should have completed the continuous period of six years on the date of the Act, is correct such tenants and tenants coming under category (iii) will be on a par in that both would have completed their period of six years before the date of the Act. Nevertheless in the case of tenants coming under category (iii), the Legislature has specifically stated that they must exercise their right of purchase within a period of one year from the date of the Act whereas in the case of tenants coming under cl. (i) they could exercise the right at any time. This itself clearly indicates that the tenants coming under category (i) are entirely different from the tenants coming under category (iii). If both types of tenants coming under clause (i) and clause (iii) stand on the same footing the position would be that both would have completed the period of continuous occupation of six years prior to the Act and the Legislature would have provided that both should exercise the right of purchase within a period of one year. The distinction made regarding the period within which these two categories can exercise their right, clearly indicates the intention of the Legislature to the contrary. It stands to reason that the tenants coming under clauses (i) and (ii) who are in actual possession of the land have been given the option either to continue as tenants and pay rent or to exercise their right to purchase the land at any time. There is no question in their case of there being any time-lag or doubt because, being in possession no other person's right will normally be affected; whereas in the case of a tenant coming under cl. (iii), he has already gone out of the land and therefore the Legislature has specifically provided a very short period of one year from the date of the Act for exercising, if he so chooses, his right to purchase the land provided he satisfies the other conditions mentioned in the section. The Legislature did not want the position to be kept nebulous and doubtful in respect of such a person who was not in possession as a tenant on the date of the Act. While coming to a tenant who satisfies the requirements of cl. (iii) of S. 18 (1), the Legislature has taken care to see that those types of tenants are made to take a decision to purchase the land within the shortest possible time so that other peoples' rights may not be jeopardized.

32. Nor is there any warrant for the contention of Mr. Iyengar that the person who claims the right under cl. (i) should have been a tenant on April 15, 1953. So far as we could see, there is no prohibition under the Act placing any restriction against the right of the landowner creating new tenancies after the date of the Act. In fact the second proviso to S. 9-A clearly indicates to the contrary. It deals with the contingency of tenancy coming into force after the commencement of the Act.

33. Section 18 (1) (i) gives a right to a tenant to purchase the land; and that right has to be examined when an application under Section 18 is made and cannot be denied on the ground that he was not a tenant for more than six years on April 15, 1953. There is no limitation placed under cl. (i) of Section 18 (1) that the tenant who exercises his right should be a tenant on the date of the Act or that he should have completed the period of six years on April 15, 1953 and there is no warrant for reading in Section 18 (1) (i) clauses which it does not contain. It is enough if the continuous period of six years has been completed on the date when the tenant files the application for purchase of the land.

34. We were referred to three decisions: Ganpat v. Jagmal, (1963) 65 Pun LR 652; Amar Singh v. State of Punjab, ILR (1957) 2 Punj and Har 120, and Mam Raj v. State of Punjab, ILR (1969) 2 Punj and Har 680 = (AIR 1970 Punj and Har 23). In the first decision the question was whether a transfer by a landowner in excess of the reserved area has to be ignored when the rights of a tenant under section 18 are being considered. In the second and third decisions the question was whether an order for purchase passed in favour of a tenant under Section 18 can be ignored by the Collector when exercising his functions under Section 10-A of the Act. In none of the decisions the points now decided by us came up for consideration directly and therefore it is not necessary to deal with those decisions in detail.

35. To conclude we are of opinion that in order to claim a right of purchase as against the landowner under Section 18 (1) (i) of the Act, the minimum period of six years should have been completed at the time when the application for purchase by the tenant is made, and it is not necessary that he should have been a tenant of the land on April 15, 1953. Provided the other conditions are satisfied, such a tenant will be entitled to purchase the land.

36. In the result the writ petitions and appeals are dismissed with costs—such costs to be one hearing fee.

Writ petitions and appeals dismissed.

Hanuman Prasad Gupta, (in all the Appeals), Appellant v. Hiralal (in all the Appeals), Respondent.

Criminal Appeals Nos. 225 to 232 of 1966, D/- 24-2-1970.

Companies Act (1956), Ss. 207, 205 and 36 — Provisions of S. 205 (5) incorporated also in Articles of company — Obligation to pay dividend arises at place of company's registered Office — Non-payment — Court at place of company's registered office has jurisdiction to try offence — (Contract Act (1872), S. 50) — AIR 1967 All 135, Reversed.

A dividend once declared is a debt payable by the company to its registered shareholders. (Para 4)

Once a dividend warrant is posted to the registered address of the shareholder, dividend is deemed to have been paid within meaning of S. 205. The section makes the failure to post within the prescribed period and not the non-receipt of the warrant by the shareholder an offence. Prima facie, both the obligation to post the dividend warrant and the failure to satisfy that obligation would occur at the place where the obligation is to be performed and that would be the registered office of the company and not the address at which the warrant is to be posted. Payment in cash or the posting of a cheque or a warrant are equivalent and the obligation to pay is discharged when either of them is done. (Paras 4, 5, 6)

Where the power to pay dividend by posting a cheque or a warrant as provided in Section 205 (5) is incorporated in the Articles of Association of the company, it constitutes a contract between a company and its members. (1915) 1 Ch 881 & 1938 Ch. 708 Ref. (Para 6)

If under a contract, a promisee prescribes the manner in which the promise is to be performed, the promisor can perform the promise in the manner so prescribed. (See S. 50 of the Contract Act.) (Para 7)

Once a mode of payment of dividend is agreed to, namely, by posting a cheque or a warrant, the place where such posting is to be done is the place of performance and also the place of payment, as such performance in the manner agreed to is equivalent to payment and results in the discharge of the obligation. (Para 8)

The common law rule that debtor must seek the creditor has no application. (1910) 2 K. B. 509 & (1886) 3 TLR 182 Rel. on. (Para 7)

When the company posts the dividend warrant to the registered address of a shareholder, that being done at the shareholder's request, the post office becomes the agent of the shareholder, and the loss of a dividend warrant during transit thereafter is the risk of the shareholder. (Para 9)

Since the obligation to post the warrant arose at the registered office of the company, failure to discharge that obligation also arose at the registered office of the company. Therefore, the alleged offence must be held to have taken place at the place where the company's registered office is situate and not where the dividend warrant, when posted, would be received. Mr. H. R. Gokhale, Sr. Advocate (M/s. K. K. Jain, Bishamber Lal and H. K. Puri, Advocates with him), for Appellant, (in all the Appeals).

SHELAT, J.— All these appeals, founded on a certificate granted by the High Court of Allahabad, raise a common question as to jurisdiction. The appeals arise from complaints filed by the respondent in the Court of First Class Magistrate at Meerut under section 207 of the Companies Act, 1956 on an allegation of failure on the part of the appellant, the director-in-charge of M/s Iron Traders (Private) Ltd., to pay to him dividends on shares held by him, although the dividends were declared by the company for the respective years. The question being common, all these appeals are disposed of by a common judgment.

2. The appellant contended that the Magistrate at Meerut had no jurisdiction to try the complaints and that the Magistrate at Delhi, where the company's registered office is situate, who would have the jurisdiction. The Magistrate rejected the contention and held that as the dividend had to be paid at the registered address of the respondent, which was at Meerut, it was the Meerut Court which had the jurisdiction. The Sessions Judge, on appeal, upheld the order of the Magistrate and in revision the High Court, rejecting the appellant's contention, confirmed the view taken by the Magistrate and upheld by the Sessions Judge. The High Court in taking the aforesaid view observed:

"The object behind the statute is to ensure prompt payment of dividend to a shareholder. That payment may be made to him directly or it may be made by sending a cheque or warrant to his registered address. If a shareholder complains that he has not received payment he is entitled to proceed against the company and its Directors by filing a complaint at the place where he resides because the law demands that payment should have been made to him there."

The High Court's reasoning was clearly based on the premise that payment of dividend has to be made at the place where the shareholder resides, and therefore, it is the Magistrate within whose jurisdiction the shareholder's registered address is situate who has the jurisdiction. The contention in these appeals is that such a view is not in accord with section 207. The question is of some importance, for, if the view taken by the High Court is correct, it would mean that directors of companies would be liable to be prosecuted at hundreds of places where the registered addresses of their shareholders are on allegations that dividends are not paid to them.

3. Section 205 deals with dividends and the manner and time of payment thereof. Sub-section (1) provides that no dividend shall be declared or paid by a company for any financial year except out of the company's profits for that year arrived at in the manner therein set out. Sub-section (3) provides that no dividend shall be payable except in cash. Sub-section 5 (b), however, empowers payment of dividend by cheque or dividend warrant sent through the post directed to the registered address of the shareholder entitled to the payment of the dividend or in the case of joint shareholders to the registered address of that one of them who is first named in the register of members or to such person or to such address as the shareholder or the joint shareholders may in writing direct. Section 206 provides that no dividend shall be paid by a company in respect of any share therein except to the registered holder of such share or to his order or to his bankers, or where a share warrant has been issued to the bearer of such warrant or to his bankers. Section 207 lays down the penalty for failure to distribute dividends declared by the company and provides that where a dividend has been declared by a company but has not been paid or a cheque or a warrant in respect thereof has not been posted within 42 days from the date of declaration to any shareholder entitled to the payment of the dividend, every director of the company, its managing agent or secretaries and treasurers shall, if he is knowingly a party to the default, be punishable with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to 7 days and shall also be liable to fine. But the section further provides that no offence shall be deemed to have been committed within the meaning of the foregoing provision in the cases therein set out.

4. A dividend once declared is a debt payable by the company to its registered shareholders. It is clear from section 205 that although under subsection (3) no dividend shall be payable except in cash, sub-section (5) authorises a company to pay the dividend by a cheque or a warrant. Therefore, dividend can be said to have been paid either when it is paid in cash or when a cheque or a warrant is sent through the post directed to the registered address of the shareholder entitled to payment thereof. Indeed, Section 207 itself lays down that the offence thereunder is committed when dividend is either not paid or a cheque or a warrant in respect thereof has not been posted within the time prescribed therefor. Once, therefore, a dividend warrant is posted at the registered address of the shareholder, dividend is deemed to have been paid.

5. The section casts an obligation on the company to pay the dividend, which is declared to the shareholder entitled thereto within 42 days from its declaration. The offence under the section takes place when there is failure to pay or a cheque or a warrant therefor is not posted to the registered address of the shareholder. It will be noticed that the section makes the failure to post within the prescribed period and not the non-receipt of the warrant by the shareholder an offence. Therefore, the obligation to pay within the prescribed period is satisfied once the dividend is paid or a cheque or a warrant therefor is posted at the registered address of the shareholder. Prima facie, both the obligation to post the dividend warrant and the failure to satisfy that obligation would occur at the place where the obligation is to be performed and that would be the registered office of the company and not the address at which the warrant is to be posted.

6. But the question is since the dividend, when declared, becomes a debt payable by the company to the shareholder and the company becomes a debtor, does the common law rule that the debtor must seek out the creditor apply? There are two considerations which must not be lost sight of before that rule is applied. The first is that section 207 does not make non-receipt of the dividend warrant by the shareholder within 42 days an offence. The offence consists in the failure to post the dividend warrant within the prescribed period. The provisions of section 205 empower payment of dividend by a cheque or a warrant and treat the posting of a cheque or a warrant as payment. Therefore, payment in cash or the posting of a cheque or a warrant are equivalent and the obligation to pay is discharged when either of them is done. The second consideration is that the power to pay dividend by posting a cheque or a warrant provided in section 205 (5) is incorporated in the Articles of Association of the company by Article 132. That article reads:

"Unless otherwise directed by the company in General Meeting any dividend may be paid by cheque or warrant sent through the post to the registered address of the member entitled or in the case of joint holders to the registered address of that one whose name stands first on the register in respect of the joint holding and every cheque so sent shall be made payable to the order of the person to whom it is sent."

7. Section 36 of the Act, which is in the same terms as section 20 of the English Companies Act, 1948, provides that subject to the provisions of the Act the Memorandum and Articles of Association, when registered, bind the company and the members thereof to the same extent as if they respectively have been signed by the company and by each member, and contained covenants on its and his part to observe all the provisions of the Memorandum and of the Articles. It is well established that the Articles of Association constitute a contract between a company and its members in respect of their ordinary rights as members. (see Hickman v. Kent or Romney Marsh Sheep Breeder's Association, 1915-1 Ch 881, and Beattie v. Beattie, Ltd., 1938 Ch. 708). If under a contract, a promisee prescribes the manner in which the promise is to be performed, the promiser can perform the promise in the manner so prescribed. (See section 50 of the Contract Act). Thus, if A desires B, who owes him Rs. 100 to send him a note for that amount by post, the debt is discharged as soon as B puts into the post a letter containing the note duly addressed to A. (See illustration (d) to Section 50 of the Contract Act.) In this connection the decision in Thairlwall v. Great Northern Rly. Co., 1910-2 KB 509, shows how the problem is dealt with by the English Courts. The plaintiff there, who held certain stocks of the defendant company, filed an action to recover dividend payable on those stocks. The defence was that the dividend was paid having been sent by post to the registered address of the plaintiff. The question was looked at from the point of view whether there was any agreement by or obligation on the plaintiff to accept the dividend warrant as payment. If there was any such agreement, the principle laid down in Norman v. Bicketts, (1886) 3 TLR 182, would apply namely, that a debtor or a creditor can agree to make and accept payment of the debt in some form other than cash and that when the creditor asks his debtor to send the amount by post, then if the debtor sends a cheque for the amount by post the risk of loss in transit falls on the creditor and the posting is equivalent to payment. Further the stock certificates had upon the back of them a clause that dividend would be payable by warrant which would be sent by post to the proprietor's registered address, or to any person duly authorised to give a receipt for the same. Section 9 of the Act of 1890, under which the defendant-company was incorporated, also provided that the terms and conditions on which the stock was issued shall be stated on the certificate thereof. In the six monthly report of accounts issued by the directors to the stock-holders there was a statement that the profits of the company had enabled the directors to declare a dividend and there was at the back of that report a notice that the dividend warrants would be payable on a certain date and would be sent by post to the stockholders on the previous day. Under section 90 of the Companies Act, 1845 it was within the power of the directors to fix the date at which and the mode in which dividends should be paid, subject of course to the control of a general meeting. The stock-holders of the company at their general meeting had declared the amount of dividend as proposed by the directors but had passed no resolution as to how payment was to be made. It was held that though no such resolution was passed by the stockholders, they had notice as to how the directors proposed to pay the dividends and as no alteration was made in those proposals, the stockholders were held to have decided among themselves by a proper resolution that the dividend should be paid on a certain day and in the manner proposed by the directors. Such a conduct was equivalent to a request, and therefore, the stockholders became entitled to payment in that way and in that way alone. Consequently, when the dividend warrant had been sent by post the dividend was paid and the company's obligation to pay stood discharged.

8. It follows, therefore, that once a mode of payment of dividend is agreed to, namely, by posting a cheque or a warrant, the place where such posting is to be done is the place of performance and also the place of payment, as such performance in the manner agreed to is equivalent to payment and results in the discharge of the obligation.

9. It is clear from section 205 (5) that the company could pay dividend either in cash or by posting a cheque or a warrant at the registered address of the respondent. Article 132 of the Articles of Association also authorises the company to pay dividend either in cash or by posting a cheque or a warrant to the shareholder at his registered address. The effect of Article 132 is that when a dividend warrant is posted at the registered address of the shareholder that would be equivalent to payment. Once a warrant is so posted the company is deemed to have paid and discharged its obligation. As aforesaid, the Articles of Association constitute an agreement between the company and the shareholders, and the latter was entitled to the payment of dividend in the manner laid down in the Articles and in that manner alone. Article 132 thus not only authorises the company to make the payment in the manner laid down therein but amounts to a request by the shareholders to be paid in the manner so laid down. When, therefore, the company posts the dividend warrant at the registered address of a shareholder, that being done at the shareholder's request, the post office becomes the agent of the shareholder, and the loss of a dividend warrant during transit thereafter is the risk of the shareholder. In Indore Malwa United Mills Ltd. v. Commr. of Income-Tax, (1966) 59 ITR

738 = (AIR 1966 SC 1466) this Court, on a question arising whether on the facts there, payment was made in taxable territory, held that if by an agreement, express or implied, between the creditor and the debtor, or by a request, express or implied, by the creditor, the debtor is authorised to pay the debt by a cheque and to send the cheque to the creditor by post, the post office is the agent of the creditor to receive the cheque and the creditor receives payment as soon as the cheque is posted to him. That being the position, the place where a dividend warrant would be posted, the post office being the agent of the shareholder, is the place where the obligation to pay the debt is discharged—in the present case at Delhi where the company has its registered office. It follows that the offence under section 207 of the Act would also occur at the place where the failure to discharge that obligation arises, namely, the failure to post the dividend warrant within 42 days. The venue of the offence, therefore, would be Delhi and not Meerut, and the court competent to try the offence would be that court within whose jurisdiction the offence takes place i.e., Delhi. This should be so both in law and common sense, for, if held otherwise, the directors of companies can be prosecuted at hundreds of places on an allegation by shareholders that they have not received the warrant. That cannot be the intention of the legislature when it enacted Section 207 and made failure to pay or post a dividend warrant within 42 days from the declaration of the dividend an offence.

10. This view is also in accord with the principle laid down by Maule J. in Ragina v. James Milner, (1846) 175 ER 128, that the felony of not surrendering at a district court to a fiat in bankruptcy, under Stat. 5 and 6 Vict. c. 122, Section 32, is committed at the place where the district court is situate; and an indictment for the offence cannot be sustained in a different country from that in which the person was a trader or in which he committed an act of bankruptcy. On the same principle the High Court of Calcutta has also held in Gunanand Dhone v. Santi Prokash Nanley, 29 Cal WN 432 = (AIR 1925 Cal 613) that it is the court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the accused is liable to render accounts and fails to do so by reason of having committed a breach of trust alleged against him that has the jurisdiction.

11. The offence under S. 207 is the failure to pay dividend or to post a cheque or a warrant for the dividend amount. Since the obligation to post the warrant arose at the registered office of the company, failure to discharge that obligation also arose at the registered office of the company. Therefore, the alleged offence must be held to have taken place at the place where the company's registered office is situate and not where the dividend warrant, when posted, would be received.

12. In that view, the High Court was in error in holding that the Magistrate at Meerut had the jurisdiction to try the said complaints. The appeals must accordingly be allowed and the High Court's orders set aside. Order accordingly.

Appeals allowed.

(V 58 C 53)

(From: Bombay)*

S. M. SIKRI AND V. BHARGAVA JJ.

The Union of India, Appellant v. Lonavala Borough Municipality of Lonavala and another, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 1641 of 1966, D/- 9-3-1970.

Municipalities — Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act (18 of 1925), S. 73 (1) Proviso 2 cl. (c) — Bombay District Municipal Act (30 of 1901), S. 59 — 'Consolidated tax' envisaged by S. 59 (1) Proviso 2, cl. (c) of Act of 1901 — Nature of — It cannot be distinguished from a tax on buildings and lands — Position under Act of 1925 is exactly the same.

The G. I. P. Railway (later the Central Railway) had land with buildings etc. situated within the limits of the Lonavala Municipality (respondent). The Municipality was governed at that time by the Bombay District Municipal Act, 3 of 1901. But no tax was levied on those buildings and lands in view of S. 135 of the Railways Act.

In 1914, the Government of India issued a notification under S. 135 of the Railways Act, according to which the exemption granted to the G. I. P. Railway Administration in respect of house tax was taken away and that tax became payable by the G. I. P. Railway to the Lonavala Municipality. On 4th May 1916, the respondent promulgated new rules for taxation and, instead of charging separate house tax and water rate, it decided to charge a consolidated tax assessed as a rate on buildings and lands in accordance with clause (c) of the second proviso to section 59 (1) of the Act of 1901. The Railway felt that, since, under the notification of 1914, house tax only was payable by the Railway Administration, there was no justification for the respondent Municipality to charge consolidated tax from it and consequently protested against that payment. Thereafter on 26th July, 1917, the Government of India issued a fresh notification under Section 135 of the Railways Act, whereby the Railway Administration was rendered liable to pay what was described as 'tax on land and buildings'. On the issue of this notification, the respondent started charging the G. I. P. Railway this consolidated tax and this continued until some time in the year 1927 by which time the G. I. P. Railway was taken over by the Government and became a Government undertaking. In the Rules promulgated on 4th May 1916, the consolidated tax described as a general rate on buildings and lands was not chargeable on government property. Relying on this provision in the rules, an objection was raised that the charge of the tax was illegal when the Railway had become government property. Subsequently, the respondent Municipality amended its rules and promulgated fresh rules on the 6th October 1931. By this time, the respondent Municipality had been constituted into a Borough under the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act No. 18 of 1925. Under those rules, the exemption in respect of government property to the charge of the general rate on buildings and lands, which was contained in the Rules of 1916, was deleted and all lands and buildings within the Municipal Borough became chargeable irrespective of their being owned by the Government. In pursuance of those rules of 1931, the respondent started collecting the consolidated tax assessed as a rate on buildings and lands of the Railway from it. The Union of India, which had come to be the owner of Railway under the name of the Central Railway, filed a suit for refund of the entire amount which was collected by the respondent from the Railway in pursuance of the rules of 1931.

Held that, on the proper interpretation of the language used in the two Acts of 1901 and 1925 the rules, and the notification, and taking into account the circumstances under which the notification of 1917 was issued, the only conclusion that could be arrived at was that the Railway was made liable to the consolidated tax. Judgment of Bombay High Court in Appeal No. 26 of 1958, D/- 10-3-1965 (3om), Affirmed. (Para 12)

A consolidated tax assessed as a rate on buildings and lands cannot be distinguished from a tax on buildings and lands. AIR 1939 Bom 478, Rel. on; AIR 1962 All 83, Ref.; AIR 1929 Mad 746 & AIR 1963 SC 1742, Disting.

(Para 11)

Clause (c) of the second proviso to Section 59 (1) permits the imposition of a consolidated tax assessed as a rate on buildings or lands or both. The moment a tax is assessed as a rate on buildings or lands, it naturally becomes a tax on buildings and lands. The fact that it was a consolidated tax was immaterial.

(Para 7)

The power to impose the consolidated tax has been given for the purpose of substituting it for the multiple taxes which could be imposed under the clauses of S. 59 (1). The intention appears to be that, though the Municipality was empowered under S. 59 (1) to impose four different kinds of taxes, it was permitted under the clause (c) of the second proviso to simplify matters by having a single tax on buildings and lands in lieu of those multiple taxes. Such a single tax had to be assessed as a rate on buildings and lands.

Dr. L. M. Singhvi, Sr. Advocate (Mr. B. D. Sharma Advocate, with him), for Appellant; Mr. H. R. Gokhale Sr. Advocate (Dr. Y. S. Chitale and Mr. Janendra Lal Advocates, and Mr. B. R. Agarwala Advocate of M/s. Gagrati and Co. with him), for Respondent No. 1.

BHARGAVA, J.:— The Union of India, as the owner of the Central Railway, instituted a suit for refund of Rs. 2,76,967 collected as tax from the Railway Administration by the respondent Municipality during the period from 1931 till the institution of the suit in November, 1954. The facts leading up to the suit are that, the G.I.P. Railway, which was a Private Company, had land situated within the limits of the respondent Municipality. On this land, stood the railway station, their Water Reservoir at Bhusi, bungalows of Officers, and certain other buildings. There were also vacant lands and some lands on which railway lines were laid out. In this area, which belonged to the G.I.P. Railway, the Railway Company itself built roads, supplied water from its Bhusi Reservoir, arranged for the lighting, and provided other services. In fact, up to the year 1916, the Railway used to supply water even to the Municipality from its Bhusi Reservoir on payment. The Municipality was governed, at that time, by the Bombay District Municipal Act No. 3 of 1901 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act of 1901") under which a tax on lands and buildings situated within the municipal limits used to be charged @4 per cent of the annual rental value, but no tax was levied on the buildings and lands of the G.I.P. Railway in view of S. 135 of the Indian Railways Act No. 9 of 1890. In the year 1914, the Government of India issued a notification under Section 135 of the Railways Act declaring that the Administration of the G.I.P. Railway shall be liable to pay, in aid of the funds of the local authorities set out in the Schedule, the taxes specified against each of those authorities. Against the name of Lonavala Municipality, which is the respondent in this case, the tax mentioned was House-tax. Thus, the exemption granted to the Railway Administration was taken away by this notification in respect of house-tax and house-tax became payable by the G.I.P. Railway to the respondent. In 1916, the respondent constructed its own water reservoir and became independent of the Railway for water supply, but no water rate was charged from the Railway even thereafter, though water charges for actual quantities of water supplied in three of the bungalows was charged from the occupants of the bungalows. The rest of the Railway Colony continued to be supplied with water from the Railway Reservoir at Bhushi.

2. On 4th May, 1916, the respondent promulgated new rules for taxation and, instead of charging separate house-tax and water rate, it decided to charge a consolidated tax assessed as a rate on buildings and lands in accordance with clause (c) of the proviso to section 59 (1) of the Act of 1901. Thereafter, it appears that the respondent demanded this consolidated tax from the Railway in respect of the Railway lands and buildings. The Railway felt that, since, under the notification of 1914, house tax only was payable by the Railway Administration, there was no justification for the respondent to charge consolidated tax from it and, consequently, protested against this payment. Thereafter, on 26th July, 1917, the Government of India issued a fresh notification under S. 135 of the Railways Act, whereby the Railway Administration was rendered liable to pay what was described as "tax on lands and buildings". On the issue of this notification, the respondent started charging the G.I.P. Railway this consolidated tax and this continued until some time in the year 1927 by which time the G.I.P. Railway was taken over by the Government and became a Government undertaking. In the Rules promulgated on 4th May, 1916, the consolidated tax described as a general rate on buildings and lands was not chargeable on government property. Relying on this provision in the Rules, an objection was raised that the charge of the tax was illegal when the Railway had become government property.

3. Subsequently, the respondent Municipality amended its Rules and promulgated fresh Rules on the 6th October, 1931. By this time, the respondent Municipality had been constituted into a Borough under the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act No. 18 of 1925 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act of 1925"). These new Rules were thus promulgated under this Act of 1925. Under these Rules, the exemption in respect of government property to the charge of the general rate on buildings and lands, which was contained in the Rules of 1916, was deleted and all lands and buildings within the Municipal Borough became chargeable irrespective of their being owned by the Government. A separate clause was incorporated giving certain exemptions, but since they do not affect the case before us, they need not be mentioned. In pursuance of these Rules of 1931, the respondent started collecting the consolidated tax assessed as a rate on buildings and lands of the Railway from it.

4. In the year 1940, the Railway Administration preferred an appeal under section 110 of the Act of 1925 against one of the demand notices issued in respect of this tax on the 6th October, 1940. This appeal came up before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Western Division, Poona, who held that the levy of this consolidated tax was ultra vires and set aside the demand notice. On a revision by the respondent under section 111 of the Act of 1925, the District and Sessions Judge set aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, holding that the imposition of the tax was valid. Against this decision, the Railway Administration filed a revision before the High Court of Bombay under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The High Court, on 12th February, 1945, refused to exercise its special powers under section 115, C.P.C., with the further remark that the proper remedy to be sought was by means of a suit.

5. Under these circumstances, the Union of India, which had come to be the owner of this Railway under the name of the Central Railway, filed the suit on 27th November, 1954 for refund of the entire amount which was collected by the respondent from the Railway in pursuance of the Rules of 1931. The trial Court held that the levy of this tax was void inasmuch as, under the notification issued on the 26th July, 1917, only the rate on lands and buildings was payable by the Railway Administration. The suit for the refund filed by the Union of India was, on this ground, decreed. On appeal, the High Court disagreed with the trial Court and held that even the consolidated tax was payable in view of the notification of 26th July, 1917, so that the tax had been rightly collected. The High Court, thereupon, set aside the decree of the trial Court and dismissed the suit. It is against this decree that the Union of India has come up in this appeal by certificate under Article 133 of the Constitution.

6. In order to appreciate the submissions made by counsel for parties in this appeal, it is necessary to set out the relevant provisions of section 59 of the Act of 1901 and of section 73 of the Act of 1925 which are as follows: "Section 59 of the Act of 1901:

59 (1) Subject to any general or special orders which the State Government may make in this behalf, any Municipality—may impose, for the purposes of this Act, any of the following taxes, that is to say,

(i) a rate on buildings or lands or both, situate within the municipal district;

(vii) a general sanitary cess for the construction or maintenance, or both construction and maintenance, of public latrines, and for the removal and disposal of refuse;

(viii) a general water-rate or a special water rate or both for water supplied by the Municipality, which may be imposed in the form of a rate assessed on buildings and lands, or in any other form, including that of charges for such supply, fixed in such mode or modes, as shall be best adapted to the varying circumstances of any class of cases or of any individual case;

Provided further that—

(c) the Municipality in lieu of imposing separately any two or more of the taxes described in clauses (i), (vii), (viii) and (ix) may impose a consolidated tax assessed as a rate on buildings or lands, or both situate within the municipal District."

"Section 73 of the Act of 1925:

73. (1) Subject to any general or special orders which the State Government may make in this behalf and to the provisions of sections 75 and 76, a municipality may impose for the purposes of this Act any of the following taxes, namely:

(i) a rate on buildings or lands or both situate within the municipal borough;

(viii) a general sanitary cess for the construction and maintenance of public latrines, and for the removal and disposal of refuse;

* * *

(x) a general water-rate or a special water-rate or both for water supplied by the municipality, which may be imposed in the form of a rate assessed on buildings and lands or in any other form, including that of charges for such supply, fixed in such mode or modes as shall be best adapted to the varying circumstances of any class of cases or of any individual case;

* * *

(xi) a lighting tax;

* * *

(c) the municipality in lieu of imposing separately any two or more of the taxes described in clauses (i), (viii), (x) and (xi) may impose a consolidated tax assessed as a rate on buildings or lands or both situated within the municipal borough."

7. In the year 1914, the respondent Municipality had only levied a rate on buildings and lands under clause (i) of S. 59 (1) of the Act of 1901. There was no question of imposing a general or special water rate as the respondent had no water works of its own and was taking water supply from the G.I.P. Railway. It was in these circumstances that the notification was issued by the Central Government dated the 13th May, 1914 making the Railway Administration liable to pay house-tax to the Municipality of Lonavala. The notification was obviously intended to make the Railway liable to pay the tax which had been imposed as a rate on buildings and lands under S. 59 (1) (i) of the Act of 1901 by the respondent. Subsequently, in the year 1916, the respondent Municipality not only arranged for water supply and imposed a general water rate, it proceeded to make rules for imposition of a consolidated tax assessed as a rate on buildings and lands under clause (c) of the second proviso to S. 59 (1) in lieu of the existing tax imposed as a rate on buildings and lands under clause (i) as well as the water rate imposed under clause (viii) of S. 59 (1). Thereafter, the Central Government issued the notification dated 26th July, 1917 under S. 135 (1) of the Railways Act making the G.I.P. Railway liable to tax on buildings and lands imposed by the Lonavala Municipality. It is to be noted that in this notification, the Government used the word "tax" and not the word "rate". The tax imposed under S. 59 (1) was described as "a rate on buildings and lands". If the intention of the Government had been that the G.I.P. Railway should be liable to that tax only, it could have used the word "rate" instead of the word "tax" in the notification. In fact, if the notification had been left untouched, the liability of the G.I.P. Railway would have continued to be in respect of the rate on buildings or lands because of the earlier notification of 1914, under which the Railway had been made liable to House-tax. The notification of 26th July, 1917 made the Railway liable to tax on buildings and lands obviously because the Government intended that the Railway should be liable to the consolidated tax under clause (c) of the second proviso to S. 59 (1). Clause (c) permits the imposition of a consolidated tax assessed as a rate on buildings or lands or both. The moment a tax is assessed as a rate on buildings or lands, it naturally becomes a tax on buildings and lands. The fact that it was a consolidated tax was immaterial. It was this consolidated tax which was intended to be made payable by the G.I.P. Railway when the Central Government used the expression "tax on buildings and lands" in place of the earlier words "House Tax" and chose not to refer to the liability being in respect of a rate on buildings and lands. It is true that all taxes are not rates; but all rates are taxes. A rate on buildings and lands is a tax on buildings; so also any other tax assessed as a rate on buildings and lands becomes a tax on buildings and lands. We are unable to accept the submission made by counsel for the appellant that the expression "tax on buildings and lands" used in the notification of 26th July, 1917 could only refer to a rate on buildings and lands under clause (i) of Section 59 (1) and would not cover the consolidated tax referred to in clause (c) of the second proviso. It is true, as urged by him, that the tax under clause (c) of the second proviso is not identical with, and is different in nature from, the rate on buildings and lands imposed under clause (i), but that circumstance does not imply that it is not a tax on buildings and lands. The mere use of the word "consolidated" cannot make any difference to this interpretation. It is also significant that clause (c) of the second proviso does not purport to lay down that the consolidated tax will be the sum-total of the taxes described in clauses (i), (vii), (viii), and (ix). The consolidated tax envisaged by that clause is in lieu of separate imposition of any two or more of the taxes described in clauses (i), (vii), (viii) and (ix) which means that the power to impose this consolidated tax has been given for the purpose of substituting it for the multiple taxes which could be imposed under those clauses. This consolidated tax cannot, therefore, be held to be of the same nature as the taxes in all those clauses. The intention appears to be that, though the Municipality was empowered to impose four different kinds of taxes, it was permitted under clause (c) of the second proviso to simplify matters by having a single tax on buildings and lands in lieu of those multiple taxes. Such a single tax had to be assessed as a rate on buildings and lands. This being the nature, it obviously becomes a tax on buildings and lands, so that the notification of 26th July, 1917 clearly makes the Railway liable to payment of this tax. The position under the Act of 1925 is exactly the same where also the language of clause (c) to the second proviso is identical with that contained in the Act of 1901, so that the liability imposed on the Railway by the notification of the Government dated 26th July, 1917 under S. 135 (1) of the Railways Act continued even under the Act of 1925.

8. It is also significant to note that the Rules, which were framed by the Municipality under the Act of 1901 and by the Municipal Borough later under the Act of 1925, which were promulgated on the 4th May, 1916 and the 6th October, 1931 respectively, described the tax as a general rate on buildings and lands in Rule 1. It is true that, in the heading of the Rules, the expression used was that "the Rules were for the levy of a consolidated rate on buildings and lands" but, in the main provision, the tax was described only as "a general rate on buildings and lands". A general rate on buildings and lands is obviously a tax on buildings and lands and would, therefore, be covered by the notification of the Central Government dated 26th July, 1917.

9. Apart from this interpretation which we have arrived at on the basis of the language used in the two Acts, the Rules, and the notification of the Central Government; there are two circumstances which indicate that this must be the correct construction of the notification issued by the Central Government. The first circumstance is that, when this notification was issued, the only tax which was being imposed by the Lonavala Municipality which the Central Government could have intended should become payable by the G.I.P. Railway was the consolidated tax under clause (c) of the second proviso. There was no other tax which would have been covered by this notification. In fact, the notification would be meaningless if we were to hold that this consolidated tax is not covered by the expression "tax on buildings and lands".

This notification was issued while the earlier notification of 1914 was already in existence and, if the intention was to cover only the rate mentioned in clause (i) of S. 59 (1), there was no need to issue this fresh notification as the liability of the Railway to pay that tax already existed under that notification of 1914.

10. The second circumstance that we can take notice of is the historical background in which this notification of 26th July, 1917 was issued. It appears that, after the Rules for imposition of this consolidated tax came into force in 1916, the Municipality demanded payment of this consolidated tax from the G.I.P. Railway. Thereupon, the Agent of the G.I.P. Railway Company wrote a letter to the Secretary, Railway Board, Simla on the 1st December, 1916, stating that the Company did not agree that it should pay the new consolidated tax as it comprised a house tax and a water rate. The Company had its own arrangements for the supply of water and it was obviously unfair that it should be called upon to pay any tax which includes a water rate, when no municipal water was being consumed by the Railway at Lonavala. The Secretary, Railway Board, forwarded this letter to the Secretary to the Government of Bombay, General Department, with a letter dated 12th December, 1916, enquiring whether the Agent's information was correct and, if so, whether the Bombay Government had any remarks to offer on the Agent's contentions. On 11th May, 1917, the Secretary to the Government of Bombay replied to the Secretary, Railway Board, pointing out that, originally, the Municipality proposed to levy a general water rate on all houses, in addition to the existing house tax, but, on representations from property owners of Lonavala and Khandalla, it had decided to impose a consolidated rate on buildings and lands in lieu of the house-tax and the proposed general water rate. Consequently, they were levying, in lieu of house-tax a consolidated rate, which included a general water rate, on sliding scale, on all properties situated within the municipal limits. The water rate imposed was not intended to cover expenses on any service rendered in the nature of a general tax as opposed to a service tax. In equity, the Railway Company's property in Lonavala had no better right to exemption than the properties of private individuals who, although they did not take private pipe connections, were paying the general water rate. In the circumstances, a request was made to the Secretary, Railway Board, to move the Government of India to declare the Administration of the G.I.P. Railway liable to pay to the Lonavala Municipality the consolidated tax on buildings and lands in lieu of the house-tax in respect of the railway properties situated within the municipal limits. It was suggested that the Schedule annexed to the notification dated 13th May, 1914 may be amended accordingly. It was in pursuance of this move by the Bombay Government that the notification of 26th July, 1917 was issued by the Central Government. That the notification of 26th July, 1917 was issued in pursuance of this correspondence is clarified by the Memorandum dated 17th August, 1917, with which a copy of the new notification was forwarded by the Government of India, Railway Department (Railway Board) to the Secretary to the Government of Bombay. These circumstances in which the notification of 26th July, 1917 was issued, make it plain that the Government of India, when they used the expression "tax on buildings and lands" in the notification, intended to make the G.I.P. Railway liable to the consolidated tax which had been imposed by the Municipality under the Rules of 1916.

11. The decision of the Bombay High Court in Borough Municipality, Ahmedabad v. Ahmedabad Manufacturing and Calico Printing Co. Ltd., AIR 1939 Bom 478 on interpretation of sections 73 and 110 of the Act of 1925 also supports the view that we have taken above. The question that arose in that case was whether the right of an appeal envisaged by using the expression "in the case of a rate on buildings or lands or both" in section 110 could be availed of in respect of a general water rate imposed under clause (x) of section 73 (1) which described that tax as a general water rate imposed in the form of a rate assessed on buildings and lands. It was held that there was no distinction between a rate on buildings or lands and tax in the form of a rate assessed on buildings or lands. In the case before us, on that analogy, a consolidated tax assessed as a rate on buildings and lands cannot be distinguished from a tax on buildings and lands.

12. Reference may also be made to a decision of the Allahabad High Court in Raza Buland Sugar Co., Ltd., Rampur v. Municipal Board, Rampur, AIR 1962 All 83 where it was held that a water rate is a tax on buildings and lands and is not, in fact, a service tax chargeable in respect of water supplied. Counsel for the appellant referred to a decision of the Madras High Court in Municipal Council, Cuddappah v. M. & S. Ry. Co. Ltd., AIR 1929 Mad 746, but that case is of no assistance as it turned on the special language which had been used in the Act and the notification which came up for consideration in that case. In fact, the expression that had to be interpreted was "property tax" and not tax on buildings and lands". We agree with learned counsel for the appellant that such assistance cannot be derived from the decision of this Court in Patel Gordhandas Hargovindas v. Municipal Commr. Ahmedabad (1964) 2 SCR 608 = (AIR 1963 SC 1742) which was relied upon by the High Court. However, as we have held above, on the proper interpretation of the language used in the two Acts, the Rules, and the notification, and taking into account the circumstances under which the notification of 1917 was issued, the only conclusion that can be arrived at is that the Railway was made liable to this consolidated tax, so that the decision of the High Court is perfectly correct.

13. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

tion — State cannot directly deport detenu but has to refer matter to Central Government for making necessary arrangements which takes some time — But delay in making such arrangements cannot affect validity of detention or make it a mala fide detention.

(Para 6)

Mr. S. K. Bisaria, Advocate amicus curiae, for Petitioner; Mr. R. N. Sachthey, Advocate, for Respondent.

SIKRI, J.:— This is a petition under Article 32 of the Constitution complaining that the petitioner is under illegal detention. We directed issue of rule nisi and the State Government has filed an affidavit through the Deputy Secretary to the Home Department Jammu and Kashmir Government.

2. It appears that the Government, vide its order No. ISD: 530 of 1970 dated June 25, 1970, ordered that the petitioner be detained under Section 3 (1) (b) of the Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act, 1964. Section 3 (1) (b) enables the Government to make orders to detain a person "if satisfied with respect to any person who is a foreigner within the meaning of the Foreigners Act, 1946, that with a view to regulating his continued presence in the State or with a view to making arrangements for his expulsion from the State, it is necessary so to do."

3. It is stated in the affidavit of the respondent that "the petitioner was recruited as an agent by the Pakistan Intelligence, paid several visits to the State and had planted explosives under some bridges on the National Highway with the intention to disrupt communications. He was apprehended on 29/30th November, 1959 within the State when he had come to one of his missions. During the course of investigation some more explosives had been recovered on his information. The case was registered in P/S Saddar Jammu for contravening the provisions of Indian Passport Act, the Entry Agents Ordinance, the Explosives Substances Act and Sections 224 and 332 of the R. P. C. The case was tried by the Special Judge who sentenced him to undergo eleven years rigorous imprisonment."

4. The order of detention, according to the affidavit, was read over and explained to the petitioner in Urdu and his thumb impression was taken in token of the fact that he fully understood the contents of the order. It was further stated that the case of the detenu was referred to the Advisory Board as required under Section 10 of the Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act, and the opinion of the Board was awaited.

5. The learned counsel who was appointed amicus curiae at the first hearing, said that under Section 11 (1) the Board had to report within 10 weeks from the date of detention and as it had not reported within that period the detention was illegal. It, however, appears that Section 11 of the Act had been amended by The Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention (Amendment) Act (J. & K. Act VIII of 1967) and for the words "ten weeks" the words "five months" were substituted.

6. The learned counsel further said that the detention was mala fide because the State had failed to make the necessary arrangements to deport the petitioner to Pakistan. It appears that the State cannot directly deport the petitioner but has to refer the matter to the Central Govt. for making necessary arrangements and this has taken some time. But we are unable to hold that this delay in making arrangements affects the validity of the detention, though we trust that arrangements will be made very soon to deport him to Pakistan.

7. In the result the petition fails and is dismissed.

Petition dismissed.

GROVER, J.:— These appeals have been brought to this Court by certificate from a judgment of the Patna High Court.

2. The facts may be stated. The respondent — Nath Bank Limited — brought a money suit against the appellant, Amitava Das Gupta, and one Benoy Kumar Sen Gupta in the Patna Courts on March 3, 1949. The Bank, however, went into liquidation as a result of a petition filed by two of its creditors in March 1950, in the Calcutta High Court. The Reserve Bank of India was appointed the official liquidator of the said Bank. The Banking Companies (Amendment) Act 1950 received the assent of the President on March 15, 1950. Under Section 11 of the said Act where any proceeding for the winding up of a banking company or any other proceeding, whether civil or criminal, which had arisen out of or in the course of such winding up, was pending in any Court immediately before the commencement of the Act it was to stand transferred to the Court which would have had jurisdiction to entertain such proceeding if the Act had been in force on the date on which the proceeding had commenced. By virtue of Section 11 the suit which was pending in the Patna Court was transferred to the Calcutta High Court. The records were accordingly transmitted to the Calcutta High Court where the suit was renumbered as Original Trial Suit No. 122 of 1951. After trial it was decreed against the appellant and the other defendant. The decree holder then applied for execution of the decree in the Calcutta High Court and prayed for attachment of a house in Patna. A precept was sent by the Calcutta High Court to the District Judge Patna followed by the transfer of decree to the Court of the District Judge for execution under Section 46 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The execution case was placed before a Subordinate Judge before whom a number of objections were raised. Two Miscellaneous cases arose out of the objections filed under Order 21, Rule 58 and Section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure which were dismissed. The appellant filed an application on June 3, 1959 under Section 47 of the Code that the decree sought to be executed was null and void and was incapable of execution. He filed another objection alleging that the decree-holder had suppressed certain material facts. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the decree passed by the Calcutta High Court was null and void and it was barred by limitation when the execution was taken out. The matter was taken in appeal to the High Court.

3. The High Court took the view that the registered office of Nath Bank Ltd., was situate in Calcutta and therefore the Calcutta High Court would be the Court where winding up proceeding could be started. Under Section 45-B of the Banking Companies Act, 1949, as amended by the Banking Companies (Amendment) Act, 1950, the High Court of Calcutta where the winding up proceedings were going on was competent to decide all claims of the company in liquidation. Reliance was also placed on the amendment made by the Banking Companies Act (Act 52 of 1953) which incorporated Section 45-C with regard to the jurisdiction of the High Court to dispose of the suit. The claim of Nath Bank, therefore, against the appellant and Benoy Sen. Kumar Gupta was fully within the jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court. An argument was raised on behalf of the judgment-debtors that after transfer of the suit to the Calcutta High Court it should have issued a notice to them of such transfer so that particular objections to the plaintiff's claim could be made there. Since no notice was issued to them they were precluded from prosecuting the suit properly in the Calcutta High Court. The learned judges of the Patna High Court were, however, of the view that the burden lay upon the judgment-debtors to establish that notice of the Original Trial Suit No. 122/51 had not been issued by the Calcutta High Court to them. The order sheet of the suit had not been brought on the record and in the absence of that document, it was said, the judgment-debtors could not raise any objection on the ground of want of notice. At any rate it was not considered necessary that a fresh notice be issued when an order had been passed by the Patna Court in the presence of the judgment-debtors transmitting the records to the Calcutta High Court.

4. The next question which had been argued before the High Court was one of limitation. The point which fell for decision was whether Article 183 of the Limitation Act, 1908, was applicable. For the applicability of Article 183 it had to be decided whether the decree passed on the original side of the High Court after the suit had been transferred, as a result of the operation of the Banking Companies Act, could be regarded as a decree passed on the ordinary original side of the High Court or in its special jurisdiction. The judgment debtors maintained that the jurisdiction conferred by the Banking Companies Act on the High Court was a special jurisdiction and the High Court was not exercising its ordinary original civil jurisdiction while disposing of the suit that had been transferred from Patna by virtue of the special provisions of the Banking Companies Act. This contention was repelled and it was held that in the present case the High Court had exercised its ordinary original jurisdiction while disposing of the suit which had been transferred to it. Consequently Article 183 of the Limitation Act applied and the execution proceedings were within time.

5. Before us two main contentions have been sought to be raised. The first relates to the question of limitation and the second to no notice having been issued by the Calcutta High Court to the judgment debtors on transfer of the suit to that Court. As regards the first point it is not disputed that if Art. 183 of the Lim. Act, 1908 was applicable the execution proceedings would not be barred by time. The period of limitation prescribed by that Article is 12 years to enforce a judgment, decree or order of any court established by Royal Charter in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction. The original jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court has been defined in Clauses 11 and 12 of the Letters Patent of that Court. The argument which has been raised on behalf of the appellant is that the jurisdiction which was derived under the Companies Act or the Banking Companies Act was not covered by Clause 12 of the Letters Patent. It had, therefore, to be regarded as the special jurisdiction of the High Court. Reliance has been placed on Navivahoo v. Turner (Official Assignee) (1888-89) 16 Ind App 156 (PC) in which it was laid down that the ordinary jurisdiction of the High Court embraces all such as exercised in the ordinary course of law and without any special step being necessary to assume it. The special step, in the present case, could be found in Section 11 of the Banking Companies (Amendment) Act 1950. An identical question came up for consideration before the Madras High Court in P. T. Munia Servai v. The Hanuman Bank Ltd., Tanjore (in Liquidation) ILR (1958) Mad 685 = (AIR 1958 Mad 418). Applying the test laid down by the Privy Council it was held that jurisdiction conferred on the High Court by the Banking Companies Act was part of its ordinary original jurisdiction within the meaning of Art. 183. That jurisdiction had to be exercised in the ordinary course of law without any special step being necessary to assume it. The Madras decision was referred to with approval by this Court in Jyoti Bhushan Gupta v. The Benaras Bank Ltd., (1962) Supp 1 SCR 73 = (AIR 1962 SC 403). In fact that decision concludes the matter so far as the applicability of Article 183 is concerned. It must, therefore, be held that Article 183 was applicable and the execution proceedings were within time.

6. As regards the other contention about no notice or opportunity having been given to the appellant to prosecute the suit when it was transferred to the Calcutta High Court we can derive no assistance from the printed record. It was necessary to send for the original records of the Calcutta High Court relating to Original Trial Suit No. 122 of 1951 in which the money decree was granted in favour of Nath Bank Ltd. Let those records be called as expeditiously as possible and the appeal placed for further hearing before this Court as soon as the record is received.

Order accordingly.

Criminal Appeal No. 159 of 1966,
D/- 19-11-1968.

(A) Contempt of Courts Act (1952),
S. 1—Contempt of Court—Scandalising the Court — Newspaper article containing scandalous allegations against High Court Judge — Article calculated to obstruct administration of justice — Illustrative case.

In 1960 a suit was filed by one Thackersey against the weekly newspaper "Blitz" and its Editor and others claiming Rs. 3 lacs as damages for libel. The hearing began in June 1964. The delivery of the judgment commenced on January 19, 1965 and continued till February 12, 1965. After June 24, 1964, that suit was heard from day to day by Mr. Justice Tarkunde. The suit was decreed in the sum of Rs. 3 lacs. An appeal was pending before the High Court against that judgment when the impugned article was published on April 24, 1965, in a weekly periodical called "Mainstream".

Its heading was "Story of a Loan and Blitz Thackersey Libel Case". The article had been ingeniously and cleverly worded. The salient matters mentioned in that article were these: After paying a tribute to the Indian judiciary the writer said that according to the report in "Prajatantra", a Gujarati Paper, architects Khare-Tarkunde Private Limited of Nagpur, got a loan facility of Rs. 10 lacs from the Bank of India on December 7, 1964. The partners of Khare-Tarkunde included the father, two brothers and some other relations of Justice Tarkunde who awarded a decree for Rs. 3 lacs as damages against Blitz and in favour of Thackersey. It was pointed out that the date, on which Rs. 10 lacs loan facility was granted by the Bank of India, was about five and a half months after the Thackersey-Blitz libel suit had begun and just over six weeks before Justice Tarkunde began delivering his "marathon judgment" on January 19, 1965. It was then said that for Rs. 10 lacs loan facility granted to Khare-Tarkunde, the New India Assurance Co. stood guarantee and that the two Directors of the Bank of India who voted in favour of the credit of Rs. 10 lacs being granted to Khare-Tarkunde were Thackersey and Jaisinh Vithaldas (believed to be a relative of Thackersey). Next it was stated that one of the Directors of the New India Assurance Co. that stood guarantee for the loan facility was one P who was also a senior partner of the Solicitors of Thackersey in the Blitz-Thackersey Libel Case. Emphasis was laid on the fact that Khare-Tarkunde had a capital of Rs. 5 lacs only and the balance sheet of the firm on June 1964 revealed indebtedness to various financiers to the tune of Rs. 14 lacs. Thus Khare-Tarkunde was stated to be "lucky to get against all this a handsome loan of Rs. 10 lacs from the Bank of India". The writer referred to the Code among college teachers and university professors of not examining papers when their own children and near relatives sit for examination and added that Justice Tarkunde himself would recognize the rightness of such a Code. Referring to the unimpeachable integrity and reputation of Judges of the Bombay High Court, the writer proceeded to say "there must not be allowed to be raised even the faintest whisper of any misgiving on that score." Paragraph 24 of the article stated: "If Sri Thackersey did not lay it bare at the time of the suit that he was one of the sponsors of a contract of which the Judge's relations were the beneficiaries, it is up to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and the Bombay High Court including Justice Tarkunde as also the ever vigilant members of the Bar to consider all the implications of these disclosures which have distressed a common citizen like me, so that the finest traditions of our judiciary may be preserved intact."

Held that the article read as a whole left no doubt that it exceeded the bounds of fair and reasonable criticism. (Para 9)

There was a clear imputation of impropriety, lack of integrity and oblique motives to Justice Tarkunde in the matter of deciding the Thackersey-Blitz suit which undoubtedly constituted contempt of court.

(D) Contempt of Courts Act (1952), S. 1 — Scandalising the Court — Right to express fair criticism of act or conduct of Judge in his judicial capacity.

It is open to anyone to express fair, reasonable and legitimate criticism of any act or conduct of a Judge in his judicial capacity or even to make a proper and fair comment on any decision given by him because Justice is not a cloistered virtue and she must be allowed to suffer the scrutiny and respectful, even though outspoken, comments of ordinary men.

(Para 17)

(E) Contempt of Courts Act (1952), S. 1—Scandalising the Court—Distinction between defamation of a judge and contempt of Court — Test.

A distinction must be made between a mere libel or defamation of a judge and what amounts to a contempt of the court.

(Para 17)

The test in each case would be whether the impugned publication is a mere defamatory attack on the judge or whether it is calculated to interfere with the due course of justice or the proper administration of law by his court. It is only in the latter case that it will be punishable as contempt.

(Para 17)

Alternatively, the test will be whether the wrong is done to the judge personally or it is done to the public. The publication of a disparaging statement will be an injury to the public if it tends to create an apprehension in the minds of the people regarding the integrity, ability or fairness of the judge or to deter actual and prospective litigants from placing complete reliance upon the court's administration of justice, or if it is likely to cause embarrassment in the mind of the judge himself in the discharge of his judicial duties.

(Para 17)

(F) Contempt of Courts Act (1952), S. 1 — Scandalising the Court — Truthfulness or factual correctness not recognized as defence in law of contempt.

It may be that truthfulness or factual correctness is a good defence in an action for libel, but in the law of contempt there are hardly any English or Indian cases in which such defence has been recognized. AIR 1952 SC 149, Expl.

Mr. S. C. Agarwala, Advocate of M/s
Ramamurthi and Co., for Appellants;
M/s. M.S.K. Sastri and S. P. Nayyar, Advocates, for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

GROVER, J.— This is an appeal from the judgment of the Bombay High Court passed in exercise of ordinary original civil jurisdiction by which the appellants were found guilty of having committed contempt of Mr.
Justice Tarkunde in his judicial capacity and of the Court. Appellant No.
2 D. R. Goel, who is the Editor, Printer and Publisher of Perspective Publications (P) Ltd., — appellant No. 1, was sentenced to simple imprisonment for one month together with fine amounting to Rs. 1,000/-, in default of payment of fine he was to undergo further simple imprisonment for the same period. The appellants were also directed to pay the costs incurred by the State. On behalf of the first appellant it has been stated at the bar that the appeal is not being pressed.

2. The background in which the impugned article was published on April 24, 1965, in a weekly periodical called "Mainstream" which is a publication brought out by the first appellant may be set out. In the year 1960
a suit was filed by one Krishnaraj Thackersey against the weekly newspaper "Blitz" and its Editor and others claiming Rs. 3 lacs as damages for libel. The hearing in that suit commenced on the original side of the Bombay High Court on June 24, 1964.
The delivery of the judgment commenced on January 19, 1965 and continued till February 12, 1965. After the June 24, 1964, that suit was heard from day to day by Mr. Justice Tarkunde. The suit was decreed in the sum of Rs. 3 lacs. An appeal is pending before a Division Bench of the High Court against that judgment.

3. The impugned article is stated to have been contributed by a person under the name of "Scribbler" but appellant No. 2 has taken full responsibility for its publication. Its heading was "Story of a Loan and Blitz Thackersey Libel Case". It is unnecessary to reproduce the whole article which appears verbatim in the judgment of the High Court. The article has been ingeniously and cleverly worded. The salient matters mentioned in that article are these: After paying a tribute to the Indian judiciary the writer says that according to the report in "Prajatantra" a Gujarati paper, architects Khare-Tarkunde Private Limited of Nagpur, hereinafter called "Khare Tarkunde" (which is described a Firm in the article) got a loan facility of
Rs. 10 lacs from the Bank of India on December 7, 1964. The partners of Khare-Tarkunde included the father, two brothers and some other relations of Justice Tarkunde who awarded a decree for Rs. 3 lacs as damages against Blitz and in favour of Thackersey. It is pointed out that the date on which Rs. 10 lacs loan facility was granted by the Bank of India was about five and a half months after the Thackersey-Blitz libel suit had begun and just over six weeks before Justice Tarkunde began delivering his "marathon judgment" on January 19, 1965. It is then said that for Rs. 10 lacs loan facility granted to Khare-Tarkunde, the New India Assurance Co. stood guarantee and that the two Directors of the Bank of India who voted in favour of the credit of Rs. 10 lacs being granted to Khare-Tarkunde were Thackersey and Jaisinh Vithaldas (believed to be a relative of Thackersey). Next it is stated that one of the Directors of the New India Assurance that stood guarantee for the loan facility was N. K. Petigara, who was also a senior partner of M/s. Mulla and Mulla Craigie Blunt and Caroe, Solicitors of Thackersey in the Blitz-Thackersey Libel Case before Justice Tarkunde. Emphasis is laid on the fact that Khare-Tarkunde had a capital of Rs. 5 lacs only and the balance sheet of the firm of June 1964 revealed indebtedness to various financiers to the tune of Rs. 14 lacs. Thus Khare-Tarkunde is stated to be "lucky to get against all this a handsome loan of Rs. 10 lacs from the Bank of India". The writer refers to the Code among college teachers and university professors of not examining papers when their own children and near relatives sit for examination and adds that Justice Tarkunde himself will recognize the rightness of such a Code. Referring to the unimpeachable integrity and reputation of judges of the Bombay High Court, the writer proceeds to say "there must not be allowed to be raised even the faintest whisper of any misgiving on that score." Paragraph 24 deserves to be produced:—

"If Sri Krishna Thackersey did not lay it bare at the time of the suit that he was one of the sponsors of a contract of which the judge's relations were the beneficiaries, it is up to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and the Bombay High Court including Justice Tarkunde as also the ever vigilant members of the Bar to consider all the implications of these disclosures which have distressed a common citizen like me, so that the finest traditions of our judiciary may be preserved intact."

4. A petition was filed before the Bombay High Court by the State of Maharashtra pointing out that the aforesaid article contained scandalous allegations and was calculated to obstruct the administration of justice and constituted gross contempt of court. The article purported to state certain facts relating to the transaction between Khare-Tarkunde and the Bank which were false and there were several misstatements and suppression of facts some of which were:

(a) The article wrongly stated that the father of Mr. Justice Tarkunde was a partner in Khare-Tarkunde; and

(b) The article falsely described the transaction as a loan by the Bank to Khare-Tarkunde. In fact the said transaction was only a guarantee given by the Bank which undertook to pay to the Government any amount not exceeding Rs. 10 lacs in the event of Khare-Tarkunde being unable to perform its obligations. The Bank was secured by a further guarantee given by the New India Assurance Co. Ltd. undertaking to secure the Bank in the event of the Bank having to pay the said amount or any part thereof.

5. Appellant No. 2 who also happens to be a Director and Principal Officer of the first appellant, filed a reply raising some objections of a legal and technical nature and took up the position that the impugned article was based on a report published in "Prajatantra" from which all the facts stated in the article were incorporated. It was asserted that certain 'major facts' had been verified by the appellant and found to be true. It was admitted that upon reading the petition for taking contempt proceedings it was found by appellant No. 2 that there were certain incorrect statements in the article. It was claimed that the article had been published in a bona fide belief that whatever was stated in the article in "Prajatantra" was true. The intention was to convey to the public at large that it was incumbent on the plaintiff Thackersey and Petigara, one of the partners of Mulla & Mulla etc., his attorney to inform Justice Tarkunde that the plaintiffs had voted for a resolution of the Board of Directors of the Bank of India which, without reasonable doubt, would help Khare-Tarkunde in which Tarkunde happened to be a brother of the Judge.

6. The High Court analysed the implications of the facts stated in each paragraph of the impugned article in great detail and observed:—

"..... reading the article as a whole, taking care not to read into it anything more than its plain language implies and making every allowance for literary style and rhetorical flourish expressions which were often used in the arguments for the respondents it is impossible to avoid the conclusions that this article exceeds the bounds of fair and reasonable criticism. In so far as it suggests that there is some sort of casual connection between the granting of the loan to M/s. Khare Tarkunde Pvt. Ltd., and the judgment of Mr. Justice Tarkunde in the Blitz-Thackersey case, it clearly attempts to lower the learned judge in his judicial capacity not to mention the fact that it would also tend to shake the confidence of the lay public in the High Court and impair the due administration of justice in that Court. In so far as there is a suggestion made be it ever so faint, that Mr. Justice Tarkunde knew or must have known of the loan to his brother's firm before he delivered the judgment in the case, the article is malicious and not in good faith."

The High Court also examined the misstatements and inaccuracies in the impugned article and held that there was no foundation for suggestion that Khare-Tarkunde was an impecunious concern and therefore was "lucky" to get the handsome loan nor for the suggestion that either Thackersey and his Co-Directors in the Bank of India or Thackersey's solicitor and his Co-Directors in the New India Assurance Co. went out of their way to grant accommodation of Khare Tarkunde. The High Court found no basis for the insinuation that there was any connection between the loan and the judgment in the Blitz-Thackersey case or that Justice Tarkunde knew or might have known about any loan having been granted to his brother's firm. No attempt was made to justify these suggestions in the return or in the argument before the High Court and all that was urged was that the words used by the contemner did not give rise to the said imputations or innuendos and that the contemner was only trying to communicate to the public at large what has been stated before. It is needless to refer to the other points raised before and decided by the High Court because none of them has been argued before us.

7. In this appeal, counsel for appellant No. 2 has made some attempt to establish that no aspersion was cast on the integrity of Justice Tarkunde in the article nor was any imputation of dishonesty made. His second contention is that proceedings for contempt for scandalising a judge have become obsolete and the proper remedy in such a situation is for the Judge to institute action for libel. Thirdly, it is said there was no evidence before the High Court that Justice Tarkunde did not know about the transaction or the dealings between the firm in which his brother was a partner and the bank of which Thackersey was a director. If, it is submitted, the allegations made in the article were truthful or had been made bona fide in the belief that they were truthful the High Court ought not to have found appellant No. 2 guilty of contempt. At any rate, according to counsel, the statements contained in the article only made out a charge of bias against the Judge and if such a charge is made it cannot be regarded as contempt.

8. On the first point our attention has been invited to the paragraphs in the article containing expression of high opinion held by the writer of the judiciary in India. It is suggested that his attempt was only to make a fair and legitimate criticism of the proceedings in the Thackersey suit against the "Blitz" weekly. It has been emphasised in the article that the damages which were awarded to the tune of Rs. 3 lakhs were almost punitive and that it was a rare phenomenon that the plaintiff (Thackersey) did not step into the witness box and also a permanent injunction had been granted preventing Blitz from printing anything based on the subject matter of litigation. The law involving freedom of press fully warranted such criticism of a judgment or of the proceedings in a suit in a court of law.

9. It is true that the writer of the article could exercise his right of fair and reasonable criticism and the matters which have been mentioned in some of the paragraphs may not justify any proceedings being taken for contempt but the article read as a whole leaves no doubt that the conclusions of the High Court were unexceptionable. It was a skilful attempt on the part of the writer to impute dishonesty and lack of integrity to Justice Tarkunde in the matter of Thackersey Blitz suit, the imputation being indirect and mostly by innuendo that it was on account of the transaction and the dealings mentioned in the article that the suit of Thackersey was decreed in the sum of Rs. 3 lakhs which was the full amount of damages claimed by Thackersey. It may be that the article also suggests that Thackersey and his attorneys were to blame inasmuch as they did not inform the Judge about the transactions of Khare-Tarkunde with the Bank of India with which Thackersey was associated in his capacity as a director but that cannot detract from the obvious implications and insinuations made in various paragraphs of the article which immediately create a strong prejudicial impact on the mind of the reader about the lack of honesty, integrity and impartiality on the part of Justice Tarkunde in deciding the Thackersey-Blitz suit.

10. On the second point counsel for appellant No. 2 has relied a great deal on certain decisions of the Privy Council and the Australian and American courts. In the matter of a Special Reference from the Bahama Islands, 1893 AC 138, a letter was published in a colonial newspaper containing sarcastic allusions to a refusal by the Chief Justice to accept a gift of pineapples. No judgment was given by the Privy Council but their Lordships made a report to Her Majesty that the impugned letter though it might have been made subject of proceedings for libel was not, in the circumstances, calculated to obstruct or interfere with the course of justice or the due administration of law and, therefore, did not constitute contempt of court. In that case there was no question of scandalising the court nor had any imputation been made against the Chief Justice in respect of any judicial proceedings pending before him or disposed of in his court. It is the next decision of the Privy Council in McLeod v. St. Aubyn, 1899 AC 549 on which a great deal of argument has been built up before us that the courts, at least in England, have stopped committing any one for contempt for publication of scandalising matter respecting the court after adjudication as well as pending a case before it. That case came by way of an appeal from an order of the Acting Chief Justice St. Aubyn of the Supreme Court of St. Vincent committing one McLeod to prison for 14 days for alleged contempt of court. It was said inter alia in the impugned publication that in Mr. Trifford the public had no confidence and his locum tenens, Mr. St. Aubyn was reducing the judicial character to the level of a clown. There were several other sarcastic and libellous remarks made about the Acting Chief Justice. While recognizing publication of scandalous matter of the court itself as a head of contempt of court as laid down by Lord Hardwicke in re Read and Huggonson, (1742) 2 Atk 469 (471) Lord Morris proceeded to make the oftquoted observation "committals for contempt of Court by itself have become obsolete in this country even though in small colonies consisting principally of coloured population committals might be necessary in proper cases. Only a year later Lord Russell of Killowen C. J., in The Queen v. Gray, (1900) 2 Q.B. 36 reaffirmed that any act done or writing published calculated to bring a court or a judge of the court in contempt, or to lower his authority was a contempt of court. The learned Chief Justice made it clear that judges and courts were alike open to criticism and if reasonable argument or expostulation was offered against any judicial act as contrary to law or the public good no court could or would treat that as contempt of court but it was to be remembered that the liberty of the press was not greater and no less than the liberty of every subject. In that case it was held that there was personal scurrilous abuse of a judge and it constituted contempt. All the three cases which have been discussed above were noticed by the Privy Council in Debi Prasad Sharma v. King Emperor, 70 Ind App 216 = (AIR 1943 PC 202) where contempt proceedings had been taken in respect of editorial comments published in a newspaper based on a news item that the Chief Justice of Allahabad High Court in his administrative capacity had issued a circular to judicial officers enjoining on them to raise contributions to the war fund and it was suggested that he had done a thing which would lower the prestige of the court in the eyes of the public. This is what was said at p. 224 (of Ind App) = (at p. 204 of AIR).

"In (1893) A. C. 138, the test applied by the very strong Board which heard the reference was whether the words complained of were in the circumstances calculated to obstruct or interfere with the course of justice and the due administration of the law. In (1900) 2 QB 36 it was shown that the offence of scandalising the court itself was not obsolete in this country. A very scandalous attack had been made on a judge for his judicial utterances while sitting in a criminal case on circuit, and it was with the foregoing opinions on record that Lord Russell of Killowen C. J. adopting the expression of Wilmet C. J. in his opinion in Rex v. Almon (1765) Wilmet's Notes of Opinions 243, which is the source of much of the present law on the subject, spoke of the article complained of as calculated to lower the authority of the judge."

11. It is significant that their Lordships made distinction between a case where there had been criticism of the administrative act of a Chief Justice and an imputation on him for having done or omitted to have done something in the administration of justice. It is further noteworthy that the law laid down in 1899 AC 549 was not followed and it was emphasised that 1900-2 Q.B. 36 showed that the offence of scandalising the Court itself was not obsolete in England. In Rex v. Editor of the New Statesman, (1928) 44 T.L.R. 301, an article had been published in the New Statesman regarding the verdict by Mr. Justice Avory given in a libel action brought by the Editor of the "Morning Post" against Dr. Marie Stopes (the well-known advocate of birth control) in which it was said, inter alia, "the serious point in this case, however, is that an individual owning such views as those of Dr. Marie Stopes cannot apparently hope for a fair hearing in a Court presided over by Mr. Justice Avory — and there are so many Avorys". On behalf of the contemner 1899 AC 549 was sought to be pressed into service. The Lord Chief Justice in delivering the judgment of the Court said that the principle applicable to such cases was the one stated in (1900) 2 Q. B. 36 and relied on the observations of Lord Russell at p. 40. It was observed that the article imputed unfairness and lack of impartiality to judge in the discharge of his judicial duties. The gravamen of the offence was that by lowering his authority it interfered with the performance of his judicial functions. Again in Ambard v. Attorney General for Trinidad and Tobago, 1936 AC 322 the law enunciated in (1900) 2 QB 36 by Lord Russell of Killowen was applied and it was said at page 335:

"But whether the authority and position of an individual judge, or the due administration of justice, is concerned no wrong is committed by any member of the public who exercise the ordinary right of criticising, in good faith, in private or public, the public act done in the seat of justice. The path of criticism is a public way; the wrong headed are permitted to err therein; provided that members of the public abstain from imputing improper motives to those taking part in the administration of justice, and are genuinely exercising a right of criticism, and not acting in malice or attempting to impair the administration of justice, they are immune. Justice is not a cloistered virtue; she must be allowed to suffer the scrutiny and respectful, even though outspoken, comments of ordinary men."

It was, however, held that there was no evidence upon which the court could find that the alleged contemner had exceeded fair and temperate criticism and that he had acted with untruth or malice and with the direct object of bringing the administration of justice into disrepute.

12. Lord Denning M. R. in Reg v. Commr. of Police of the Metropolis, Ex parte Blackburn (No. 2) (1968) 2 WLR 1204 made some pertinent observations about the right of every man, in Parliament or out of it, in the Press or over the broadcast, to make fair and even outspoken comment, on matters of public interest. In the words of the Master of Rolls,

"those who comment can deal faithfully with all that is done in a Court of justice. They can say that we are mistaken, and our decisions erroneous, whether they are subject to appeal or not. All we would ask is that those who criticise us will remember that, from the nature of our office, we cannot reply to their criticism. We cannot enter into public controversy. Still less into political controversy. We must rely on our conduct itself to be its own vindication."

In that case Mr. Quintin Hogg had written an article in "Punch" in which he had been critical of the Court of Appeal and had even made some erroneous statements. But reading of the article the salient passage of which is set out in the judgment of the Master of the Rolls makes it quite clear that there was no attempt to scandalise the Court and impute any dishonourable or dishonest motives or to suggest any lack of integrity in any particular Judge.

13. Oswald in his book on the Contempt of Court has expressed the view that it would be going a great deal too far to say that commitments for contempt of Court by scandalising the Court itself have become obsolete, and that there does not seem to be any good reason for ignoring the principles which govern the numerous early cases on the subject.

14. The American and the Australian cases viz., Johan D. Pennekamp & the Miami Herald Publishing Co. v. State of Florida, (1946) 328 US 331 & Bell v. Stewart, 28 CLR 419, to which reference has been made on behalf of appellant No. 2 can hardly be of much assistance because in this country principles have become crystallized by the decision of the High Courts and of this court in which the principles followed by English Courts have been mostly adopted.

15. We would now advert to the decisions of this court. It was held in Bathina Ramakrishna Reddy v. State of Madras, 1952 SCR 425 = (AIR 1952 SC 149) that the fact that the defamation of a Judge of a subordinate Court constitutes an offence under S. 499 of the Indian Penal Code did not oust the jurisdiction of the High Court to take cognizance of the act as a contempt of court. In that case in an article in a Telugu weekly it was alleged that the Stationary Sub-Magistrate of Kovvur was known to the people of the locality for harassing litigants in various ways etc. Mukherjee J., (as he then was) who delivered the judgment described the article as a scurrilous attack on the integrity and honesty of a judicial officer. It was observed that if the allegations were false, they could not but undermine the confidence of the public in the administration of justice and bring the judiciary into disrepute. The appellant there had taken the sole responsibility regarding the publication of the article and was not in a position to substantiate by evidence any of the allegations made therein. It was held that he could not be said to have acted bona fide, "even if good faith can be held to be a defence at all in a proceeding for contempt". The decision in re The Editor, Printer and Publisher of "The Times of India", 1953 SCR 215 = (AIR 1953 SC 75) and Aswini Kumar Ghose v. Arabinda Bose, 1953 SCR 1 = (AIR 1952 SC 369), is very apposite and may be next referred to. In a leading article in "The Times of India" on the judgment of this Court in 1953 SCR 1 = (AIR 1952 SC 369) the burden was that if in a singularly oblique and infelicitous manner the Supreme Court had by a majority decision tolled the knell of the much maligned dual system prevailing in the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts by holding that the right to practise in any High Court conferred on advocates of the Supreme Court had made the rules in force in those High Courts requiring advocates appearing on the original side to be instructed by attorneys inapplicable to them. This is what was said by Mahajan J., (as he then was) speaking for the court:

"No objection could have been taken to the article had it merely preached to the courts of law the sermon of divine detachment. But when it proceeded to attribute improper motives to the Judges, it not only transgressed the limits of fair and bona fide criticism but had a clear tendency to affect the dignity and prestige of this court. The article in question was thus a gross contempt of court. It is obvious that if an impression is created in the minds of the public that the judges in the highest court in the land act on extraneous considerations in deciding cases, the confidence of the whole community in the administration of justice is bound to be undermined and no greater mischief than that can possibly be imagined".

The Editor, Printer and Publisher of the newspaper rendered an apology which was accepted; but this court concurred in the expression of views in 1936 AC 322 a passage from which has already been extracted. The guiding principles to be followed by courts in contempt proceedings were enunciated in Brahma Prakash Sharma v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 1953 SCR 1169 = (AIR 1954 SC 10). The judgment again was delivered by Mukherjee J., (as he then was) and the English decisions including those of the Privy Council were discussed. It is necessary to refer only to the principles laid down for cases of the present kind i.e. scandalising the court. It has been observed that there are two primary considerations which should weigh with the court when it is called upon to exercise summary power in cases of contempt committed by "scandalising" the court itself. In the first place, the reflection on the conduct or character of a Judge in reference to the discharge of his judicial duties would not be contempt, if such reflection is made in the exercise of the right of fair and reasonable criticism which every citizen possesses in respect of public acts done in the seat of justice. Secondly when attacks or comments are made on a Judge or Judges disparaging in character and derogatory to their dignity, care should be taken to distinguish between what is a libel on a judge and what really amounts to contempt of court. If, however, the publication of the disparaging statement is calculated to interfere with the due course of justice or proper administration of law by such court, it can be punished summarily as contempt.

"It will be an injury to the public if it tends to create an apprehension in the minds of the people regarding the integrity, ability or fairness of the judge or to deter actual and prospective litigants from placing complete reliance upon the court's administration of justice, or if it is likely to cause embarrassment in the mind of the judge himself in the discharge of his judicial duties. It is well established that it is not necessary to prove affirmatively that there has been an actual interference with the administration of justice by reason of such defamatory statement; it is enough if it is likely, or tends in any way, to interfere with the proper administration of law."

In that case it was held that the contempt was of a technical nature. This was based apparently on the reason that the Members of the Bar who had passed a resolution attributing incompetency, lack of courtesy etc. and had referred to complaints against two officers, one a Judicial Magistrate and the other a Revenue Officer and had sent those complaints to the District Magistrate, Commissioner and the Chief Secretary in the State and secondly because very little publicity had been given to the statement.

16. In re Hira Lal Dixit, (1955) 1 SCR 677 = (AIR 1954 SC 743) the above principles were applied and reaffirmed. In that case words which had been used in a poster which was published had the necessary implication that the judges who decided in favour of the Government were rewarded by the Government with appointments to this Court. Although the case was not one of scandalizing of the court but the question that was posed was whether the offending passage was of such character and import or made in such circumstances as would tend to hinder or obstruct or interfere with the due course of administration of justice by this court and it was answered in the affirmative and the contemner was held guilty of contempt of Court. In State of Madhya Pradesh v. Revashankar, 1959 SCR 1367 = (AIR 1959 SC 102) an application was made under Section 528 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in certain criminal proceedings containing serious aspersions against a Magistrate, Mr. N. K. Acharya. Reliance was once again placed on Brahma Prakash Sharma's case, 1953 SCR 1169 = (AIR 1954 SC 10) and the principles laid therein. It was held that the aspersions which had been made amounted to something more than a mere intentional personal insult to the Magistrate; they scandalised the court itself and impaired the administration of justice and that proceedings under the contempt of court could be taken against the contemner.

17. There can be no manner of doubt that in this country the principles which should govern cases of the present kind are now fully settled by the previous decisions of this court.

We may restate the result of the discussion of the above cases on this head of contempt which is by no means exhaustive.

(1) It will not be right to say that committals for contempt scandalizing the court have become obsolete.

(2) The summary jurisdiction by way of contempt must be exercised with great care and caution and only when its exercise is necessary for the proper administration of law and justice.

(3) It is open to anyone to express fair, reasonable and legitimate criticism of any act or conduct of a judge in his judicial capacity or even to make a proper and fair comment on any decision given by him because "justice is not a cloistered virtue and she must be allowed to suffer the scrutiny and respectful, even though outspoken, comments of ordinary men."

(4) A distinction must be made between a mere libel or defamation of a judge and what amounts to a contempt of the court.

The test in each case would be whether the impugned publication is a mere defamatory attack on the judge or whether it is calculated to interfere with the due course of justice or the proper administration of law by his court. It is only in the latter case that it will be punishable as contempt.

(5) Alternatively the test will be whether the wrong is done to the judge personally or it is done to the public. To borrow from the language of Mukherjee J. (as he then was) (Brahma Prakash Sharma's case, 1953 SCR 1169 = (AIR 1954 SC 10)), the publication of a disparaging statement will be an injury to the public if it tends to create an apprehension in the minds of the people regarding the integrity, ability or fairness of the judge or to deter actual and prospective litigants from placing complete reliance upon the court's administration of justice or if it is likely to cause embarrassment in the mind of the judge himself in the discharge of his judicial duties.

18. As regards the third contention no attempt was made before the High Court to substantiate that the facts stated in the article were true or were founded on correct data. It may be that truthfulness or factual correctness is a good defence in an action for libel, but in the law of contempt there are hardly any English or Indian cases in which such defence has been recognized. It is true that in the case of Bathina Ramakrishna Reddy, 1952 SCR 425 = (AIR 1952 SC 149) there was some discussion about the bona fides of the person responsible for the publication but that was apparently done to dispose of the contention which had been raised on the point. It is quite clear that the submission made was considered on the assumption that good faith can be held to be a defence in a proceeding for contempt. The words "even if good faith can be held to be a defence at all in a proceeding for contempt" show that this Court did not lay down affirmatively that good faith can be set up as a defence in contempt proceedings. At any rate, this point is merely of academic interest because no attempt was made before the High Court to establish the truthfulness of the facts stated in the article. On the other hand, it was established that some of the material allegations were altogether wrong and incorrect.

19. Lastly the submission that the statements contained in the article made out only a charge of bias against the judge and this cannot constitute contempt has to be stated to be rejected. It is a new point and was never raised before the High Court. Moreover the suggestion that the charge in the article was of legal bias which meant that Justice Tarkunde had some sort of pecuniary interest in Khare-Tarkunde which had the transactions with the bank of which Thackersey was a Director is wholly baseless. Counsel had to agree that Justice Tarkunde was neither a shareholder nor was there anything to show that he had any other interest in Khare-Tarkunde. The mere fact that his brother happens to have a holding in it cannot per se establish that Justice Tarkunde would also have some financial or pecuniary interest therein. It is not possible to accept nor has such extreme position been taken by the counsel for appellant No. 2 that there was any bar to a brother or a near relation of a judge from carrying on any business, profession or avocation. The entire argument on this point is wholly without substance.

20. The appellant No. 2 showed no contrition in the matter of publication of the impugned article. He never even tendered an unqualified apology. The High Court, in these circumstances, was fully justified in punishing him for contempt of court and in awarding the sentence which was imposed. In the impugned article there was a clear imputation of impropriety, lack of integrity and oblique motives to Justice Tarkunde in the matter of deciding the Thackersey-Blitz suit which, on the principles already stated, undoubtedly constituted contempt of court.

21. The appeal fails and is hereby dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. S. Mohan Kumara Mangalam, Senior Advocate, (Mr. A. V. Rangam, Advocate with him), for Appellants (in both Appeals); Mr. N. H. Hingorani and Mrs. K. Hingorani, Advocates, for Respondents (in both Appeals).

HEGDE, J.:— In these appeals by special leave this Court is called upon to consider the true effect as well as validity of some of the provisions of the Madras Entertainments Tax (Amendment) Act, 1966 (Madras Act XX of 1966) (to be hereinafter referred to as the Act). For the purpose of pronouncing on the questions of law arising for decision, it is sufficient to refer to the facts of the case in Civil Appeal No. 2462 of 1969 as has been done by the High Court.

2. The 1st respondent in Civil Appeal No. 2462 of 1969, is the Managing Partner of the cinema theatre known as "the K. M. S. Theatre" at Mettupalayam in Coimbatore District. On November 7, 1965, the C. T. O. Erode, made surprise inspection of the theatre and found the booking clerk actually selling unauthorised tickets with a forged seal "C.T.O. Mettupalayam". The officer seized the forged seal and other connected materials alongwith the bogus tickets. Thereafter he served on the respondents notices calling upon them to show cause why the price of the tickets issued which had escaped assessment should not be brought to tax under the Madras Entertainments Tax Act, 1939 and further to levy surcharge on the payments for admission under the Madras Local Authorities Finance Act, 1961. The respondents' objection was duly considered and rejected. Thereafter the assessing authority levied entertainment tax and surcharge on the price of the tickets which according to him had escaped assessment. The respondents moved the High Court of Madras under Article 226 of the Constitution to quash the assessment.

3. The question as to the power of the assessing authority to re-assess the receipts that had escaped assessment under the Madras Entertainments Tax Act, 1939 had come up for consideration before the High Court of Madras in W. P. No. 513 of 1963 (Mad.) R. Sundararaja Naidu v. Entertainment Tax Officer. Therein the High Court of Madras held that there was no power to re-assess under that Act. Thereafter the State legislature enacted the Act. The Act among other provisions contains S. 7, a provision relating to validation of assessment and collection of certain taxes. That section reads:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act or in the principal Act or in any judgment, decree or order of any Court no assessment or re-assessment or collection of any tax due on any payment for admission to any entertainment or any cinematograph exhibition which has escaped assessment to tax, or which has been assessed at a rate lower than the rate at which it is assessable, under S. 4 or 4-A of the principal Act, made at any time after the date of the commencement of the principal Act and before the date of the publication of this Act in the Fort St. George Gazette shall be deemed to be invalid or ever to have been invalid on the ground only that such assessment or re-assessment or collection was not in accordance with law and such tax assessed or reassessed or collected or purporting to have been assessed or reassessed or collected, shall, for all purposes, be deemed to be and to have been always validly assessed or reassessed or collected; and accordingly—

(a) all acts, proceedings or things done or taken by the State Government or by any officer of the State Government or by any other authority in connection with the assessment or reassessment or collection of such tax, shall, for all purposes be deemed to be, and to have always been done or taken in accordance with law;

(b) no suit or other proceeding shall be maintained or continued in any court against the State Government or any person or authority whatsoever for the refund of any tax so paid; and

(c) no Court shall enforce any decree or order directing the refund of any tax so paid."

4. The re-assessments with which we are concerned in these cases were made prior to the coming into force of the Act. Therefore all that we have to see is whether those re-assessments are validly protected by Section 7. The High Court of Madras allowed the writ petitions and quashed the reassessments on the ground that the power to re-assess under Section 7 (B) introduced by the Act is incomplete and not exercisable in the absence of prescription as to limitation contemplated by the section and hence S. 7 of the Act fails to validate the assessments in question. We do not propose to go into that question as in our opinion S. 7 of the Act is invalid in so far as it attempts to validate invalid assessments without removing the basis of its invalidity.

5. We have earlier seen that the Madras High Court had held that the provisions of the Madras Entertainments Tax Act, 1939 do not provide for reassessment. That decision has not been appealed against nor the correctness of that decision challenged before us. Section 7 of the Act does not change the law retrospectively. All that it provides is that notwithstanding anything contained in the Act or in the principal Act or in any judgment, decree or order of any Court, no assessment or re-assessment or collection of any tax due on any payment for admission to any entertainment or any cinematograph exhibition which has escaped assessment to tax, or which has been assessed at a rate lower than the rate at which it is assessable under S. 4 or 4-A of the principal Act made at any time after the date of the commencement of the principal Act and before the date of the publication of this Act in the Gazette shall be deemed to be invalid or ever to have been invalid on the ground only that such assessment or re-assessment or collection was not in accordance with law and such tax assessed or reassessed or collected or purporting to have been assessed or reassessed or collected shall for all purposes be deemed to be to have always been validly assessed or re-assessed or collected. The effect of this provision is to overrule the decision of the Madras High Court and not to change the law retrospectively. What the provision says is that notwithstanding any judgment of the court, the reassessment invalidly made must be deemed to be valid. The legislature has no power to enact such a provision. A question similar to the one before us came up for consideration before this Court in The Municipal Corporation of the City of Ahmedabad v. The New Shrock Spg. & Wvg. Co. Ltd., Civil Appeals Nos. 2062 to 2064, 2072 and 2251 of 1969 D/- 17-4-1970 = (AIR 1970 SC 1292). Dealing with that question this is what this Court observed:

6. "This is a strange provision. Prima facie that provision appears to command the Corporation to refuse to refund the amount illegally collected despite the orders of this Court and the High Court. The State of Gujarat was not well advised in introducing this provision. That provision attempts to make a direct inroad into the judicial powers of the State. The legislatures under our Constitution have within the prescribed limits, powers to make laws prospectively as well as retrospectively. By exercise of those powers, the legislature can remove the basis of a decision rendered by a competent court thereby rendering that decision ineffective. But no legislature in this country has power to ask the instrumentalities of the State to disobey or disregard the decision given by courts. The limits of the power of legislatures to interfere with the directions issued by courts were considered by several decisions of this Court. In Shri Prithvi Cotton Mills Ltd. v. The Broach Borough Municipality, Civil Appeals Nos. 2197 and 2198 of 1966 D/- 25-4-1969 = (AIR 1970 SC 132), our present Chief Justice speaking for the Constitution Bench of the Court observed:

"Before we examine Section 3 to find out whether it is effective in its purpose or not we may say a few words about validating statutes in general. When a legislature sets out to validate a tax declared by a court to be illegally collected under an ineffective or an invalid law, the cause for ineffectiveness or invalidity must be removed before validation can be said to take place effectively. The most important condition of course, is that the legislature must possess the power to impose the tax, for, if it does not, the action must ever remain ineffective and illegal. Granted legislative competence, it is not sufficient to declare merely that the decision of the court shall not bind for that is tantamount to reversing the decision in exercise of judicial power which the legislature does not possess or exercise. A court's decision must always bind unless the conditions on which it is based are so fundamentally altered that the decision could not have been given in the altered circumstances. Ordinarily, a Court holds a tax to be invalidly imposed because the power to tax is wanting or the statute or the rules or both are invalid or do not sufficiently create the jurisdiction. Validation of a tax so declared illegal may be done only if the grounds of illegality or invalidity are capable of being removed and are in fact removed and the tax thus made legal. Sometime this is done by providing for jurisdiction where jurisdiction had not been properly invested before. Sometimes this is done by re-enacting retrospectively a valid and legal taxing provision and then by fiction making the tax already collected to stand under the re-enacted law."

6-A. In Mahal Chand Sethia v. State of West Bengal, Criminal Appeal No. 75 of 1969 D/- 10-9-1969 (SC) Mitter J. speaking for the Court stated the legal position in these words:

"The argument of counsel for the appellant was that although it was open to the State legislature by an Act and the Governor by an Ordinance to amend the West Bengal Criminal Law Amendment (Special Courts) Act, 1949, it was incompetent for either of them to validate an order of transfer which had already been quashed by the issue of a writ of certiorari by the High Court and the order of transfer being virtually dead, could not be resuscitated by the Governor or the Legislature and the validating measures could not touch any adjudication by the Court.

It appears to us that the High Court took the correct view and the Fourth Special Court had clearly gone wrong in its appreciation of the scope and effect of the Validating Act and Ordinance. A legislature of a State is competent to pass any measure which is within the legislative competence under the Constitution of India. Of course, this is subject to the provisions of Part III of the Constitution. Laws can be enacted either by the Ordinance making power of a Governor or the Legislature of a State in respect of the topics covered by the entries in the appropriate List in the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution. Subject to the above limitations laws can be prospective as also retrospective in operation. A court of law can pronounce upon the validity of any law and declare the same to be null and void if it was beyond the legislative competence of the legislature or if it infringed the rights enshrined in Part III of the Constitution. Needless to add it can strike down or declare invalid any act or direction of a State Government which is not authorised by law. The position of a Legislature is however different. It cannot declare any decision of a court of law to be void or of no effect."

7. Again Shah J. (one of us in Janpada Sabha, Chhindwara v. The Central Provinces Ltd. and State of Madhya Pradesh v. Amalgamated Coal Fields Ltd., Civil Appeals Nos. 125 to 134 of 1967, D/- 23-2-1970 = (AIR 1971 SC 57)) speaking for the Constitution Bench explained the legal position in these words:

"The relevant words which purported to validate the imposition, assessment and collection of cess on coal may be recalled: they are "cesses imposed, assessed or collected by the Board in pursuance of the notification/ notices specified in the Schedule shall, for all purposes, be deemed to be, and to have always been validly imposed, assessed or collected as if the enactment under which they were so issued stood amended at all material times so as to empower the Board to issue the said notification/notices. Thereby the enactments i.e. Act 4 of 1920 and the Rules, framed under the Act pursuant to which the notifications and notices were issued, must be deemed to have been amended by the Act. But the Act does not set out the amendments intended to be made in the enactments. Act 18 of 1964 is a piece of clumsy drafting. By a fiction it deems the Act of 1920 and the rules framed thereunder to have been amended without disclosing the text or even the nature of the amendments."

Proceeding further, it was observed:

"On the words used in the Act, it is plain that the legislature attempted to overrule or set aside the decision of this Court. That in our judgment, is not open to the Legislature to do under our constitutional scheme. It is open to the Legislature within certain limits to amend the provisions of the Act retrospectively and to declare what the law shall be deemed to have been, but it is not open to the Legislature to say that a judgment of a court properly constituted and rendered in exercise of its powers in a matter brought before it shall be deemed to be ineffective and the interpretation of the law shall be otherwise than as declared by the Court."

"We are clearly of the opinion that sub-section (3) of Section 152A introduced by the Ordinance is repugnant to our Constitution."

8. The present case falls within the rule laid down by that decision. Hence it is clear that the impugned assessment cannot be sustained. In this view of the matter it is not necessary to go to the other contentions arising in the case.

9. In the result these appeals fail and they are dismissed with costs. Appeals dismissed.

tion — Test — Date from which maintenance claimable.

The quantum of maintenance depends upon a gathering together of all the facts of the situation, the amount of free estate, the past life of the married parties and the families, a survey of the conditions and necessities and rights of the members on a reasonable view of change or circumstances possibly required in the future, regard being, of course had to the scale and mode of living and to the age habits, wants and class of life of the parties. Section 23 (2) makes no departure from these principles as enunciated in AIR 1929 PC 128 except perhaps to a limited extent envisaged in sub-clauses (d) and (e) of Section 23 (2). (Para 17)

Where wife's claim to maintenance against husband for herself and for her daughter was first laid by a lawyer's notice of 1951 but the suit for maintenance was filed in 1954 the suit could be decreed from the date of its institution as a terminus a quo for maintenance as claimed by wife. Where a Reader in medicine and physician having private practice not in affluent circumstances but with means to support wife on reasonable scale of comfort neglected his wife since about a year after his marriage, a sum of Rs. 250 for his wife and Rs. 150 for his daughter as monthly maintenance was proper subject to limit of 25 per cent and 15 per cent of the income as determined by Income-tax authorities. (Paras 20, 21, 22)

(B) Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act (1956), Section 23 (2) (d) — Wife's claim for maintenance — Amount regularly received by wife @ Rs. 250/- p. m. from her father during his lifetime — Sum so received by wife from her father was not her income but was only a bounty from her father which she might or might not get — Hence it was not a fact to be taken into consideration under Section 23 (2) (d). Bagga and Mrs. S. Bagga, Advocates with him), for Respondent (in both the appeals).

MITTER, J.: These two appeals are from two judgments and decrees of the High Court of Allahabad granting maintenance to the wife and daughter of the common appellant in both the appeals.

2. Counsel for the appellant did not contest the right of the respondents to claim maintenance. His argument was directed only against the quantum fixed in both the cases on the ground that the principles laid down in Section 23 (2) of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956 had not been followed by the High Court. The Act had come into force before the date of the trial court's judgment on the 1st June 1957 and it is the common case of the parties that the Act governs the rights of the parties herein. The relevant portion of Section 23 runs as follows:

"(1) It shall be in the discretion of the court to determine whether any, and if so, what, maintenance shall be awarded under the provisions of this Act, and in doing so the court shall have due regard to the considerations set out in sub-section (2) or sub-section (3), as the case may be, as far as they are applicable.

(2) In determining the amount of maintenance, if any, to be awarded to a wife, children or aged or infirm parents under this Act, regard shall be had to—

(a) the position and status of the parties;

(b) the reasonable wants of the claimant;

(c) if the claimant is living separately, whether the claimant is justified in doing so;

(d) the value of the claimant's property and any income derived from such property, or from the claimant's own earnings or from any other source;

(e) the number of persons entitled to maintenance under this Act.

x x x

As it was contended on behalf of the appellant that practically all the provisions of the sub-clauses of sub-s. (2) were disregarded by the High Court, it is necessary to state a few facts about the married life of the appellant, his income out of which maintenance is to be directed, the pecuniary conditions of himself and of his wife and whether the wife has any other income or property which had to be taken into consideration.

3. The marriage of the appellant with the respondent in the first appeal took place in May 1945 at Gujranwala now in Pakistan. The father-in-law of the appellant who was examined as a witness in the maintenance suit filed by the respondent gave evidence to the effect that he had worked as an agent of the Standard Vacuum Oil Company with agencies at Gujranwala and neighbouring districts and that his annual income at the date of the marriage of the respondent was about Rs. 40,000/- out of which he had to pay Rs. 13,000/- by way of income-tax. Further, after the partition of India he came to Dehra Dun and took up his abode at Premnagar Refugee Camp but could not engage himself actively in business on account of illness and old age but had become a partner with others in a business of ice and rice mill in which he had a Re. 0-2-6 shares; he had never seen the accounts of the business and was content to accept whatever was given to him by his partners which varied between Rs. 50/- and Rs. 200/- per month. He had to leave all his property in Pakistan and had not received any compensation in lieu thereof at the date when he was examined in court in March 1956.

4. There is some dispute about the period during which the parties in the first appeal had lived together as man and wife. According to the husband the period had come to an end in March 1946 while according to the wife it had lasted up to December 1946. Admittedly, a daughter, the respondent in the second appeal, was born out of the wedlock on August 4, 1946. The wife sent a lawyer's notice claiming maintenance on July 28, 1951 and filed a suit for the purpose adding a claim to ornaments which according to her were left with the husband. The lawyer's notice states that the news of the birth of the daughter had been conveyed to the parents by his father-in-law by registered post but the latter had refused to accept it, that the wife had been sent by the appellant to Gujranwala for the confinement in 1946 and all her stridhana jewellery, silk clothes etc., had been left behind with the appellant at Lucknow. On the basis that the appellant was receiving Rs. 560/- per month as salary from Government and was earning Rupees 800 per month by way of private practice besides income from agricultural lands, the wife's claim to maintenance was laid at the rate of half the earnings of the husband inclusive of the maintenance of the minor girl who had to be educated and brought up according to the husband's status in life.

5. The suit for maintenance was actually filed on April 27, 1954 by the wife claiming besides the value of the ornaments a decree for arrears of maintenance amounting to Rs. 21,600/- and future maintenance at the rate of Rs. 600/- per month. The claim made in the daughter's suit filed on April 5, 1955 was at the rate of Rs. 150/- per month.

6. The trial court decreed the two suits awarding maintenance to the wife at Rs. 100/- per month as from the date of the decree i.e. 1st June, 1957 and at the rate of Rs. 25/- per month for the daughter negating the claim to the value of the ornaments.

7. The High Court allowed the claim of the wife to a monthly maintenance of Rs. 250/- from the date of the institution of the suit subject to a limit i.e. that the husband would not be liable at any time to pay more than 25% of the total income as accepted by the income-tax authorities by way of maintenance. With regard to the daughter, the High Court fixed the amount of maintenance at Rs. 150/- per month subject to a similar limit as in the case of the wife, the quantum being directed not to exceed 15% of the average monthly income of the father.

8. The relevant facts as they emerge from the oral and documentary evidence adduced by the parties so far as the same have a bearing on the factors mentioned in sub-cl. (a) to (d) of Section 23 (2) besides the above may be stated briefly. We have already noted that the father of the wife was a fairly well-to-do person at the time when the marriage had taken place. There was however a serious reversal of his fortunes after the partition of the country. According to him no talk of any dowry had taken place between the parties before the marriage of his daughter. The appellant who had qualified himself in medicine had gone to Gujranwala from Lucknow for the marriage. The appellant's mother had seen the respondent several times before the nuptials. His daughter had accompanied the appellant to Lahore immediately after the marriage but had come back from there within 10 to 15 days.

9. The respondent's evidence was that except for very brief periods from October 1945 to March 1946 she had scarcely lived with her husband who was working in a medical college at Lucknow starting on a salary of Rs. 280/- per month. Her evidence was that she was not well received in her husband's family because her mother-in-law was disappointed with the dowry brought by her.

10. From the oral and documentary evidence it appears that the husband was never anxious to have the company of the wife and her attempt to make the married life a normal one by going to Lucknow three times did not have the desired effect. The husband used to write to her but stopped doing so some two months after the birth of her daughter in August, 1946. She had written a number of letters to her husband from 1946 to 1949 without receiving any reply. On the last occasion when she had gone to the husband at Lucknow the latter was absent from home for four days and she could not find out whether he was attending his college during that time. The husband had met her at Lucknow when she went there with her daughter but made himself scarce after the first day. The husband's evidence shows clearly that he was disillusioned about the wife immediately after the marriage inasmuch as he found the wife to be a girl of little education whereas he had been given to understand that she had taken a master's degree in arts. He had however tried to reconcile himself with his lot. His statement even in examination-in-chief does not show that he was at any time anxious to receive his wife or to keep her with him. He had kept up correspondence with her till August 1946 when he received a registered letter intimating him of the birth of his daughter. For five years thereafter i.e. from the time of the partition of the country, he had no news of his wife and child. In 1951 he received the lawyer's notice. At the time of his marriage he was a resident medical officer drawing a fixed salary of Rs. 280/- p.m. with free quarters. He became a lecturer in medicine in December 1945 on a salary of Rs. 280/- with prospects of increment up to Rs. 400. In 1953 he became a Reader in medicine on a scale of Rs. 500-30-800. His salary at the time of his giving evidence in court was Rs. 620/- plus 10 per cent by way of dearness allowance. He also had some private practice which came to no more than Rs. 25,000 to Rs. 30,000/- during the entire period from 1945 to 1957. His bank balance had never crossed the limit of Rs. 2,000/-. He had no other assets except a piece of land in Ambala given by way of compensation for lands owned in Pakistan. He had purchased a car for Rs. 10,000/- and his monthly expenses for the upkeep of it including the chauffeur's pay was Rs. 70/- p.m. He had no idea of the financial status of his father-in-law.

11. A few letters which passed between the husband and the wife and exhibited in this case show that from May 1945 to October 1945 the husband was writing quite affectionate letters to the wife. There were only two short letters written on the 3rd and 4th January 1946 written in an altogether different vein. The copy of the only letter of the wife which was exhibited in this case bearing date 25th August 1948 starts off with congratulations to the husband for having received a scholarship for going to England as reported in the Tribune. She complained that the husband had forgotten her although she still loved him as usual. She mentioned that the daughter was always asking after her father. She requested the husband to look them up before going abroad. She also sent her respects to her mother-in-law.

12. It will be noted that the documentary evidence noted above was of a period prior to the litigation. The wife complained in the plaint about the strained relations between herself and her mother-in-law on the ground of insufficiency of dowry, that though she had gone to the husband and tried to persuade him to do his duty by her it was of no avail, and that she was living upon the charity of her father. The husband pleaded in defence that the wife had gone to him in October 1945 of her own accord without any traditional invitation and had stayed with him for some time off and on up to March, 1946 adding :

"During this period the defendant (himself) was constantly under threat to his life being in danger and used to take all sorts of precautions and it became further clear on account of the incompatibility of temperament that the defendant would not be able to pull on with the plaintiff."

13. Taking all the circumstances into consideration and specially the status of the father of the respondent that he was giving her a sum of Rs. 250/- p.m. by way of pocket expenses, the Civil Judge Lucknow fixed the wife's maintenance at Rs. 100/- per month and that of the daughter at Rs. 25/- p.m. The High Court held that it was the husband who was guilty of desertion and the wife was entitled to all the amenities and comforts which would have been hers had they lived together. The High Court also found that the total income in the year 1953-54 was Rs. 10,099/- and that in 1957 he was receiving a salary of Rs. 682/- per month and that his private practice which was of the order of Rs. 250/- p.m. in 1953-54 could be reasonably expected to have gone up much higher in 1957. Accordingly it fixed up a monthly allowance to the respondent at Rs. 250/- for maintenance subject to a limit of 25% p.m. of the total income as accepted by the Income-tax authorities.

14. Before us counsel for the appellant contended that the courts below had ignored the fact that on the death of the wife's father in 1960 she had inherited half the properties left by him and that even during his lifetime she was in receipt of Rs. 250/- p.m. which should have been taken into consideration under cl. (d) of sub-s. (2) of Section 23. We cannot accept this contention. A sum of Rs. 250/- p.m. even if given to the respondent regularly was not her income but was only a bounty from her father which she might or might not continue to get. It is hardly believable that the father who according to his own evidence was getting no more than Rs. 200/- p.m. out of the partnership business could afford to give Rs. 250/- p.m. to his daughter. It would appear this statement was false and only made with a view to strengthening a claim for the recovery of the amount from the husband. If it were true that the wife had inherited any property from her father there certainly was ample opportunity for the husband to have affirmed an affidavit to that effect during the last ten years. Such affidavit could have been used even before the High Court of Allahabad which heard the appeal in 1965.

15. With regard to sub-cl. (c) the evidence makes it quite clear that it was the husband who did not want the wife to live with him. The husband never seemed to have cared for the daughter born to him. The fact that a registered letter was sent to him after the birth of the daughter shows that there was complete estrangement between the parties even before that day. Neither in the letters written to her nor in the evidence adduced by the husband is any reason disclosed as to why he took a dislike to the wife unless it be a fact that he was disappointed in his wife and cherished a feeling that she was not possessed of culture and education of the expected standard. There does not appear to be any substance in the wife's allegation that indifference of her husband stemmed from disappointment in the dowry brought by her.

16. Counsel for the appellant also relied on sub-cl. (e) to sub-s. (2) on the ground that he had to maintain his aged mother. Unfortunately however the husband had laid no ground to such a claim in his testimony before the court. He was not the only son of his mother and it appears from the evidence given by him that his family owned some lands which were being looked after by the mother. In the absence of any express statement by the husband himself in his examination no reliance can be placed on the claim made on his behalf.

17. Reference was made on behalf of the appellant to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Mt. Ekradeshwari v. Homeshwar, AIR 1929 PC 128 where the Board had to deal with the case of a widow of a deceased in the junior line of the well-known

Darbhanga family in Bihar. The trial court had found in that case that the gross income of the estate was Rupees 1,50,000 per annum, but the net income was only Rs. 33,000 per annum after payment of the interest on the heavy encumbrances on the estate in respect of which litigation was pending between the estate and the Maharaja of Darbhanga. In rejecting the claim of the widow to an annual maintenance of Rs. 18,000/- and upholding the concurrent findings of the courts in India that the maintenance allowance should be fixed at Rs. 4,200/- per annum the Board approved of the observations of the subordinate Judge to the effect that the said sum would enable the lady "to live as far as may be consistently with the position of a widow in something like the same degree of comfort and with the same reasonable luxury of life as she had in her husband's lifetime". According to the Board maintenance depended,— "upon a gathering together of all the facts of the situation, the amount of free estate, the past life of the married parties and the families, a survey of the conditions and necessities and rights of the members, on a reasonable view of change of circumstances possibly required in the future, regard being, of course, had to the scale and mode of living, and to the age, habits, wants and class of life of the parties." With respect we are in entire agreement with the above dictum and in our view sub-s. (2) of Section 23 makes no departure from the principles enunciated by the Board, except perhaps to a limited extent envisaged in sub-cl. (d) and (e) of the said sub-section.

18. It was argued before us that inasmuch as the Board allowed as quantum of maintenance 1/8th of the net income of the estate we should adopt the same rate. In our view the Board laid down no principle related to the proportion of the free income allowable by way of maintenance from the estate. It is to be borne in mind that the maintenance claim was by a widow of a Brahmin family although highly placed in life. Here we have the case of a wife who was neglected by her husband not in affluent circumstances but certainly with means to support a wife on a reasonable scale of comfort.

19. It was further argued before us that the High Court went wrong in allowing maintenance at 25% of the income of the appellant as found by the Income-tax Department in assessment proceedings under the Income-tax Act. It was contended that not only should a deduction be made of income-tax but also of house rent, electricity charges, the expenses for maintaining a car and the contribution out of salary to the provident fund of the appellant. In our view some of these deductions are not allowable for the purpose of assessment of "free income" as envisaged by the Judicial Committee. Income-tax would certainly be deductible and so would contributions to the provident fund which have to be made compulsorily. No deduction is permissible for payment of house rent or electricity charges. The expenses for maintaining the car for the purpose of appellant's practice as a physician would be deductible only so far as allowed by the income-tax authorities i.e. in case the authorities found that it was necessary for the appellant to maintain a car.

20. The question as to the date from which maintenance would be claimable was also mooted before the Judicial Committee in the above case. The High Court had turned down the widow's claim to arrears of maintenance. Examining the several decisions cited before it the Board took the view that the widow was entitled to maintenance not from the date of the decree as found by the courts below nor from the date of the suit in April 1922 but from 1st of January 1922 in view of the fact that it was towards the end of the year 1921 when the widow had made up her mind to stay on at her father's place. In this case, as already noted, the claim to maintenance was first laid by a lawyer's notice of 1951 but the suit was filed in 1954. The trial court decreed maintenance from the date of the decree in 1957 but the High Court thought fit to allow maintenance from the date of the institution of the suit. No exception can be taken to the fixing of the date of institution of the suit as the terminus a quo for the maintenance claimed by the respondent.

21. A sum of Rs. 250/- per month for the maintenance of the wife of a person occupying the position of the appellant cannot be said to err on the liberal side. The High Court in our opinion very rightly fixed that sum making it subject to the limit of 25 per cent of the income as found by the Income-tax authorities. We have no reason to take any different view. Subject to our observation as to the determination of the income of the appellant the appeal against the wife is dismissed with costs.

22. As regards the appeal in the case of the daughter, the High Court fixed the amount of monthly maintenance at Rs. 150/- till such time as she marries but so as not to exceed 15% on the average monthly income of the father. No ground was shown as to why we should make a variation in the amount fixed in her case. We uphold the finding of the High Court in this respect. There will be one set of hearing fee.

Appeals dismissed.

(V 58 C 59)

(From: Delhi)

K. S. HEGDE AND

A. N. GROVER, JJ.

Ch. Surat Singh (dead) and others, Appellants v. Manohar Lal and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeals Nos. 610 and 611 of 1966, D/- 25-8-1970.

Civil P. C. (1908), Order 41, R. 20 — Effect of non-joinder — Appeal to Supreme Court — Failure to implead necessary party — Effect.

Where the son of the plaintiff with other persons was brought on record on the death of plaintiff during pendency of appeal before the High Court and the fact that he was represented by a Counsel was clearly shown in the certified copy of order of the High Court but he was not impleaded as a party in appeal before Supreme Court, the fact that he was so impleaded admittedly being within knowledge of appellants, and the appellants failed to show any good ground for not impleading him, the appeal was liable to be dismissed for want of necessary party to the appeal. An application filed on the date of decision to implead him as party-respondent, held being highly belated could not be entertained. (Paras 3, 5, 6)

HEGDE, J.:— In these appeals a preliminary objection has been taken to the effect that these appeals are not maintainable as one. Lt. Col. G. S. Yadav one of the parties to these cases at an earlier stage had not been impleaded. After hearing the counsel for the parties we accept this preliminary objection and dismiss these appeals as having been not properly instituted. We shall now proceed to give our reasons in support of that conclusion.

2. We shall first take up Civil Appeal No. 610 of 1966. This appeal arises from a suit instituted by one Surat Singh and others. In that suit Surat Singh was the first plaintiff. The plaintiffs therein claimed a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with their possession of the suit premises. That suit was substantially dismissed in the trial Court. As against that decision the plaintiffs went up in appeal to the Senior Sub-Judge, Delhi. In the appellate Court the plaintiffs prayed for an amendment of the plaint. They sought to include therein a prayer seeking a mandatory injunction requiring the defendants to vacate the building. The learned appellate Judge allowed that application and remanded the suit to the trial Court for a fresh trial.

3. As against that decision defendants-respondents went up in appeal to the High Court. During the pendency of the appeal in the High Court Surat Singh died and his legal representatives including Lt. Col. Yadav, his son were brought on record. In the High Court Lt. Col. Yadav was represented by a counsel. The High Court allowed that appeal and dismissed the suit. Civil Appeal No. 610 of 1966 was brought against that decision of the High Court. In this appeal Lt. Col. Yadav has not been made a party. The only explanation offered for not making him a party is that the judgment of the High Court did not show clearly that Lt. Col. Yadav was a party to the appeal. The fact that he was impleaded as party in the appeal was undoubtedly within the knowledge of the appellants. That fact is not denied. Further the certified copy of the order of the High Court, produced along with the appeal memo, clearly shows that Lt. Col. Yadav was represented by a counsel. The appellants have not shown any good ground for not impleading Lt. Col. Yadav as a party in the appeal. He is a necessary party to the appeal. Today an application has been filed for impleading him as a party-respondent in the appeal. It is a highly belated application. On their own showing it is clear that the appellant did not act with due diligence. We do not think that we should entertain that application. In the result Civil Appeal No. 610 of 1966 is dismissed for the reasons mentioned above.

4. Now, coming to Civil Appeal No. 611 of 1966, this appeal arises from a suit filed by the respondent No. 1 in this appeal. In the suit he prayed for a permanent injunction restraining Surat Singh and others from interfering with his possession of the suit premises. His case was that the suit premises had been leased to him and that he had paid a substantial sum as a construction loan. The trial Court accepted his plea and granted a decree in his favour. As against that Surat Singh and others went up in appeal. During the pendency of the appeal Surat Singh died. Some of the legal representatives of Surat Singh applied for being impleaded in the appeal as appellants. To that an objection was taken by respondent No. 1 herein to the effect that the estate of Surat Singh will not be fully represented unless Lt. Col. Yadav is also made a party. The contention of the opposite party was that Lt. Col. Yadav had no right in the suit premises as the same had been bequeathed by Surat Singh to some of his sons. The appellate Court framed an issue as to whether Lt. Col. Yadav was a necessary party to the appeal.

5. We were told that after some evidence was led on that issue some of the appellants herein made an application to implead Lt. Col. Yadav at the same time reserving their right to dispute Lt. Col. Yadav's right to the suit premises. That application was accepted by the first appellate Court and Lt. Col. Yadav was impleaded as a party-respondent in that appeal. Ultimately the appeal failed and it was dismissed. As against that decision the appellants herein went up in second appeal to the High Court. In that appeal they did not implead Lt. Col. Yadav. No objection appears to have been taken by the respondents in the High Court as regards his non-impleading. The High Court dismissed that appeal on merits. Civil Appeal No. 611 of 1966 has been brought against that decision of the High Court. In this Court also Lt. Col. Yadav has not been impleaded. The only reason given for not impleading him is that the decree prepared by the High Court did not show Lt. Col. Yadav as one of the parties to the appeal. This plea has no substance. The appellants knew that Lt. Col. Yadav had been impleaded as party in the first appeal. They cannot take advantage of their own omission in the High Court. It is clear that the appellants have been callous in conducting the afore-mentioned cases.

6. This day an application has been made seeking to implead Lt. Col. Yadav as a respondent in this appeal. It is a highly belated application. We see no reason to allow the same. The contention that Lt. Col. Yadav has no interest in the suit premises cannot be gone into in his absence or in these proceedings. In the result Civil Appeal No. 611 of 1966 also fails and the same is dismissed. Parties to bear their own costs in both the appeals.

Appeals dismissed.

M/s. T. R. Bhasin and J. C. Talwar, Advocates, for Appellant; Mr. H. L. Sibal, Advocate-General for the State of Punjab, (M/s. P. C. Bhartari and S. S. Khanduja, Advocates, and M/s. J. B. Dadachanji and Co., Advocates, with him), for Respondent No. 1.

GROVER, J.: This is an appeal from a judgment of the Punjab & Haryana High Court dismissing a petition filed by the appellant challenging the election of respondent No. 1 Bhagwandas to the Haryana Legislative Assembly from the Ambala Cantonment constituency.

2. The last date for filing the nomination papers was April 17, 1968 in the mid-term election which was held from the aforesaid constituency. The scrutiny of nomination papers took place on April 18, 1968. The polling took place on May 14, 1968 and the result was declared on the following day. Respondent No. 1 who belonged to the Jan Sangh Party got 13,009 votes whereas the appellant, who belonged to the Congress Party, polled 11,606 votes. There were certain other candidates also but it is unnecessary to make any mention about them or about the number of votes obtained by them.

3. The election of respondent No. 1 was challenged mainly on grounds of corrupt practices of bribery, undue influence, treating of voters, free conveyance of voters to and from the polling station, publication of posters making a religious appeal to the electorate by respondent No. 1 and the filing of a false return of election expenses by him. These allegations were denied by respondent No. 1. A number of issues were framed and a good deal of evidence was led by both sides.

4. We shall deal only with the determination of the questions which have been agitated before us. The first matter which has been argued before us arises out of issue No. 1 (i). It related to the commission of the corrupt practice of bribery by respondent No. 1, approaching Sant Singh Sethi on May 8, 1968 with a view to getting his support and later paying Rs. 501/- on May 12, 1968 to Punjabi Gurdwara as detailed in para 6 of the petition. It was alleged, inter alia, that after Sant Singh Sethi had been approached for securing the support of Sikh voters and after payment of Rs. 501/- had been made on May 12, 1968 Akhand Path was held in the Gurudwara. The Bhog of the Akhand Path took place on May 12, 1968 in the presence of respondent No. 1. It was announced in the congregation by Kuldip Singh, a member of the Gurudwara Executive Committee, that the Akhand Path had been performed for the purpose of wishing success to respondent No. 1 and securing the support of Sikh voters for his election which he was contesting from the Ambala Cantonment constituency. The following portion from the petition may be reproduced in original:

"It was also announced there that he had donated a sum of Rs. 501/- for the building funds and for this Akhand Path. The appeal was made to the congregation to see that the respondent No. 1 was successful in the election. The appeal was also made to the congregation to cast their votes in favour of the respondent No. 1 and to ask their friends and relatives to vote for the respondent No. 1. After this announcement, Ardas was recited and there also mention was made in the congregation regarding the donation of Rs. 501/- for the Gurudwara building and for the Akhand Path and other prayers were made for the success of respondent No. 1. It was further said in the Ardas that Guru Maharaj may persuade the sikh voters to vote for the respondent No. 1."

5. In his written statement respondent No. 1 denied having made any donation of Rs. 501/- to the Gurudwara or of approaching Sant Singh Sethi for support of Sikh voters as alleged. All that was admitted was that the Akhand Path was held at the instance of respondent No. 1 in the normal way the Bhog of which took place on May 12, 1968. It was denied that Kuldip Singh made any announcement of the nature alleged or that it had been made with the consent or at the request of respondent No. 1.

6. Sant Singh Sethi appeared as P. W. 61. According to him respondent No. 1 had come to him on May 8, 1968 and had requested him to help him in the election. Respondent No. 1 was advised by him to have an Akhand Path performed in the Gurdwara and contribute something for its construction. Respondent No. 1 having consented Sethi asked Giani Jaswant Singh to get Akhand Path performed. At the time of Bhog on the morning of May 12, 1968 the said Jaswant Singh, after the Ardas had been recited, announced that a donation of Rs. 501/- had been made by respondent No. 1. Jaswant Singh further said that just as Guru Teg Bahadur had assisted Makhan Shah in bringing his sinking ship ashore respondent No. 1 might be similarly helped. Kuldip Singh also addressed the audience in the same strain. Jaswant Singh who appeared as P. W. 1 was the Head Granthi of Punjabi Gurdwara. According to his deposition a sum of Rs. 501/- was paid by respondent No. 1 for the construction of the Gurdwara building at the time of the Akhand Path which was performed at his instance in the Gurdwara. He admitted that at the time of Ardas he invoked divine assistance in favour of respondent No. 1 whose plight was likened to the sinking ship of Makhan Shah which, as a result of the blessings of Guru Teg Bahadur, got safely landed on the coast. He denied that he had asked the persons at the congregation to vote for respondent No. 1.

7. The next witness was Captain Mehar Singh P. W. 2. All that he stated was that he had visited the Gurdwara on May 12, 1968 where Akhand Path had been performed at the instance of respondent No. 1. At the time of Bhog many persons were present including the office-bearers. Ardas was performed by Giani Jaswant Singh who mentioned that a sum of Rs. 501/- had been donated by respondent No. 1 and good wishes were expressed on his behalf. Jaswant Singh had also said that just as the Guru had wished for the success of Makhan Shah similarly hope was expressed for the success of respondent No. 1 in the election. Tara Chand P. W. 4 the cashier of the Gurdwara produced the relevant documents relating to the payment of Rs. 501/-. The learned judge was of the view that on the evidence led by the parties the payment of Rs. 501/- on May 12, 1968 to the Gurdwara by respondent No. 1 had been proved. He saw no reason to disbelieve the evidence of Giani Jaswant Singh P. W. 1 nor did he express any positive opinion about P. W. 2 Captain Mehar Singh. As regards Sant Singh Sethi P. W. 61, the trend of the decision of the learned judge was against his reliability. It was also observed that he had been a supporter of the appellant and had issued a poster Exh. P. W. 29/1 containing an appeal to the Sikh community to vote for the appellant in the General Election of 1961 which had also been contested by him. The evidence led by respondent No. 1 in support of his version that he had made a donation of Rs. 51/- only was not accepted. After referring to certain decisions of this court the learned judge held that notwithstanding the donation of Rs. 501/- no bargain had been proved between respondent No. 1 and the Sikh voters and therefore no corrupt practice had been established.

8. A great deal of stress has been laid before us on the evidence of Giani Jaswant Singh P. W. 1 which, as stated before, had been believed by the learned judge. It has been pointed out that a sum of Rs. 501/- had been paid in the presence of the congregation for the construction of the Gurdwara after the Ardas had been recited when the Bhog of Akhand Path took place on the morning of May 12, 1968. Emphasis has been laid on the following part of the statement of Jaswant Singh:

"The theme of the Kirtan was that just as the Guru had helped Makhan Shah the same assistance may be rendered by the Panth to Bhagwan Dass Sehgal and prayers were offered for his success."

It has been argued on behalf of the appellant that while it may be meritorious to make a donation for charitable purposes but if that is made at the time or on the eve of the election it is open to the charge that its real object was to induce the electorate to vote in favour of the particular candidate (as observed in S. Khader Sheriff v. Munnuswami Gounder, (1955) 2 SCR 469 = (AIR 1955 SC 775). It has also been pointed out that the word "Panth" meant, in the context, the Sikh community; thus an appeal had been made to the persons present in the congregation, who were mainly Sikh voters, to vote for respondent No. 1.

9. In our judgment the effect of the simile of the help given by the Guru to Makhan Shah must be ruled out of consideration. It found no mention in the pleadings in which the case was founded primarily on a bargain having been effected between respondent No. 1 and the Sikh voters, the payment of Rs. 501/- having been made as a part of such bargain. The evidence of Jaswant Singh was quite unequivocal on the point that he never asked the persons present at the congregation to vote for respondent No. 1 after he had announced the donation of Rs. 501/- having been made by him for the construction of the Gurdwara building. In view of the pleading the appellant is not entitled to invoke any principle other than the one contained in Ghasi Ram v. Dal Singh, (1968) 3 SCR 102 = (AIR 1968 SC 1191) that the gist of the corrupt practice of bribery lay in attempting to do something for those opposed to the candidate with a view to changing their votes and as a bargain for votes. This principle was further elaborated in Om Prabha Jain v. Abnash Chand, (1968) 3 SCR 111 at p. 116 = (AIR 1968 SC 1083 at p. 1086) where it was observed with reference to the previous case:

"It has been pointed out that a Minister in the discharge of his duties may be required to do some acts of administration including the granting of money for the uplift of certain communities and this action of the Minister is not to be construed against him unless it can be established that there was a bargain with the voters for getting assistance at the election."

We find no error in the view expressed by the learned judge that it had not been proved by satisfactory evidence that respondent No. 1 had made the donation by way of a bargain for procuring Sikh votes.

10. The next point which has been pressed on behalf of the appellant arises out of issue No. 1 (vii) which was based on the allegation that the corrupt practice of bribery had been committed by payment of Rs. 300/- to Captain Bhagat Singh and Barkat Singh on May 12, 1968 as alleged in para 6 (j) of the petition. The allegation in the aforesaid para related to Topkhana Bazar Gurdwara and was similar to what had been alleged in respect of the Gurdwara on the Idgah Road concerning the donation of Rs. 501/-. It was stated, inter alia, that the respondent No. 1 with the object of inducing Sikh voters who visited the Topkhana Gurdwara to vote for him paid a sum of Rs. 300/- on the morning of May 12, 1968 to Captain Bhagat Singh and Barkat Singh who were the office-bearers of the Committee managing that Gurdwara. The payment had been shown in the books of the Gurdwara and had been utilised for its benefit. It was claimed that on the receipt of the amount of Rs. 300/- an appeal was actually made on May 13, 1968 to the congregation in the Gurdwara to vote for respondent No. 1. Two witnesses were examined in support of the allegation made in para 6 (j) of the petition. Kulwant Singh P. W. 29 who runs a factory for making scientific instruments stated that he used to go to the aforesaid Gurdwara in which katha was held on May 13, 1968. Respondent No. 1 came there and asked for votes. Captain Bhagat Singh, Secretary of the Managing Committee, made a speech in his favour. It was announced by Captain Bhagat Singh that respondent No. 1 had given a donation of Rs. 300/- for the Gurdwara and that the congregation should assist him in the election. This witness has not been believed by the learned judge. Although in the first instance Kulwant Singh denied that he had signed the poster Exh. P. W. 29/1 which contained an appeal to vote in favour of the appellant in the General Election of 1967 but he admitted, though in a half-hearted manner, that he was a signatory to the aforesaid poster. Bakshi Barkat Singh P. W. 64 was the Vice President of the Gurdwara and according to him respondent No. 1 came to him on May 12, 1968 and asked for his help in the election. Simultaneously the latter made a donation of Rs. 300/- for the Gurdwara fund for purchase of fans. It was arranged that some persons should be invited on the following day in the morning to the Gurdwara where respondent No. 1 himself addressed the gathering. It was announced that a donation of Rs. 300/- had been made by him. Captain Bhagat Singh and Bakshi Barkat Singh both laid emphasis on the services which had been rendered to the Gurdwara by respondent No. 1. This witness was also not believed by the learned judge as he was clearly interested in the appellant. There were other infirmities in his statement which were noticed and the learned judge considered that his statement did not inspire confidence. We have not been shown anything basically or inherently wrong in the appraisal of evidence by the learned judge relating to the allegation made in para 6 (j) of the petition. We would, therefore, affirm the conclusion arrived at by the High Court.

11. The next contention of the learned counsel for the appellant relates to issue No. 1 (v) which was that the returned candidate had treated the voters by serving liquor to them as detailed in para 6 of the application dated September 10, 1968 containing the additional particulars. The better particulars which were furnished were, however, incorporated in the amended petition filed on September 20, 1968. In clause (h) of para 6 of the amended petition it was stated that respondent No. 1 had offered gratification by providing liquor on an extensive scale to the voters for the purpose of securing their votes. Seven localities were mentioned where liquor was alleged to have been distributed between May 11 and 13, 1968 to voters whose names were given. Some of these persons were produced as witnesses.

12. Pursuant to a notification Exht. R. W. 2/1 the liquor vend shops in the State of Haryana from May 11 to 14, 1968 were closed presumably to stop the sale of liquor during the days of polling. The learned judge considered the evidence of Man Singh P. W. 17, Sukh Ram P. W. 18, Rup Chand

P. W. 19, Shamlal P. W. 20, Faqir Chand P. W. 21, Inder Sain Chadha P. W. 23, Kanahya Ram P. W. 24, Ghisa Ram P. W. 25, Babu Lal P. W. 26 Ram Rakha P. W. 27, Paras Ram P. W. 28 and Ram Krishan P. W. 30. The evidence produced by respondent No. 1 was also discussed. The learned judge observed that the oral evidence of witnesses was hardly of much assistance in proving an allegation of the nature under consideration. According to him the witnesses for the appellant who had given evidence about the corrupt practice of bribery for being treated to liquor could not be relied upon implicitly particularly when persons had been produced from the localities by respondent No. 1 to testify that no liquor was distributed. The following portion of the judgment deserves to be reproduced in this connection:

"The evidence in this case gives rise to a suspicion that the first respondent had distributed liquor but the failure of the petitioner to connect the liquor obtained from Faqir Chand's vend with the bottles actually distributed on 11th, 12th and 13th May, 1968, is a circumstance which goes against the allegation. The liquor vends in Haryana were closed from 11th to 14th May, 1968 and the positive evidence led on behalf of the petitioner shows, and it is indeed also stated in the petition itself, that liquor was widely distributed in the specified localities between 11th and 13th May, 1968. There is no evidence that the liquor purchased from Faqir Chand's vend had been stored anywhere for 2/3 days prior to its distribution."

The learned judge further observed that although on the material dates the liquor vends were closed yet the witnesses of the appellant had asserted that liquor was being widely distributed by respondent No. 1 during those dates. There was no evidence to show how such large quantities of liquor were procured and where they were stored prior to distribution.

13. Counsel for the appellant has pointed out that apart from Faqir Chand certain other liquor contractors had also been sought to be produced in the list of witnesses which was supplied on behalf of the appellant on October 3, 1968. The name of Ram

Murti, Excise Contractor, Lalru had been included in the list for being summoned together with his books containing entries relating to the supply of liquor to respondent No. 1 from May 4, 1968 to May 14, 1968. There was yet a third liquor contractor of the name of Om Prakash whose name was included in the list of witnesses to be summoned. The learned judge made an order on October 8, 1968 directing the summoning of Faqir Chand liquor contractor of R. A. Bazar, Ambala Cantt. As regards Om Prakash it was observed that in para 6 (h) of the petition there was no allegation of any liquor having been supplied to respondent No. 1 from the liquor shop of Om Prakash at village Mohra. His production was disallowed. Although nothing was stated about summoning of Ram Murti in the order, summons of which a copy is to be found on the record appears to have been actually sent to him. On behalf of respondent No. 1 it has been submitted that this witness was given up. At any rate there is nothing to show that the appellant made any serious attempt to produce Ram Murti as a witness. We do not find any substance in the submission on behalf of the appellant that the evidence of Om Prakash and Ram Murti had been shut out without any justification. We are satisfied that sufficient grounds have not been made out for not accepting the conclusion of the learned judge that the appellant had failed to discharge the burden of proving the issue relating to treatment of voters by means of serving liquor as alleged in the election petition.

14. The only other point which remains for disposal relates to issue Nos. 6 (a) and (b). This issue involves the publication of a poster by the Secretary of the Punjabi Gurdwara, Ambala Cantonment and it was alleged that it had been published at the instance or with the consent of respondent No. 1. It was common ground that if the poster Exht. P. W. 4/4 was published either on behalf of or with the consent of respondent No. 1 it would amount to commission of a corrupt practice of undue influence within the meaning of S. 123 (2) of the Act. It is unnecessary to state its contents because, in our opinion, the learned judge was right in not accepting the evidence produced by the appellant relating to its publication at the instance or with the consent of respondent No. 1. The learned judge considered that the evidence produced by the appellant relating to the publication of the poster and its distribution was extremely unsatisfactory and he had no hesitation in rejecting it. We have not been shown any infirmity in the reasoning or conclusion of the learned judge with regard to the publication and distribution of this poster.

15. In the result the appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(V 58 C 61)

J. C. SHAH, K. S. HEGDE AND A. N. GROVER, JJ.

The Nagar Rice and Flour Mills and others, Appellants v. N. Teekappa Gowda & Bros. and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 2228 of 1969, D/- 27-2-1970.

(A) Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act (1958), S. 8 (3) (c) — Change of location of rice mill — Sanction for change obtained after shifting — Assuming previous sanction is required before moving of machinery, competitor has no locus standi to challenge grant of permission — (Constitution of India, Arts. 19 (1) (g), & 226).

Where the owners of an existing rice mill shifted its existing location and obtained the necessary permission for change of location from the Director of Food & Civil Supplies, even if it be assumed that the previous sanction has to be obtained from the authorities before the machinery is moved from its existing site, the competitor in the business (owner of another rice mill) can have no grievance against the grant of permission permitting the installation on a new site. The right to carry on business being a fundamental right under Art. 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution, its exercise is subject only to the restrictions imposed by law in the interests of the general public under Art. 19 (6) (i).

(Para 9)

Section 8 (3) (c) providing for previous permission of Central Government to change location of Rice mill is merely regulatory; if it is not complied with, the owners may probably be exposed to a penalty, but a competitor in the business cannot seek to prevent the owners from exercising their right to carry on business, because of the default. W. P. No. 496 of 1969, D/- 26-9-1969 (Mys), Reversed.

(Para 10)

(B) Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act (1958), Ss. 5 (4), 8 (3) (c)—Change of location of existing rice mill — S. 5 (4) has no application in granting permission under S. 8 (3) (c).

The considerations which are prescribed by sub-s. (4) of Section 5 only apply to the grant of a permit in respect of a new rice mill or a defunct rice mill. They have no application in considering the shifting of the location of an existing rice mill. In respect of a new or defunct rice mill a permit and a licence are both required; in respect of an existing rice mill only a licence is required. The conditions prescribed by sub-section (4) of Section 5 only apply to the grant of a permit and not to a licence. By Section 8 (3) (c) it is made one of the conditions of the licence that the location of the rice mill shall not be shifted without the previous permission of the Central Government. It is true that the appropriate authority clothed with the power must consider the expediency of permitting a change of location. But there is no statutory obligation imposed upon him to take into consideration the matters prescribed by Sub-S. (4) of S. 5 in granting the permission to change the location.

The appellants had been carrying on business in milling rice for more than 30 years and the mill, by reason of the proposal to submerge the site in the Sharavathi Hydro-Electric Project, had to be shifted from its location. The State allotted another piece of land to the appellants and did not acquire their machinery and permitted erection of their rice mill building on the new location. This was done with a view to cause minimum hardship to the appellants arising in consequence of the proposed construction of the dam resulting in submergence of their land. The State also granted permission to the appellants to change the location under the Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act, 1958.

Held that the permission could not be said to be granted without consideration of the relevant circumstances. W. P. No. 496 of 1969, D/- 26-9-1969 (Mys) Reversed.

(Para 12)

Mr. S. V. Gupte, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. S. S. Javali, H. N. Narayan and B. Datta, Advocates, with him); for Appellants; Mr. H. R. Gokhale, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. C. R. Somasekharan, H. G. Balakrishna and P. C. Bhartari, Advocates, and M/s. J. E. Dadachanji and Co. Advocates, with him); for Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHAH, J.: This appeal is filed with special leave against the judgment of the High Court of Mysore setting aside the order dated January 20, 1969, of the Director of Food & Civil Supplies of the State of Mysore under the Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act 21 of 1958.

2. The appellants established a rice mill many years ago in village Madugoppa, District Shimoga, in the former Indian State of Mysore and carried on milling operations. The respondents—N. Teekappa Godwa & Bros — established in 1933 a rice mill in village Kelandur at a distance of about 1 1/4 miles from the site of the appellant's mill. A notification under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 was issued in March 1966 for compulsory acquisition of the land and buildings on the site of the appellants' rice mill for use in the Sharavathi Hydro-Electric Project. In October 1967 an award acquiring the land and buildings was made. The award expressly recited that the appellants were entitled to remove the machinery of the rice mill.

3. The appellants in the meanwhile applied to the special Officer for Rehabilitation of the State of Mysore to allot them a suitable new site in which their rice mill may be located. The Special Tahsildar for Rehabilitation sanctioned that the rice mill building may be shifted to a site in Survey No. 233 of Mudugoppa granted to the appellants by the State of Mysore. By order dated January 20, 1960, the Director of Food & Civil Supplies passed an order sanctioning the change in the location of the appellants' rice mill from its original site to the new site "as per the provisions contained in Section 8 (3) (c) of the Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act, 1958", and rejected the objection raised by the respondents.

4. The respondents then moved a petition in the High Court of Mysore for a direction quashing the order dated January 20, 1969 passed by the Director of Food & Civil Supplies on the plea that the appellants' mill was moved to a place in the vicinity of their rice mill in the Kelandur village in contravention of Sections 5 and 8 of the Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act, 1958, and in consequence of the removal of the appellants' mill "their business was likely to be adversely affected".

5. The High Court held that permission under Section 8 (3) (c) was a condition precedent to the shifting of the location of the rice mill, and since the appellants did not obtain the previous permission to shift the mill, the order of the Director was liable to be "struck down as ultra vires". In the view of the Court by the shifting of the appellants' rice mill the respondents' business was directly affected and they had a right to challenge the legality of the order. The High Court upheld the claim of the respondents on the sole ground that the order of the Director was made in violation of the mandatory injunction of the Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act 21 of 1958 and it prejudicially affected the business of the respondents as rice-millers.

6. The Parliament enacted the Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act 21 of 1958 to regulate rice milling. By Section 3 (a) a "defunct rice-mill" is defined as meaning "a rice-mill in existence at the commencement of this Act but in which rice-milling operations have not been carried on for a period exceeding one year prior to such commencement". By Section 3 (b) "existing rice-mill" means "a rice mill carrying on rice milling operations at the commencement of this Act, and includes a rice-mill in existence at such commencement which is not carrying on rice-milling operations but in which rice-milling operations have been carried on at any time within a period of one year prior to such commencement". By Section 3 (e) "new rice-mill" means "a rice mill other than an existing rice mill or a defunct rice mill". By S. 3 (i) "rice mill" is defined as meaning "the plant and machinery with which and the premises, including the precincts thereof in which or in any part of which, rice-milling operation is carried on." By Section 5 provision is made for grant of permits in respect of new or defunct rice mills. By sub-section (1) of Section 5 it is provided that any person or authority may make an application to the Central Government for the grant of permit for the establishment of a new rice mill, and any owner of a defunct rice mill may make a like application for the grant of a permit for re-commencing rice-milling operation in such mill. By sub-section (3) if, on receipt of any such application for the grant of a permit, the Central Government is of opinion that it is necessary so to do for ensuring adequate supply of rice, it may subject to the provisions of sub-section (4) and sub-section (5) grant the permit specifying therein the period within which the mill is to be established. Sub-section (4) provides:

"Before granting any permit under sub-section (3), the Central Government shall cause a full and complete investigation to be made in the prescribed manner in respect of the application and shall have due regard to—

(a) the number of rice mills operating in the locality;

(b) the availability of paddy in the locality;

(c) the availability of power and water supply for the rice mill in respect of which a permit is applied for;

(d) whether the rice mill in respect of which a permit is applied for will be of the huller type, sheller type or combined sheller-huller type;

(e) Whether the functioning of the rice mill in respect of which a permit is applied for would cause substantial unemployment in the locality;

(f) such other particulars as may be prescribed."

By sub-section (6) a permit granted under Section 5 is effective for the period specified therein or for such extended period as the Central Government may think fit to allow in any case. Section 6 provides for grant of licences. Any owner of an existing rice mill or of a rice mill in respect of which a permit has been granted under Section 5 may make an application to the licensing officer for the grant of a licence for carrying on rice-milling operations in that rice mill. By sub-section (3) of Section 6 the licensing officer is obliged to grant the licence on payment of the fee and on deposit of such sum as may be prescribed as security for due performance of the conditions. By sub-section (4) a licence granted under Section 6 is valid for the period specified therein, and may be renewed from time to time for such period and on payment of such fees and on conditions as may be prescribed. Section 7 provides for revocation, suspension and amendment of licences. By Section 8 restrictions are placed on rice mills. Under sub-section (1) no person or authority shall, after the commencement of the Act, establish any new rice mill except under and in accordance with a permit granted under Section 5. By sub-section (2) no owner of a rice mill shall, after the commencement of the Act, carry on rice-milling operation except under and in accordance with a licence granted under Section 6. By sub-section (3) insofar as it is relevant it is provided:

"No owner of a rice mill,—

- (a) * * * *
- (b) * * * *

(c) shall, without the previous permission of the Central Government, change the location of the whole or any part of the rice mill in respect of which a licence has been granted under Section 6;

Section 13 provides for penalties for contravention or attempts to contravene or abetting the contravention of any of the provisions, inter alia, of Section 8. Power of the Central Government to issue a permit under Section 5 and under Section 8 (3) (c) to change the location of rice mill is delegated to the Director of Food & Civil Supplies.

7. The Director of Food & Civil Supplies sanctioned, in exercise of the power under Section 8 (3) (c) of the Act that the location of the rice mill of the appellants may be shifted. The High Court declared the order invalid on the ground that the previous sanction had not been obtained. The Court observed that "where an officer granting a licence or passing an administrative order exceeds his powers and makes an order in violation of the provision which clothes him with that power, his order is liable to be struck down", and since Section 8 (3) (c) contemplated grant of permission for change of location before the plant and the machinery were actually shifted to a new site, the Director of Food & Civil Supplies had no power to grant permission after the machinery and plant had been shifted.

8. The rice mills for the purpose of the Act were divided into three classes: defunct rice-mills, existing rice-mills and new rice-mills. Defunct rice-mills are those which had ceased functioning for a period exceeding one year prior to the commencement of the Act; existing rice mills are those which carry on rice milling operations at the commencement of the Act or had carried on rice milling operations within one year prior to the commencement of the Act; and new rice-mills are those which are other than existing rice mills or defunct rice mills. In respect of all rice mills a licence for carrying on rice milling operations under Section 6 must be obtained. In respect of a rice mill new or defunct a permit under Section 5 has first to be obtained. No permit is required by an existing rice mill. In granting the permit the authority has to take into consideration matters which are specified in sub-section (4) of Section 5. The licensing authority must on application issue a licence to an existing rice mill or a rice mill in respect of which a permit has been granted under Section 5. For change in the location of any rice mill in respect of which a licence has been granted under Section 6, the previous permission of the Central Government is necessary under Section 8 (3) (c).

9. The Parliament has by the Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act, 1958, prescribed limitations that an existing rice mill shall carry on business only after obtaining a licence and if the rice mill is to be shifted from its existing location, previous permission of the Central Government shall be obtained. Permission for shifting their rice mill was obtained by the appellants from the Director of Food & Civil Supplies. The appellants had not started rice milling operations before the sanction of the Director of Food & Civil Supplies was obtained. Even if it be assumed that the previous sanction has to be obtained from the authorities before the machinery is moved from its existing site, we fail to appreciate what grievance the respondents may raise against the grant of permission by the authority permitting the installation of machinery on a new site. The right to carry on business being a fundamental right under Art. 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution, its exercise is subject only to the restrictions imposed by law in the interests of the general public under Article 19 (6) (i).

10. Section 8 (3) (c) is merely regulatory: if it is not complied with, the appellants may probably be exposed to a penalty, but a competitor in the business cannot seek to prevent the appellants from exercising their right to carry on business, because of the default, nor can the rice-mill of the appellants be regarded as a new rice mill. Competition in the trade or business may be subject to such restrictions as are permissible and are imposed by the State by a law enacted in the interests of the general public under Article 19 (6), but a person cannot claim independently of such restriction that another person shall not carry on business or trade so as to affect his trade or business adversely. The appellants complied with the statutory requirements for carrying on rice milling operations in the building on the new site. Even assuming that no previous permission was obtained, the respondents would have no locus standi for challenging the grant of the permission, because no right vested in the respondents was infringed.

11. But Mr. Gokhale for the respondents contended that in granting the permission under Section 8 (3) (c) the authority was bound to take into account matters which govern the issue of a permit under Section 5 (4) of the Act. Counsel submitted that sub-section (3) (c) of Section 8 was enacted with a view to ensure adequate milling facilities and to prevent unfair competition and on that account it is provided that when the location of an existing rice mill has to be shifted, the authority had to take into consideration the number of rice mills operating in the locality; the availability of power and water supply for the rice mill in respect of which a permit is applied for; whether the functioning of the rice mill in respect of which a permit is applied for would cause substantial unemployment in the locality; and such other particulars as may be prescribed. According to counsel, since the Act was intended to regulate the carrying on of business of rice mills in the country, it was implicit in Sec. 8 (3) (c) that the authority sanctioning the change of location of a rice mill shall consider whether another person was by the shifting likely to be prejudiced thereby. This, counsel says, the Director did not consider, and on that account the order is liable to be set aside because the right of the respondents is infringed. This argument was not advanced before the High Court, and, in our judgment, has no substance. The considerations which are prescribed by sub-section (4) of Section 5 only apply to the grant of a permit in respect of a new rice mill or a defunct rice mill. They have no application in considering the shifting the location of an existing rice mill. In respect of a new or defunct rice mill a permit and a licence are both required: in respect of an existing rice mill only a licence is required. The conditions prescribed by sub-section (4) of Section 5 only apply to the grant of a permit and not to a licence. By Section 3 (3) (c) it is made one of the conditions of the licence that the location of the rice mill shall not be shifted without the previous permission of the Central Government. It is true that the appropriate authority clothed with the power must consider the expediency of permitting a change of location. But there is no statutory obligation imposed upon him to take into consideration the matters prescribed by sub-section (4) of Section 5 in granting the permission to change the location.

12. The appellants had been carrying on business in milling rice for more than 30 years and the mill by reason of the proposal to submerge the site in the Sharawathi Hydro-Electric Project had to be shifted from its location. The State allotted another piece of land to the appellants and did not acquire their machinery and permitted erection of their rice mill building on the new location. This was done with a view to cause minimum hardship to the appellants arising in consequence of the proposed construction of the dam resulting in submergence of their land. The State also granted permission to the appellants to change the location under the Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act, 1958. The permission cannot be said to be granted without consideration of the relevant circumstances.

13. The appeal is allowed and the petition filed by the respondent N. Teekappa Gowda & Bros. is ordered to be dismissed with costs throughout in favour of the appellants.

Appeal allowed.

(V 58 C 62)

(From : Delhi)*

J. C. SHAH, K. S. HEGDE AND A. N. GROVER, JJ.

Union of India (In both the Appeals) Appellant v. Allied International Products Ltd. and another, Respondents.

1. J. B. Dadachanji, 2. Peter Jefferys; 3. Industrial Development Bank of India; 4. U. P. State Industrial Corporation Ltd. and 5. Industrial Finance Corporation of India, Interveners.

Civil Appeals Nos. 1772 and 1773 of 1970, D/- 19-10-1970.

(A) Companies Act (1956), S. 73 (1), (2) and (5) — Intimation that application will be given further consideration — Application cannot be deemed refused until finally decided.

The expression "permission has not been granted" in sub-sections (1) and (2) was intended to mean "permission has been refused". It is not enacted in Section 73(1) that if the application is not granted within the time prescribed, it cannot be granted after the expiry of the prescribed period, even if the Exchange has intimated that it will give further consideration to the application. Sub-section (5) contains a clear implication to the contrary. The intendment of sub-sections (1), (2) & (5) is plain. If within four weeks from the date of the closing of the subscription list, the Stock Exchange sends no intimation either extending the time or notifying that the application though not at present granted will be given further consideration, the application is deemed to be refused. If the Stock Exchange so desires, it may intimate that the period is being extended to seven weeks. The Exchange may say nothing more within the extended period, in which case, on the expiry of the extended period the allotment becomes void. If, however, within the four weeks, or within the extended period of seven weeks, the Exchange intimates that even though the application for permission is not at present granted, the application will be given further consideration, the application is not deemed to be refused until it is finally decided. (Paras 11, 13, 14)

(B) Companies Act (1956), S. 73

(1) — More applications than one for quotation of shares may be made — One of several applications only granted — Still facility for ensuring quick conversion is available.

The expression "a recognised stock exchange" means "any recognised exchange". More applications than one for quotation of shares may therefore be made. Even if out of several Exchanges approached, one or more, but not all, have granted the application for "enlistment", the facility of ensuring quick conversion is still available. If after representing in the prospectus that an application has been made to a recognised exchange for "enlistment" or will be made within the prescribed period, the Company is unable to obtain permission for "enlistment" from any exchange, the allotment will be invalid. But if permission is secured for quotation of shares in an Exchange, the allotment will not be invalid because another exchange has not granted the permission.

SHAH, J.: On May 29, 1965, the Allied International Products Ltd. — hereinafter called 'the Company' issued a prospectus offering to the public for subscription 5,00,000 equity shares of Rs. 10/- each and 10,000 cumulative preference shares of Rs. 100/- each, and intimating that "applications are being made to Bombay, Calcutta and Delhi Stock Exchanges for permission to deal in for official quotations of the shares of the Company".

2. On June 3, 1965, the Company submitted applications to the Stock Exchanges at Bombay, Calcutta and Delhi (which are recognised Stock Exchanges within the meaning of Section 2 (39) of the Companies Act, 1956), for "enlisting" its shares. The subscription list of the Company was closed on June 21, 1965. On June 22, 1965, the Bombay Stock Exchange extended the time for consideration of the application till the expiry of seven weeks from the date of closing of the subscription list and requested the Company to furnish certain particulars to facilitate compliance with S. 73 of the Indian Companies Act, 1956. On August 6, 1965, the Exchange informed the Company that the application was receiving further consideration and requested that certain formalities be complied with. On September 13, 1965, the Exchange informed the Company that it had considered and approved the application for "enlisting" its shares.

3. On June 9, 1965, the Calcutta Stock Exchange called upon the Company to modify certain Articles of Association, and by letter dated July 12, 1965, asked for particulars in respect of specified matters. On July 27, 1965, the Calcutta Stock Exchange granted time for compliance till the end of the seventh week from the date of the closing of the subscription list. On November 5, 1965, the Calcutta Stock Exchange rejected the application of the Company for "enlisting the shares".

4. The Delhi Stock Exchange informed the Company on July 10, 1965, that in order to facilitate compliance with the provisions of Sec. 73 of the Companies Act, 1956, "the allotment of shares should be finalised as soon as possible in consultation with the Stock Exchange". By another letter dated August 9, 1965, the Exchange informed the Company that the matter of "enlistment" of shares was under consideration, and the Company will be intimated of the decision of the Exchange as soon as it is taken. The Delhi Stock Exchange by letter dated December 4, 1965, rejected the application of the Company for "enlistment" of its shares.

5. The Company challenged the orders passed by the Calcutta and Delhi Stock Exchanges rejecting the applications for "enlistment" in separate appeals under Section 22 of the Securities Contracts (Regulation) Act 42 of 1956. The Central Government dismissed the appeals. In the orders recording the dismissal it was recited that the Exchange did not grant the permission for the shares to be "enlisted" before the expiry of four weeks from the date of closing of the subscription list as required by S. 73 (1) of the Companies Act, 1956, and that the Exchange did not notify any extension of time for the grant of the permission within four weeks.

6. The Company then moved petitions in the High Court of Delhi for the issue of writs quashing the order passed by the Central Government in appeals under S. 22 of the Securities Contracts (Regulation) Act, and the orders of the Stock Exchanges rejecting the applications of the Company as "void, illegal and of no effect", and for orders directing the Stock Exchanges to "grant enlistment" of the shares of the Company, and further declaring Section 22 of the Securities Contracts (Regulation) Act 42 of 1956, and S. 73 of the Companies Act, 1956, ultra vires the Constitution of India.

7. Rangarajan, J. was of the opinion that grant of permission by the Bombay Stock Exchange was valid, and that allotment of shares did not become void, merely because one out of the three Exchanges alone gave the permission to enlist the Company's shares. The learned Judge quashed the order of the Central Government and directed that writs of mandamus do issue against the Calcutta and Delhi Stock Exchanges requiring them to "enlist" the shares of the Company.

8. Against the decision of Rangarajan, J., the Union of India appealed to a Division Bench of the High Court of Delhi. The two Exchanges acquiesced in the orders passed against them. The High Court confirmed the order of Rangarajan, J. With certificate granted by the High Court, the Union of India has appealed to this Court.

9. In support of these appeals, two principal contentions were urged on behalf of the Union:

(1) The permission granted by the Bombay Stock Exchange after the expiry of seven weeks violated the provisions of S. 73 (1) of the Companies Act, 1956 and was on that account invalid; and

(2) that grant of permission by one out of the three Exchanges did not protect the allotment of shares from being invalid under Section 73 (1) of the Companies Act, 1956. The two Stock Exchanges which had acquiesced in the judgment of Rangarajan, J., urged that the order granting a writ of mandamus requiring the two Exchanges to enlist the shares of the Company was without jurisdiction.

Rangarajan, J., it was said, could only direct that the applications be considered by the two Exchanges.

10. The relevant provisions of S. 73 of the Companies Act, 1956, in force at the date of the applications for permission for the shares to be dealt in the Exchange, provided:

"(1) Where a prospectus, whether issued generally or not, states that application has been made or will be made for permission for the shares or debentures offered thereby to be dealt in on a recognised stock exchange, any allotment made on an application in pursuance of the prospectus shall, whenever made, be void, if the permission has not been applied for before the tenth day after the first issue of the prospectus, or, if the permission has not been granted before the expiry of four weeks from the date of the closing of the subscription lists or such longer period not exceeding seven weeks as may, within the said four weeks be notified to the applicant for permission by or on behalf of the Stock Exchange.

(2) Where the permission has not been applied for as aforesaid, or has not been granted as aforesaid, the company shall forthwith repay without interest all moneys received from applicants in pursuance of the prospectus, and, if any such money is not repaid within eight days after the company becomes liable to repay it, the directors of the company shall be jointly and severally liable to repay that money with interest at the rate of five per cent per annum from the expiry of the eighth day:

Provided x x x x
 x x x x

(5) For the purpose of this section permission shall not be deemed to be refused, if it is intimated that the application for permission though not at present granted, will be given further consideration.

x x x x x

(7) No prospectus shall state that application has been made for permission for the shares or debentures offered thereby to be dealt in on any stock exchange, unless it is a recognised stock exchange."

11. By the Securities Contracts (Regulation) Act, machinery is set up for extending recognition to and for withdrawal of recognition to Stock Exchanges and for other incidental matters such as the making of rules and byelaws of the Exchanges and appeals against the orders of recognised Exchanges. By S. 22 of the Act it is provided:

"Where a recognised stock exchange acting in pursuance of any power given to it by its bye-laws, refuses to list the securities of any public company, the company shall be entitled to be furnished with the reason for such refusal, and may appeal against the decision of the recognised stock exchange to the Central Government, and the Central Government, may, after giving the stock exchange an opportunity of being heard, vary or set aside the decision of the recognised stock exchange and when it does so the stock exchange shall be bound to act in conformity with the orders of the Central Government."

Sub-section (5) of Section 73 of the Companies Act, 1956, is intended to be explanatory of sub-sections (1) & (2) of Section 73. Before that sub-section was amended by Act 31 of 1965 different phraseology was used in sub-sections (1) & (2) and in sub-section (5); the former used the expression "permission has not been granted", whereas sub-s. (5) used the expression "permission shall not be deemed to be refused". The expression "permission has not been granted" is ambiguous: it may mean "permission has been refused": it may also mean that the application for permission is under consideration and has not been disposed of. Sub-sections (1) & (2) of S. 73 were borrowed from S. 51 of the English Companies Act, 1948 with slight modifications. But the draftsman of the Indian Act, for reasons which it is difficult to appreciate, substituted the expression "permission has not been granted" for the expression "permission has been refused". In enacting sub-s. (5) of S. 73 the words used in sub-s. (5) of S. 51 of the English Act, viz. "permission shall not be deemed to be refused" were adopted. In our judgment, the expression "permission has not been granted" in sub-ss. (1) & (2) was intended in the context in which it occurs and in the light of the object of the enactment, to mean "permission has been refused".

12. A Stock Exchange fulfils a vital function in the economic development of a nation: its main function is to "liquify capital by enabling a person who has invested money in say a factory or a railway to convert it into cash by disposing of his share in the enterprise to some one else". Investment in joint stock companies is attractive to the public, because the value of the shares is announced day after day in the Stock Exchanges, and the shares quoted on the Exchanges are capable of almost immediate conversion into money. In modern days a company stands little chance of inducing the public to subscribe to its capital, unless its shares are quoted in an approved Stock Exchange. All public companies are anxious to obtain permission from reputed Exchanges for securing quotations of their shares and the management of a company is anxious to inform the investing public that the shares of the company will be quoted on the stock exchange. To prevent malpractices, the Parliament enacted legislation which aimed at securing control over the proper functioning of the Stock Exchanges, and also placed stringent restrictions upon the representations made by the companies in issuing prospectus inviting subscriptions. The Parliament enacted the Securities Contracts (Regulation) Act 42 of 1956, and simultaneously made provision in S. 73 of the Companies Act, 1956, for ensuring that representations made in the prospectus are carried out and fluidity of the investment by the holder of stock is ensured by procuring permission for quotation of shares in a recognized stock exchange.

13. Under sub-s. (1) of S. 73 an application for permission to secure quotation if not previously made, shall be made before the tenth day after the first issue of the prospectus, and if the application is not so made, the allotment is void. Again if the Exchange rejects the application within four weeks, or within seven weeks after extending the time, the allotment will be void, unless within that period the Exchange has informed the Company that further consideration will be given to the application. It is however not enacted in S. 73 (1) that if the application is not granted within the time prescribed, it cannot be granted after the expiry of the prescribed period, even if the Exchange has intimated that it will give further consideration to the application. Sub-section (5) contains a clear implication to the contrary. If the Exchange has intimated within the period prescribed by sub-s. (1) that the application will be given further consideration, it is not to be deemed that the application is refused. The Exchange is not obliged to give any intimation relating to the consideration of the application before the last day of the prescribed period. If no intimation is given till the last date of the prescribed period no inference of refusal follows. It would then be difficult to hold that if the Exchange intimates that it is considering the application or intends to give further consideration to the application that such an inference may follow. The amendment made by Act 31 of 1965 in sub-section (5) by the substitution of the expression "permission shall not be deemed to be refused" by the expression "it shall not be deemed that permission has not been granted" also gives a clue to the legislative intention that the inference of refusal will not be made if the Exchange has intimated to the applicant that further consideration will be given to the application.

14. We are unable to hold that permission for "enlistment" of shares can be given within the initial four weeks or if time be extended within seven weeks from the date of the closing of the subscription list, and if permission be not granted by the Exchange within those seven weeks, the allotment becomes void, even if the Stock Exchange intimates that it is giving further consideration to the application. The intentment of sub-sections (1), (2) & (5) is plain. If within four weeks from the date of the closing of the subscription list, the Stock Exchange sends no intimation either extending the time or notifying that the application though not at present granted will be given further consideration, the application is deemed to be refused. If the Stock Exchange so desires it may intimate that the period is being extended to seven weeks. The Exchange may say nothing more within the extended period, in which case, on the expiry of the extended period the allotment becomes void. If, however, within the four weeks, or within the extended period of seven weeks, the Exchange intimates that even though the application for permission is not at present granted, the application will be given further consideration, the application is not deemed to be refused until it is finally decided.

15. The application for allotment of shares and acceptance thereof constitute a contract between the Company and the applicant. Section 73 (1) of the Companies Act imposes a penalty whereby the allotment of shares becomes void on the happening of the contingency specified therein. The imposition of penalty depends upon the volition of the Exchange and when imposed operates to invalidate all contracts resulting from allotment of shares between the applicants for shares and the Company. Such a provision must be strictly construed. Unless the statute in clear terms so provides, when the Exchange intimates its desire to consider the application further, an inference that the Exchange has still rejected the application, cannot be made.

16. It is true that in the prospectus issued by the Company it was intimated that applications are being made to the Bombay, Calcutta and Delhi Stock Exchanges for permission for official quotations of the shares of the Company. It is not contended, and it cannot reasonably be contended, that only one application for permission to secure quotation of the shares in an approved Exchange may be made. The expression "a recognised stock exchange" means "any recognised exchange". More applications than one for quotation of shares may therefore be made. In the present case, three applications were submitted on June 3, 1965. Two of these applications were rejected and one was granted. We are unable to hold that unless all the applications were granted, the allotment of shares must, by virtue of sub-s. (1) of Section 73, be invalid. The object of Section 73 (1) is that the subscribers to the shares must have facility to approach an Exchange for having their holdings converted whenever they desire. Even if out of several Exchanges approached, one or more, but not all, have granted the application for "enlistment", the facility of ensuring quick conversion is still available. If after representing in the prospectus that an application has been made to a recognised exchange for "enlistment" or will be made within the prescribed period, the Company is unable to obtain permission for "enlistment" from any exchange, the allotment will be invalid. But sub-s. (1) is not intended to mean that it will be invalid, even if permission is obtained, but not from all the Exchanges to which applications have been made.

17. Section 73 (1) is enacted with the object that the subscribers will be ensured the facility of easy convertibility of their holdings when they have subscribed to the shares on the representation in the prospectus that an application for quotation of shares has been or will be made. The allotment of shares will be invalid only when permission for enlistment is not obtained. When permission from one or more of the Exchanges is obtained, it carries out the object of the Act. It will be a mechanical interpretation wholly divorced from the true object and intent of the Act to hold that even if permission is secured for quotation of shares in an Exchange, that the allotment will be invalid because another exchange has not granted the permission. That this is the true meaning of S. 73 (1) is clear from the fact that the penalty of avoidance of allotment of shares is attracted not only where the permission applied for has not been granted, but where no application has been made within the prescribed period. If applications are made to several Exchanges, some within the period of ten days after the first issue of the prospectus, and some beyond, or that one or more applications, but not all, is or are defective, and the error is not rectified, it would be unreasonable to hold that because some of the applications made beyond the tenth day after the first issue of the prospectus, or are defective, are liable to be rejected, the applications properly made before some of the Exchanges are also ineffective and the allotment made may be invalid.

18. Counsel for the Calcutta Stock Exchange urged that where a person is induced to subscribe for shares relying upon a representation that an application is made or intended to be made for quotation of the shares in an Exchange near his home-town, and it is found that the application is not made, or if made it is rejected by the Exchange, it would be a great hardship to the shareholder if he is bound by the allotment, even if the condition of securing quotation in the Exchange convenient to him is not carried out. But Section 73 (1) declares the entire allotment void: it does not take into consideration the right or convenience of individual shareholders. An enquiry whether a shareholder or a class of shareholders was or were induced to subscribe for shares on the representation is irrelevant in determining whether the allotment is rendered invalid for failure to secure compliance with a statutory condition. We need not consider whether the individual shareholder who finds that an Exchange convenient to him has not listed the shares furnishes a cause of action to him for avoiding the contract.

19. We are in the view we have taken not called upon to decide whether the provisions of S. 73 of the Companies Act, 1956, are ultra vires, nor do we consider it necessary to decide whether S. 22 of the Securities Contracts (Regulation) Act, 1956, is ultra vires.

20. It was urged on behalf of the Delhi and Calcutta Stock Exchanges that the High Court ought, in exercise of the power under O. 41 R. 33 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to have vacated the writ of mandamus issued requiring them to grant permission for quotation of the Company's shares. An Appellate Court may in appropriate case pass any decree and make any order appropriate to the ends of justice, even if a party has not appealed against an adverse decision. That power may be exercised by the Court notwithstanding that the appeal is as to part only of the decree and may be exercised in favour of all or any of the parties, even though they may not have filed any appeal or objection. But the jurisdiction is discretionary and the High Court has not exercised it apparently for good reasons. The orders passed against the Union and the two Exchanges were in substance distinct. Against the Union the order was made quashing its order in appeal against the orders of the Exchanges; and against the Exchanges the order was made directing inclusion of the shares in the list of quoted shares. The Exchanges acquiesced in the direction.

21. We need, however, not express any final opinion on this question. We are informed at the Bar that the Calcutta Stock Exchange has applied for certificate to the High Court of Delhi and that application is pending. We need not pre-judge the result of that application or the appeal, if any, which may be filed in this Court.

22. The appeals fail and are dismissed with costs. There will be one hearing fee in favour of the Company. The other parties will bear their own costs.

Appeals dismissed.

Following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

HEGDE, J.: This is an appeal under S. 116A of the Representation of the People Act, 1951 (to be hereinafter referred to as the Act). It arises from the decision of the High Court of Punjab and Haryana in Election Petition No. 6 of 1969 on its file. In that petition the appellant unsuccessfully challenged the validity of the election of the respondent to the Punjab Legislative Assembly in the mid-term election held in 1969.

2. The appellant and the respondent contested the Gurdaspur Assembly seat in the mid-term election held in 1969. The appellant was the congress nominee and the respondent was the candidate of the Akali party. It is said that he had the support of the Jan Sangh. One other candidate who filed his nomination for that constituency had withdrawn from the contest. It is not necessary to refer to him. Polling took place on February 9, 1969 and the result of the election was declared on February 10, 1969. The appellant secured 20044 votes and the respondent 25501. Hence the respondent was declared elected.

3. The validity of the election of the respondent was challenged by the appellant on various grounds. The trial judge, as mentioned earlier, rejected the petition. In this Court the appellant pressed for our consideration only one of the several grounds urged by him in his petition, and that ground is that the respondent was guilty of a corrupt practice under S. 123 (3) of the Act inasmuch as he exhibited the "Holy Cross", the sacred symbol of the Christians in front of his office for a period of about 15 days prior to the election. The respondent denied this allegation.

4. In support of the allegation relating to the exhibition of the "Holy Cross", the appellant has relied on documentary as well as oral evidence. But before referring to those pieces of evidence, it is necessary to deal with one of the grievances of the appellant. The appellant summoned the Government of Punjab to produce certain reports received by it from the C.I.D. relating to certain agitations said to have been made during the election in connection with the exhibition of the "Holy Cross" in front of the respondent's office. The concerned reports were sent to the court under a sealed cover but the Home Secretary claimed privilege in respect of the same on the ground that these documents are unpublished records relating to the affairs of the State. The learned trial judge upheld that claim and hence those documents could not be brought on record. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the trial court erred in upholding the privilege claimed by the government. It does not appear that the appellant asked the trial judge to peruse the records before considering the question of privilege or hold any enquiry relating to the claim made. In this Court no application has been made to receive any additional evidence; nor those reports have been summoned. Those reports are not before us. Hence we cannot go into the question whether privilege was properly claimed by the government. Now that we do not have those reports before us, we are unable to differ from the conclusion reached by the trial judge that they are documents relating to the affairs of the State.

5. Before we proceed to examine the oral and documentary evidence, it is necessary to refer to the pleadings relating to the charge of corrupt practice with which we are concerned in this case. The relevant averments on this point are found in paragraph 8 (c) of the election petition. Those averments read:

"That the respondent, his agents and other persons with the consent of the respondent have committed a corrupt practice within the meaning of S. 123 (3) of the Act by . . . use of the Holy Cross which is a sacred religious symbol of the Christians in order to further the prospects of the respondent's election. The details of the aforesaid corrupt practice are as under. . . .

(c) That the central Election Office of the respondent was situated in a central place Main Bazar, Gurdaspur, where he boldly exhibited the Holy Cross the sacred religious symbol of the Christians in front of his office which was visible to every passer-by. This was done by the respondent and his agents and other persons with his consent with a clear intention of using the religious symbol in order to further his election prospects."

6. In his written statement the respondent denied that he exhibited the "Holy Cross" in front of his office.

7. Documents relied on by the appellant in support of the charge are Annexures A, B, C, D, E and F. These are either correspondence that passed between the appellant and the Salvation Army authorities or representations made by some persons, to the Deputy Commissioner. In all these documents, the allegation made is that the respondent had installed a "Holy Cross" in front of his office. The allegations contained in the letters written by the appellant to the Salvation Army authorities as well as the representations made to the Deputy Commissioner are at best accusations. They do not by themselves prove the truth of the allegations made. The truth of those allegations have to be proved by examining persons who made those allegations.

8. In order to prove the corrupt practice in question, the appellant has examined several witnesses. Out of them P. W. 1, the Deputy Commissioner and P. W. 4, the C.I.D. Inspector have not given any useful evidence in support of the appellant's case. All that P. W. 1 has deposed is that when he was coming out of the Red Cross building after making arrangements for the counting of votes, somebody told him that "he would raise an issue about the religious symbol of the "Cross" having been used by the alleged supporters of the respondent in the course of his election campaign." He had also deposed to the fact that during the election various complaints as well as cross-complaints had been made to him and he had forwarded the same for necessary action either to the Superintendent of Police or to the Election Commissioner or his subordinates.

9. None of the witnesses examined on behalf of the appellant to support the charge spoke to the exhibition of the "Holy Cross" in front of respondent's office. Not one of them had spoken to the fact that the "Holy Cross" was exhibited in front of the respondent's office. On the other hand they spoke to the flying of three or four flags in front of the office of the respondent. According to them on one of those flags a "Cross" had been painted. Even as regards the alleged flag the evidence is not consistent. According to the correspondent of the Tribune (P. W. 12), two Christians had gone on hunger strike because of the flying of the Masihi Dal flag. Hence he sent the following news item to the Tribune:

"Hunger Strike: Two Christian workers, Mr. B. M. Samuel and Mr. Chiman Lal started a fast outside the Town Hall on Tuesday, in protest against the flying of the Masihi Dal flag on the election office of the Akali candidate".

10. This news item was published on the 6th February, 1969.

11. In his evidence he deposed that the hunger strike was in connection with the flying of the Masihi Dal flag on the election office of the Akali candidate. He further deposed that after interviewing the hunger strikers, he went to the respondent's election office and saw that the "symbol in question was being displayed there." In the course of his cross-examination, this witness first tried to deny that the Masihi Dal is a political party. But later he stated that "Masihi Dal may be a political party in the sense that they may be fighting for their own rights". F.W. 8, Chimanlal, one of the persons said to have gone on hunger strike admitted in his cross-examination that "the Christian political party is known as Masihi Dal in Punjab in the same way as Jan Sangh and Akali parties are known." He also admitted that Masihi Dal has its own flag.

12. From what is stated above, it is seen that in the election petition, the allegation was that the respondent exhibited in front of his election office the "Holy Cross", while adducing evidence that case was given up and in its place a new version was introduced namely that a flag bearing "Cross" was flown in front of the office of the respondent. Even this version was not consistently adhered to. According to P. W. 12, the flag complained of is the flag of the Masihi Dal. Masihi Dal is proved to be a political organization. These contradictory versions are alone sufficient to reject the case of the appellant.

13. The oral evidence adduced on behalf of the appellant in support of the charge was disbelieved by the trial judge. After examining the evidence of the various witnesses examined in support of the charge, the court came to the conclusion that no reliance can be placed on their testimony. This finding of the trial court is a finding of fact. Unless we are satisfied that this finding is basically wrong, this Court following its usual practice will not reappreciate the evidence on record. But that apart, we are not satisfied that the witnesses examined on behalf of the appellant in support of the charge are reliable witnesses. The appellant himself who spoke in support of the charge is an interested witness. As seen earlier the evidence given by him does not accord with the plea taken by him in his election petition. The other witnesses examined in support of the charge are P. Ws. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 12 and 15. So far as P. W. 2 is concerned, his antecedents are such that his evidence cannot inspire confidence. He was prosecuted for an offence under S. 467/193, I.P.C. for identifying a wrong person for the purpose of cashing a cheque. According to his own admission he procured his acquittal by paying the complainant a sum of Rs. 1,000/-. So far as P.W. 3 is concerned he admits that he was working for the appellant during the election. From the admissions taken from him during his cross-examination, it is clear that he was a strong supporter of the appellant. Similarly it is clear from the evidence of P.W. 5 that he and his father were the supporters of the appellant. P.Ws. 6 and 3 are close associates. Further P.W. 6 was the polling agent of the appellant. P. Ws. 7 and 8 are said to be the persons who went on hunger strike as a protest against the flying of the flag bearing a "Cross". A comparison of the evidence of these two witnesses will show that they are wholly untruthful witnesses. According to P. W. 7, after holding a meeting of the Christians they went in a procession to the Deputy Commissioner and presented a written complaint to him; the Deputy Commissioner asked them to meet him next morning and when they met him on the next morning, he told them that he had forwarded that petition to the Superintendent of Police. No such case was suggested to the Deputy Commissioner. We have earlier referred to the evidence of the Deputy Commissioner. As regards the presentation of the written complaint to the Deputy Commissioner, the version given by P.W. 8 materially differs from that given by P.W. 7. He deposed as follows:

"At the meeting resolution was passed to represent the matter to the Deputy Commissioner and observe fast unto death. We went to the Deputy Commissioner and gave him a written complaint. He directed us to go to the Superintendent of Police there and then."

14. According to this witness they immediately went to the Superintendent of Police. We are inclined to accept the suggestion made on behalf of the respondent that P.Ws. 7 and 8 were the supporters of the appellant in the election.

15. We have already referred to the evidence of P.W. 12. So far as P.W. 15 is concerned he also appears to be interested in the appellant.

16. Taking into consideration the departure from the pleadings in the case, the various conflicting versions put forward in the case and the interested nature of the testimony adduced in support of the charge, we are not surprised that the learned trial judge was unable to place reliance on the evidence referred to earlier. In this view it is not necessary for us to consider whether the flag of Masihi Dal can be considered as a religious symbol.

17. For the reasons mentioned above this appeal fails and the same is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

State of U. P. 14

Mr. S. S. Khanduja, Advocate, amicus curiae, for Appellant; Mr. O. P. Rana, Advocate, for Respondent.

Following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SIKRI, J.: This appeal by special leave is directed against the judgment of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad accepting the reference made by the learned Sessions Judge and dismissing the appeal of Husaina. There was a difference of opinion between Khare, J. and Hari Swarup, J., and the matter was referred to the third Judge, Gyanendra Kumar, J., who agreed with the opinion of Khare, J., and held that the offence of murder had been brought home to Husaina.

2. The prosecution case in brief is that Smt. Chhoti and her son Khalil lived in village Sirai. A wall divided their house from the house of Husaina, appellant before us. This wall had fallen down and Smt. Chhoti and Khalil wanted to reconstruct the wall in the morning of December 15, 1970, but Husaina took objection to this reconstruction and there was an altercation between them. Smt. Chhoti, Khalil and Husaina are khumhars. Mst. Chhoti and Khalil then proceeded to the village pond for digging earth. At about 12.30 p.m. Husaina also reached the pond and seeing Smt. Chhoti and Khalil digging the earth told them that they would not be permitted to build the wall. Husaina then gave blows on the head of Chhoti with his spade. Khalil got up and tried to save his mother but he was also struck by Husaina with the spade. Some persons chased Husaina but could not catch him. Smt. Chhoti died at the spot. Khalil who had become unconscious due to those injuries was taken to the police station on a tonga by Allahdiya, P.W. 8, and thereafter admitted into the hospital. The First Information Report was lodged by Allahdiya, P.W. 8, at 1.30 p.m. at the police station Main-ather, which was about 5 miles from the place of occurrence, and the investigation followed. The accused was committed to Sessions. The appellant's defence was that he was not present in the village Sirsi on the date of occurrence and had been implicated in the crime due to enmity.

3. The post-mortem examination of Smt. Chhoti showed that she had sustained the following ante-mortem injuries:

1. Incised wound 2" x 1/4" x bone deep cutting the bone underneath on right side back of head.

2. Incised wound 1 1/2" x 1/2" x muscle deep on right arm outer side in middle.

3. Incised wound 2" x 1" x bone deep. Right scapula cut underneath on right side back.

4. Incised wound 1/2 x 1/2" x bone deep on the top of left index fingers. Dr. A. P. Singh, P.W. 3, who performed the post-mortem examination on the body of Mst. Chhoti deposed that the following injuries were found on internal examination:

"Right occipital bone was found cut under injury No. 1.

There was contusion over the membranes of the brain under injury No. 1. There was clotted blood in an area of 1 1/2" x 1" under injury No. 1. The bone of the right shoulder was found cut under injury No. 3." He opined that "cutting of bone shows that the weapon was very heavy." He was recalled by the High Court and stated before it as follows:

"The spade, Ex. 1, which is alleged to be the weapon of attack is now being shown to me. All the four external injuries could have been caused with the sharp side of this weapon. These injuries could not have been caused with the remaining three sides of this weapon."

He did not agree with the suggestion that with the sharp edge of the weapon, which is the lower edge of the weapon, no incised wound could be caused.

4. Dr. Singh had also performed post-mortem on the dead body of Khalil. He noticed the following ante-mortem injuries:

1. Healing wound, 2" x 1/2", on the left side of the head, back part bone was visible.

2. Healing wound 2" x 1/4", at the back of neck.

3. Swelling 1" x 1/2", on the right side of head 2 1/2" above the ear.

4. Healed abrasion, at the back of right little finger.

On internal examination he found the following things:

"Temporal and parietal bones on the right side were found fractured under injury No. 3. There was clotted blood in an area of 2" x 2" over the membranes of the brain under injury No. 3. The remaining organs had become pale."

5. It was urged that the evidence of Dr. Singh showed that Smt. Chhoti and Khalil could not have been injured by one weapon alone. The injuries on Smt. Chhoti were clearly incised and caused by a sharp-edged weapon while the injuries on Khalil were caused by a blunt weapon.

6. Dr. N. R. Bhatia, P. W. 1 had examined the injuries of Khalil when he was brought to the hospital. Dr. Bhatia was re-examined in the High Court. He stated:

"I have examined the spade (Ex. 1) today. Injuries Nos. 1 and 2 could be caused with this weapon from any of the four sides of this weapon. The spade (Ex. 1) as it is can be described as a blunt weapon, because there are no fine edges on any of its sides. Injury No. 3 mentioned by me in my statement dated 19th July, 1968, could also be caused with the spade (Ex. 1). Injuries Nos. 4 and 5 could either be due to fall or by friction with the back side of the spade. Injuries Nos. 1 and 2 could be caused even if the front side of the spade was used."

In cross-examination he stated that injuries Nos. 1 and 2 could be caused also with the back side of the spade.

7. In the High Court Gyanendra Kumar, J., carried out some experiments on 8 fold blotting paper to see the impression the spade made. The learned Judge observed:

"The experiment made by me on the 8 fold blotting paper also demonstrated that stroke made on it from the sharp edge of the blade (Ex. 1) created a clean cut incised. Therefore, relying on the testimony of the eye-witnesses Allah Dia (P. W. 8), the other Allah Dia (P. W. 10), the medical opinion of Dr. A. P. Singh, the report of the Chemical Examiner and Serologists and the experiment performed by me in the presence of the learned counsel for the parties, I am convinced that all the incised wounds of Smt. Chhoti were caused by the sharp edge of the iron blade of the spade (Ex. 1) used by the appellant."

It seems to us that if the witnesses are believed, the so-called inconsistency in the opinion of the two doctors loses much of its force, specially as the appellant could have used the blunt side of the spade. The learned counsel for the appellant has not been able to show any convincing reason why the eye-witnesses should not be believed. They all support the prosecution case, as set out in the beginning of the judgment.

8. It was urged that there was no reason for Allah Dia (P. W. 8) to be present there. We are unable to appreciate the contention. He was, after the death of the husband of Mst. Chhoti, looking after their land and he happened to be in the village at that time. In the morning when Mst. Chhoti went to the pond it was natural that he would also go there. The fact that the F.I.R. was lodged by him at 1.30 p.m. on December 15, 1966, at Police Station Mainther, 5 miles from Sirsi, also shows that he was present at Sirsi at the time of the occurrence.

9. It was urged by the learned counsel that Budhan, son of Allah Dia, P. W. 8, was also alleged to be present there but was not produced as a witness, but it is not necessary that every person who was present should be produced, especially when he was the son of Allah Dia, P. W. 8.

10. The fact that P. W. 8, Allah Dia, was not injured does not weaken the prosecution case. He was an old man of 70 years and it may be that he thought it fruitless to intervene when he was not armed.

11. There is nothing against Rahim Baksh, P. W. 9, who was a khumhar by profession. He was digging earth some 35 paces in front of Smt. Chhoti.

12. The third eye-witness, P. W. 10, Allah Dia alias Gurra, was again a khumhar and his presence at the pond at that time was quite probable. It has not been established that he had any grievance or ill-will against the appellant.

13. We agree with the conclusion arrived at by Khare, J., and Gyanendra Kumar, J.

14. The learned counsel, relying on Bashira v. State of U. P.

(1969) 1 SCE 32 = (AIR 1968 SC 1313), urged that the appellant was not given reasonable opportunity of defending himself because the amicus curiae counsel was appointed only on July 19, 1968, i.e., on the day when the trial commenced. This point was, although not raised before the High Court when the case was heard by Khare, J., and Hari Swarup, J., was raised before Gyanendra Kumar, J., and the facts relating to this point, as found by Gyanendra Kumar, J., are as follows: On July 19, 1968, the State Counsel only opened the case and examined two formal witnesses, viz., P.W. 1, Dr. N. R. Bhatia, who had examined the injuries of Khalil, and P.W. 2, Prayag Singh, Head Constable, who had recorded the F.I.R. Both the witnesses were duly cross-examined by the counsel for the appellant. On July 20, 1968, five formal witnesses were examined. Dr. A. P. Singh, P. W. 3, who had conducted autopsy on the dead bodies of Smt. Chhoti and her son Khalil; Dr. K. P. Gupta, P. W. 4; P. W. 5, Radha Raman, Head Clerk in the office of the Civil Surgeon, Moradabad; and Constable Akbar Ali, P. W. 6, and P. W. 7, Harnam Singh. The next hearing of the case took place on July 22, 1968, when the three eye-witnesses, among other witnesses, were examined. No application was made by the counsel before the learned Sessions Judge asking for time to prepare the case and no application was made to recall any witness for further cross-examination. The appeal was filed in the High Court on July 30, 1968, but no application was made to recall any witnesses for cross-examination. It was the Judges hearing the appeal who considered it necessary to recall the Doctors to clarify their statements and this evidence was recorded on March 17, 1969.

15. We agree with Gyanendra Kumar, J., that in the circumstances narrated above it cannot be said that the counsel was handicapped for want of time and opportunity to prepare the case. It seems to us that Bashira's case has no application to the facts of this case.

16. The learned counsel finally urged that the capital sentence awarded was too severe in the circumstances of the case, and the only fact relied on is that the appellant was aged only 25 years at the time of the incident. This is no reason for us, in an appeal by special leave, to interfere with the sentence passed by the learned Sessions Judge and confirmed by the High Court.

17. In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

(V 58 C 65)

M. HIDAYATULLAH, C. J., A. N. RAY AND I. D. DUA, JJ.

Chaju Ram, Petitioner v. The State of Jammu & Kashmir, Respondent.

Writ Petn. No. 32 of 1970, D/- 3-3-1970.

(A) Public Safety — J. & K. Preventive Detention Act (13 of 1964), S. 8 — Right to make representation — Deprivation of — Illiterate detenu — Grounds of detention in English — Necessity to explain grounds in the language detenu understands — (Constitution of India, Article 22 (5)).

It is absolutely necessary that when the Court is dealing with a detenu who cannot read or understand English language or any language at all that the grounds of detention should be explained to him as early as possible in the language he understands so that he can avail himself of the statutory right of making a representation. To hand over to him the document written in English and to obtain his thumb impression on it in token of his having received the same does not comply with the requirements of the law which gives a very valuable right to the detenu to make a representation which right is frustrated by handing over to him the grounds of detention in an alien language. (Para 9)

(B) Public Safety — J. & K. Preventive Detention Act (13 of 1964), Section 8 — Grounds of detention vague — (Constitution of India, Article 22 (5)).

Where the grounds of detention supplied to a detenu detained under Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act, 1964, charged him with having conspired with some leaders of Democratic Conference and having incited landless people of RSpura Tehsil to forcibly occupy the land comprised in Nandpur Mechanised Farm and to have persuaded them to resist violently any attempt to evict them, but no details of the leaders of the Conference or of the persons incited or the dates on which he conspired or incited the squatters or the time when such Conference took place, were mentioned it would be impossible for anybody to make a representation against such grounds, and they must be held to be vague. (Para 10)

Mr. H. K. Puri, amicus curiae (The Petitioner was also present), for Petitioner; Mr. R. N. Sachthey, Advocate, for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

HIDAYATULLAH, C. J.:— The petitioner Chaju Ram was detained under the orders of the District Magistrate, Jammu passed under Section 3 (2) read with Section 5 of the Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act, 1964 on March 30, 1969. The order was served on him the same day and on the original order, we find an endorsement by the Station House Officer to the effect that in compliance with the District Magistrate's order, he arrested Chaju at 6-30 p.m. and that the contents of the order were explained to him in Urdu by reading over the same to him in token of which his thumb impression was obtained on the face of the order. Beneath this endorsement, there is a thumb impression although it is not stated there whose thumb impression it is. In any event, this was in compliance with the direction given in the order itself that notice of the order should be given to Sh. Chaju by reading over the same to him.

2. As required by Section 8 of the Act, grounds of the order of detention had to be disclosed to Chaju. It is claimed that this was done on April 6, 1969 and that order has been produced before us. The grounds stated as follows:

"1. That Shri Chaju s/o Gura is (sic) conspiracy with some other leaders of Democratic Conference incited landless people of RSpura Tehsil to forcibly occupy the land comprised in Nandpur Mechanised Farm, with the full knowledge that such action on their part was likely to lead to disturbances in a sensitive border area.

2. As a result of his activities some area of the Nandpur Farm was occupied by landless people between 18th March, 1968 to 25th February, 1969 who also constructed 'Jhugies' on it. Chaju told them to persist in their illegal activities and urged them to resist violently any attempt to evict them. He told them the State Government would agree to allot this land to them only if a situation were created in which two or three persons were killed by Police firing.

3. Squatters were evicted on 26th March, 1968 some of whom offered resistance. Even after this, Chaju continued his campaign of asking people to forcibly occupy vacant Government land on a massive scale with the avowed objective of repeating a "Naxalbari" in our State".

We shall come to these grounds later. Chaju did not make a representation against his detention and on August 29, 1969, the Advisory Board held that the District Magistrate was fully justified and that there was sufficient cause for his detention.

3. Chaju made a petition under Article 32 of the Constitution for his release by a writ of Habeas Corpus in this Court. Rule nisi on this petition was issued on December 2, 1969. The petition was made from jail and contained not much material except to say that he had been illegally detained for one year and was languishing in jail. In reply to the rule nisi, an affidavit was filed by the Additional Secretary to the Government of Jammu and Kashmir Home Department. However, Chaju withdrew that petition with permission to file another petition and he has filed a second petition on January 20, 1970. In this petition he has stated in paras 3, 4 and 5 that he was given some papers five days after Baisakhi (which fell on April 13, 1969) and being an illiterate person, he could not read the contents of the papers given. He also alleged that he was not explained the grounds of his detention and therefore he was deprived of his right of making a representation under the statute. He also alleged that the grounds on which his detention had been ordered were vague and were not sufficient for him to make a representation if he cared.

4. At the hearing we confined the case only to these two points, namely, whether Chaju was served the grounds of detention on April 6, 1969 as claimed in the reply affidavit and whether the contents of the grounds were explained to him in a language understood by him, and secondly whether the grounds were sufficiently precise and detailed for Chaju to make a proper representation as he was entitled to do under the Preventive Detention Act.

5. In regard to the first question, there is an affidavit sworn to by the Under-Secretary to the Government filed in answer to the second petition made in this Court. It is stated in that affidavit that the grounds were duly served upon the detenu, and in token of his having understood the same, he affixed his thumb impression thereon. In answer to the allegation that the grounds were served on him five days after Baisakhi, the affidavit does not seek to controvert it but only says that the detention order was duly read over to the detenu and the contents of the order explained to him in the language he understood. Therefore the claim of the Government is that on both the occasions, that is to say, when the detention order was served on him and also when the grounds were handed over to him, the contents of the documents were read over to him and translated to him in the language he understood (Urdu) and therefore there was compliance with the provisions of the law.

6. Now, if we accept the affidavit of the Government, it is obvious that the affidavit of the detenu must be false. Contrariwise, if we accept the affidavit of the detenu, we must reject the material placed before us on behalf of the Government. In view of the contradictory nature of these two affidavits, we went into the matter very closely and satisfied ourselves which of the two affidavits is acceptable, giving all the benefit of doubt to the detenu. To begin with, the order of detention had an endorsement on it that the order should be communicated to Chaju by reading over the same to him. This was probably done because we find an endorsement of the Station House Officer that he had read it over to him in Urdu. The thumb impression on this document does not state that it is the thumb impression of Chaju, but as he has not raised a controversy about it, we accept it as his.

7. In contrast to this order, the grounds of detention did not have an endorsement that the grounds should be explained to Chaju in the language he understood. In the affidavit in answer to the first petition, the grounds were filed but there was no endorsement on the copy of the grounds showing that it had been so read to him in Urdu and that he was explained the contents. Mr. Sachthey, however, brought to our notice the original file in which the copy of the grounds which was served upon the detenu has an endorsement in Urdu that they had been read over and fully explained to him in Urdu. There is a thumb impression and against the thumb impression is noted that it is that of Chaju. The date is April 6, 1969.

8. The question is whether in view of this endorsement we must hold that Chaju was properly explained the grounds of detention in Urdu which he understands. In our judgment, we cannot accept these documents at their face value. To begin with, the three endorsements on the copy, that is to say, (a) that the document was read over to him in Urdu, (b) the thumb impression and (c) the note that it is the thumb impression of Chaju, are in two different inks if not three. This raised a suspicion, that these might have been written later around the thumb impression taken from Chaju as was done when the order of detention was served on him. It may be recalled that at that time also there was an endorsement in English that it had been read over to him, but nothing had been written around the thumb impression of Chaju—whether in Urdu or otherwise to show that the thumb impression was that of Chaju. We looked carefully at the affidavit filed in this Court which is a cyclostyled document. We find in para 6 a correction in a very significant place. This correction has been made by typing certain words in the place between two lines with an oblique showing that it is an omission. The words beneath those added words have been erased although some of them in part still appear. Now it is significant that the words which have been added are as follows:

“understood the same he”; and the para now reads as follows:

“Referring to para 7 of the petition, I say that the grounds were duly served upon the detenu and in token of having understood the same he affixed his thumb impression thereon.” (underlining by us).

The underlined words are the words which have been added in the place between the two lines. It appears that what has been erased must be some other words appropriate to what preceded and what followed. In our opinion the paragraph must have read:

“Referring to para 7 of the petition I say that the grounds were duly served upon the detenu and in token of having received the same he affixed his thumb impression thereon.”

The underlined words were erased and others substituted. There would be no occasion to erase one set of writing and write another if the words were there.

9. Of course Mr. Sachthey ingeniously suggests that this may be a case of erroneous typing necessitating the correction; but this correction comes at a significant spot after the detenu has sworn an affidavit that he was not explained the grounds of the detention in the language which he understood, and further the original document which is produced does not seem to bear authenticity because of the changes of ink. In these circumstances and regard being had to the fact that on the previous occasion in the affidavit there was no mention of having read over the grounds to him in the language he understood, we are constrained to hold that we should not go by the affidavit of the Under-Secretary, but in preference accept the affidavit of the detenu. The detenu is an illiterate person and it is absolutely necessary that when we are dealing with a detenu who cannot read or understand English language or any language at all that the grounds of detention should be explained to him as early as possible in the language he understands so that he can avail himself of the statutory right of making a representation. To hand over to him the document written in English and to obtain his thumb impression on it in token of his having received the same does not comply with the requirements of the law which gives a very valuable right to the detenu to make a representation which right is frustrated by handing over to him the grounds of detention in an alien language. We are therefore compelled to hold in this case that the requirement of explaining the grounds to the detenu in his own language was not complied with.

10. Even as to the grounds, we have something to say. The grounds charge him with having conspired with some leaders of Democratic Conference and having incited landless people of RSpura Tehsil to forcibly occupy the land comprised in Nandpur Mechanised Farm and to have persuaded them to resist violently any attempt to evict them. No details of the leaders of the Conference or of the persons incited or the dates on which he conspired or incited the squatters or the time when such conference took place, are mentioned. It would be impossible for anybody to make a representation against such grounds. These grounds, on the authorities of this Court, too numerous to be cited here, must be held to be vague. Therefore on both the twin grounds, namely, that he was deprived of his right to make a representation and also because the grounds in themselves were very vague, we must hold that there was no compliance with the law as laid down in the Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act. The result, therefore, is that the detention must be declared to be unlawful and Chaju must be declared to be entitled to his liberty. He is ordered to be released. The detenu was questioned by us and he expressed a desire that he may not be released in Delhi, because he has no means of going back. He asked to be released in Jammu. We direct therefore that he shall be taken back to the place where he was in detention in Jammu and released within the shortest possible time.

Petition allowed.

Mr. S. K. Gambhir, Advocate, amicus curiae, (Petitioner was also Produced in Court), for Petitioner; Mr. R. N. Sachthey, Advocate, for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SIKRI, J.:— The petitioner filed a petition under Article 32 of the Constitution alleging that he had been re-arrested after serving four years' of detention in different jails of the State under the Preventive Detention Act and the Defence of India Rules and that he was arrested on June 14, 1970 and was kept in Police Station Koti Bagh till June 30, 1970 without any warrants. He prayed that the Superintendent of Jails, Srinagar, be directed to produce him before this Court for pleading his case.

2. Upon perusing the petition this Court ordered the issue of rule nisi and directed a counsel to be assigned as amicus curiae.

3. The Deputy Secretary to Government of Jammu and Kashmir, Home Department, has filed on affidavit in reply on behalf of the State. In this affidavit it is stated that the District Magistrate, Srinagar, ordered vide order No. PDA/DMS/85/70 dated June 25, 1970, that the petitioner be detained under the Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act, 1964 with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to security of the State. This order of detention was executed on June 30, 1970 by Shri Urgan Durjay, A. S. I., Police Station Kotibag, Srinagar. It is further stated that the petitioner was informed of the District Magistrate's order dated June 25, 1970 that it was against the public interest to disclose to him the grounds on which detention order was made. It is also stated that "thereafter the Government after placing the case before the Chief Minister in charge, Home Department, approved the said detention vide No. ISD-849 of 1970 dated 16-7-1970." There was no specific denial of the allegation in the petition that the petitioner was kept in Police Station Koti Bagh till June 30, 1970 without any warrants.

4. The petitioner has filed a rejoinder affidavit denying that he was arrested on June 30, 1970. He further alleged that the order of detention dated June 25, 1970, passed by the District Magistrate, was not read over and explained to him. He stated that the order was just shown to him on July 3, 1970, and he was not even furnished a copy of the said order, and further that he was never informed that the order dated June 25, 1970 was approved by the Home Department, and the order of Government, dated July 16, 1970, was not supplied to him.

5. The learned counsel contended, first, that the petitioner's detention from June 14 to June 30, 1970 was illegal. Assuming the facts stated by the petitioner to be correct and assuming that his detention was illegal this does not entitle us to hold that the present detention by virtue of the detention order passed on June 25, 1970, is illegal.

6. The learned counsel then urged that the order of the District Magistrate that the petitioner be informed that it was against public interest to disclose the grounds of detention to him was never communicated to him. We may mention that in the order it is stated that the petitioner be informed that it is against the public interest to disclose to him the grounds on which the detention order was made, and the order was forwarded to the Superintendent of Jails, Srinagar, for information of the concerned. We have seen the order and we find that this order has been signed by the petitioner. This shows that the order must have been communicated to him.

7. The last point raised by the learned counsel was that it was necessary that this order should have been explained to the petitioner in vernacular even though he knew English. In this connection the learned counsel relied on the judgment of this Court in Chaju Ram v. The State of Jammu and Kashmir, W. P. No. 32 of 1970, D/- 3-3-1970 = (AIR 1971 SC 263). There is nothing in that judgment to warrant the argument that even if a detenu knows English it is necessary that the order be explained to him in vernacular. We may mention that the original petition which was filed in this Court is in English and signed by the petitioner in English.

8. In the result the petition fails and is dismissed.

Petition dismissed.

AIR 1971 SUPREME COURT 267 (V 58 C 67)

(From: Andhra Pradesh)*

J. C. SHAH AND A. N. GROVER, JJ.
Boddepalli Rajagopala Rao, Appellant v. N. G. Ranga, Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 1436 of 1968, D/- 16-10-1970.

(A) Representation of the People Act (1951), Sections 123, 116-A — Charge of corrupt practice at election — Proof — Court of first instance refusing to place reliance upon testimony of appellant's witnesses — Appellate Court will not ordinarily re-appreciate the evidence.

A charge of corrupt practice under the Representation of the People Act must be established by clear and cogent evidence. When the Court of First Instance on a consideration of the evidence of the witnesses has refused to place any reliance upon their testimony the burden lying upon the party setting up a plea of corrupt practice becomes no lighter in appeal. The charge cannot be held established merely upon suspicion, or preponderance of probabilities. Unless the appellant establishes that the appreciation of evidence was vitiated by gross misreading or misconception of the evidence or because of failure to consider important pieces of evidence which had a bearing on the charge or because of serious irregularities in procedure which amount to a denial of a fair trial the appellate Court will not proceed to reappreciate the evidence on which the findings are recorded by the Court of First Instance on the credibility of witnesses.

(Para 12)

(B) Representation of the People Act (1951), Section 123 (4) — Corrupt practice — Publication of statement — Consent of candidate or his agent.

To constitute corrupt practice under Section 123 (4) one of the conditions required to be fulfilled is that the statement was published by the candidate or his election agent or by any other person with the consent of a candidate or his election agent. If the publication is by a person other than the candidate or his election agent, the consent of the candidate or his election agent must be established before the charge is held proved. Proof of express consent is not necessary; inference of such consent may be raised from the circumstances. Prior knowledge of the contents and the knowledge that it is likely to be published may raise an inference of consent, if the candidate deliberately keeps quiet and does not stop the publication if it be within his power. Where the offending matter has already been published and thereafter it comes to the knowledge of the candidate at the election and he does not take steps to repudiate it, the consent may not necessarily be inferred unless the candidate or his election agent permits or aids in publication. In the matter of publication of statements which are false and are reasonably calculated to prejudice the prospects of the candidate's election, proof of consent not infrequently assumes great importance, for even if it be proved that the publication has been made, unless it is shown that it was with the consent of the candidate or his election agent, the corrupt practice may not be held to be committed so as to invalidate the election. (Para 16)

(C) Representation of the People Act (1951), Section 123 (6) — Corrupt practice — Proof — General allegation not sufficient proof — Expenditure by party of successful candidate.

It is not sufficient merely to allege that large sums of money were spent for the purpose of the election. Expenditure, if any, incurred by the party which sponsored the candidature of a candidate cannot be taken into account for the purpose of determining whether the corrupt practice within the meaning of Section 123 (7) was committed by the candidate. In the absence of any evidence to show that any specific sums of money were expended on certain items by the successful candidate or his election agent, on conjecture can be permitted to defeat the candidate. Mr. B. R. L. Iyengar, Sr. Advocate (Mr. A. V. V. Nair, Advocate, with him), for Appellant; Mr. A. S. R. Chari, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. P. Lingayya Choudhary, A. Pandurangarao, K. Rajendra Choudhuri, G. N. Rao & K. Nagirathnam, Advocates, with him), for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHAH, J.:— At a bye-election held in April 1967 to elect a member of the Lok Sabha from the Srikakulam parliamentary constituency there were two contesting candidates—Boddepalli Rajagopala Rao—hereinafter called “the appellant”—and N. G. Ranga—hereinafter called “the respondent”. The respondent was declared elected. The appellant filed an application in the High Court of Andhra Pradesh to set aside the election of the respondent on the ground that the respondent had committed diverse corrupt practices described in Section 123 (1) (A) (a), (b), (5) and (6) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951. The respondent denied the allegations made in the petition. He also submitted that the allegations were vague and indefinite and some of those allegations did not constitute any corrupt practice within the meaning of the Representation of the People Act, 1951. The appellant amended the petition and submitted particulars of certain corrupt practices set out in the original petition. The appellant then filed his additional written statement. The High Court held on a detailed consideration of the evidence that the corrupt practices alleged by the appellant in the petition were not proved, and dismissed the petition. The appellant has appealed to this Court under S. 116A of the Representation of the People Act, 1951.

2. Counsel for the appellant restricted his argument to the following charges set out in the petition:

(1) A charge of bribery in respect of an amount of Rs. 4,000/- paid to a candidate in the election as gratification for not standing for election, Rs. 10,000/- for constructing a high school building in the village Kothakotha with the object of inducing the voters in the village and three other contiguous polling stations to vote for him; and Rs. 1,000/- paid for completing the excavation of a well in consideration of promise of votes for the respondent. Thereby corrupt practices of bribery within the meaning of S. 123 (A) & (IB) were committed;

(2) Providing on the day of polling a number of motor-vehicles for the free transport of voters to the polling stations, and especially motor-jeep No. APK-9486, motor-lorry No. APK-9250, motor-lorry No. APG-3511 and motor-bus No. APS-1315. Thereby a corrupt practice under S. 123 (E) was committed;

(3) Causing the printing and publication of a leaf-let containing false and defamatory statements in relation to the personal character of the appellant. Copies of the leaflet were distributed at several meetings held by the Swatantra Party at Srikalasulam and other places. The respondent and his election agent also exhorted with the object of tarnishing the image of the appellant and lowering him in the estimation of the voters, the voters at those meetings not to vote for the appellant who it was alleged had misappropriated public funds. Thereby the respondent committed a corrupt practice under S. 123 (4) of the Representation of the People Act.

(4) That the account of the expenditure returned by the respondent did not disclose many items of expenditure which were incurred in connection with the election. The respondent had expended a sum exceeding Rupees 3 lakhs, and the expenditure returned was a gross under estimate of the expenses incurred by the respondent in connection with his election. Thereby he committed a corrupt practice under S. 123 (6) read with S. 77 of the Representation of the People Act, 1951.

In respect of the charge of bribery there were three heads — (i) that the respondent and his election agent G. Latchanna induced one Suvani Sanyasi Apparao not to stand as a candidate at the election by paying him Rs. 4,000/- as gratification. According to the appellant Suvani Sanyasi Apparao who was defeated in the contest for a seat in the Legislative Assembly of Andhra Pradesh in the general elections held in 1962 and February, 1967, intended to contest for the Lok Sabha seat in the bye-election and was canvassing support before the appointed date for filing nominations, but the respondent and his election agent at a meeting on March 29, 1967 in the travellers' bungalow at Amadalvalasa dissuaded Suvani Sanyasi Apparao from contesting the election in consideration of payment of Rs. 4,000/-. This was denied by the respondent. In support of his case the appellant examined Suvani Sanyasi Apparao P. W. 24 and B. Suryanarayana P. W. 25. He relied also upon two documents Exts. P-41 and P-83. In rebuttal the respondent relied upon his own testimony and of his election agent Latchanna. Suvani Sanyasi Apparao was also examined as a witness R. W. 2. The respondent examined a number of other witnesses K. Chalapatirao Patnaik R. W. 1, Bendi Appalla Suri R. W. 3 Dola Jagannatha Rao, R. W. 6, Sylada Pyditalli Naidu R. W. 9, B. Achuta Raju R. W. 10, B. Narayana Swamy R. W. 15, Kolanganti Sathi Raju R. W. 25 and Cokina Chandra Rao R. W. 26 and relied upon certain documents. The two witnesses examined on behalf of the appellant deposed to the circumstances leading to their presence at Amadalavalasa travellers' bungalow and payment of Rs. 4,000/- to Suvvari Sanyasi Apparao by Latchanna after the respondent and Latchhana had requested him not to file the nomination paper and to help the respondent in the election. The learned Trial Judge made a detailed analysis of the evidence and held that there were "contradictions and material discrepancies" in the statements of the witnesses for the appellant, and that the statements of the witnesses "did not inspire confidence". The burden of proving that the respondent and his election agent went to Amadalavalasa travellers' bungalow and persuaded Suvvari Sunyasi Apparao not to file his nomination paper in consideration of receiving a bribe lay upon the appellant. The witnesses examined on his behalf are, as found by the High Court, "highly interested and their testimony was rebutted by the witnesses named by him as the persons present at the time". Besides, the evidence of the witnesses as found by the High Court.

"was discrepant and did not accord with probabilities. Both the oral and documentary evidence falsified it. There were inherent improbabilities in the allegation itself."

No substantial argument was advanced before us to persuade us to take a different view.

3. (ii) In respect of the charge of bribery of Rs. 10,000/-, it was alleged in the petition that Latchhana, election agent of the respondent visited Kothakota at 8-00 p.m. on April 26, 1967 and paid Rs. 10,000/- to one D. Jaganatha Rao a resident of that village for constructing a "High School building" in that village. The payment, it was said, was made with the object of inducing the voters of Kothakota and three contiguous polling stations to vote for the respondent. This was denied by the respondent. In support of the allegation the appellant examined Dhavala Appalla Suri P. W. 7, Kusumanchi Adinarayana P. W. 8, Galala Ramulu P. W. 9 and Amballa Appalla Suri P. W. 11 and relied upon some documentary evidence also. In answer the respondent examined himself, his election agent and witnesses K. Chalapatirao Patnaik, R. W. 1, Dola Jagannatha Rao R. W. 6, D. Kondaih Choudari R. W. 8 and Alla Venkatarao

R. W. 16, and relied upon certain documentary evidence. On a consideration of the evidence the learned Judge observed that the entire oral evidence in support of the appellant's case was "highly discrepant and did not merit credence". The High Court observed that "the petition did not refer to the place of incident, whether it was rice mill premises or outside the rice mill where the payment is alleged to have been made. While some of the witnesses said it was rice mill premises itself, others said that it was near the rice mill".

The High Court also observed that

"apart from the interested nature and the fact that their testimony was replete with material contradictions, there were inherent improbabilities in the story told, which made it highly difficult to accept the testimony."

After considering the testimony of the respondent and his witnesses the Court observed that the oral testimony on behalf of the appellant was inconsistent and did not make out a case of corrupt practice, that the probabilities of the case were strongly against the appellant's contention and there was no reason to disbelieve the testimony of the witnesses for the respondent. Even in respect of this charge of corrupt practice no argument seeking to persuade us to take a different view was advanced by counsel for the appellant.

4. (iii) In respect of the third head of the charge of bribery, it was alleged by the appellant in his petition that at Pathokota a village falling within the limits of Budarsingi polling station the respondent and his election agent convened an election meeting on April 23, 1967, that the villagers assembled at that meeting requested the respondent to donate a sum of Rupees 1,000/- to complete the excavation of a well in return for their votes, and that as directed by the respondent on the same day at about 5-00 P.M. Negineni Venkayya agent of the respondent paid Rupees 1,000/- to Biridhar and Judisti, members of the village Youth League in the presence of the Sarpanch and village elders. In support of this plea the appellant examined Khanda Judishtra Kumaro P. W. 17 and Chinchalam Satyanarayana P. W. 18. In rebuttal, the respondent examined himself, his election agent Latchanna, Kavuri Venkaiah R. W. 28, Giridhar Kumar R. W. 13 of village Patakota and two others of the same village Harinarayan Dolao R. W. 17 and Mansing Kumarao R. W. 18. On a consideration of the evidence, the Court held that the evidence on behalf of the appellant was "marred by improbabilities", and it could not be accepted. Again the evidence for the respondent in the view of the High Court was "sufficient to disprove the corrupt practice" alleged. The High Court held that the corrupt practice was accordingly not established even in respect of this head of charge. Counsel did not urge any substantial argument to persuade us to take a different view.

5. The charge of corrupt practice under S. 123 (5) arose out of the allegation that Latchanna procured a number of lorries, jeeps, motor cars, buses and other vehicles, for free transport of voters to the polling stations on the date of polling. It was averred in the petition that jeep No. APK-9486 was used for the free transport of voters between 10-00 A.M. and 2.00 P.M. on the polling day from Killoi village and Killoi Colony to the polling station at Konkadapatti. The jeep, it was said, carried the Swatantra Party Flag as well as the agent of the respondent one Dunkuru Mangale. This was witnessed by the Presiding Officer, among others, when a complaint was made by the agent of the appellant Hadia Naiko to the Presiding Officer. In support of this plea of corrupt practice the appellant examined three witnesses Papi Naidu, Presiding Officer, P. W. 10, Hadia Naiko P. W. 20 and D. Ramamurthy P. W. 26. The respondent denied that the jeep No. APK-9486 was used for transporting voters as alleged. According to him the vehicle belonged to the Swatantra Party and stood registered in the name of Narayan Dandekar Secretary of the Party.

6. D. Ramamurthy P. W. 26 was examined on behalf of the appellant in support of his case on this plea of corrupt practice. The witness said that the jeep was entrusted to him at Sompeta to deliver it to Dunkuru Mangalo, polling agent of the respondent at Konkadaputti. According to the witness it was jeep No. APK-9486 which Latchanna had brought from "Guntur side for purposes of election", that the jeep was delivered to the polling agent for bringing voters from neighbouring villages to the polling booths, that the jeep was used for that purpose from 10 A.M. to 2 P.M. and that he reached Konkadaputti at 9.30 A.M. and remained near the polling station till 2 P.M. asking voters to vote for the "Star Symbol" of the Swatantra Party. The learned Judge observed that the witness "did not impress him as a witness of truth and it was impossible to place reliance upon his testimony". His story that the voters were transported free of charge in the jeep to the polling station on the date of polling could not therefore be believed.

7. Papi Naidu, the Presiding Officer, stated that a complaint was lodged by the agent of the appellant that the voters were being brought by the supporters of the Swatantra Party to the polling station. The witness also stated that he saw voters getting down the jeep and joining the queue and that there were 7 or 9 such voters. But the witness admitted that the people who were getting down the jeep were not known to him, that he had no opportunity to get them identified, that they had joined the queue but whether they were voters or not he could not say, that he asked the agent to put his complaint in writing but that was not done, and that the agent was not known to him and he had never seen him afterwards. The witness did not mention this incident in the report "as such complaints were not usually mentioned at all." He did not give the number of the jeep, nor did he state that he had seen the Swatantra flag on the jeep. He could not vouch for the fact that those who alighted were voters or that they had voted at that polling station. In the view of the learned judge the testimony of Papi Naidu, P.W. 10, did not satisfy all the component elements of the corrupt practice alleged."

8. Hadia Naiko was the polling agent of the appellant. He stated that Dunkuru Mangalo was bringing voters from Killoi Colony and Killoi village between 10 A.M. and 2 P.M. and on seeking this he told Dunkuro Mungalo that it was not proper for him to bring the voters in jeep cars and when the latter asserted that he had a right to do so, he complained "to the Presiding Officer who asked for a written complaint which he could not comply with as he was not proficient enough to write one and none on behalf of the appellant had come who could do the needful".

The witness did not give the number of the jeep nor the names of the voters. In the view of the learned Judge the "procurement of the jeep for free conveyance was not proved." The High Court observed that it was unnecessary to discuss the evidence on behalf of the respondent for the appellant had failed to establish the corrupt practice alleged.

9. The next head under this charge of corrupt practice as alleged by the appellant related to the use of motor-lorry No. APK-9250 which was flying the Swatantra Party flag and was used for free transport of voters on the polling day between 10 A.M. and 2 P. M. from the surrounding villages to the polling station at Guttavalli. During one of the trips, it was said that there ensued a free fight between the persons who were carried by the lorry and others who were present near the polling station as the former raised slogans acclaiming the respondent and denouncing the appellant. A complaint was given to the police by some of the voters that they were being conveyed in the lorry, two of those voters being Kotra Appanna and Sarpanch Sinupanapalaum. It was admitted therein that while they were being transported for exercising their vote for the respondent there was obstruction from the supporters of the appellant Sanapalli Manumula Appalaw and his son and that a free fight ensued. The respondent denied these allegations. In support of the allegations, the appellant examined Kolla Appanna P. W. 12, Gedala Lakshmi Naidu P. W. 16, Sanapala Narsimha Rao P. W. 21, Sanapali Raja Rao P.W. 24 and P. Chandra Rao P.W. 27. In rebuttal, the respondent examined Jammana Jogi R. W. 7, Garimella Kameswara Rao R.W. 11 and Dannana

Appanna R.W. 23 and relied upon "the first information" which was lodged about the fight. The High Court analysed the evidence of the witnesses on behalf of the appellant. In regard to the testimony of Kolla Appanna P.W. 12 the High Court observed that his assertion that he went in a lorry was "highly doubtful" and that the story deposed to by the witness was "palpably false", that the story that the witness Gedala Lakshmi Naidu P. W. 16 that he travelled by the lorry was "open to doubt", that testimony of Ganapala Narsimha Rao who is "closely related" to the appellant "was tainted", and that the evidence of Sanapali Raja Rao P.W. 24 was also "not believable". On a review of the evidence the High Court observed that the number of the lorry was not given by any of the witnesses, and there was no evidence about its ownership. There was again no evidence "as to its procurement for free conveyance" and "the alleged use of the vehicle for free conveyance was, therefore, not established. Thus the contention as to the alleged incidence must be held against the appellant."

10. The third branch under this head related to the use of motor-lorry No. APG-3911 and motor-bus No. APS-1315. It was alleged in the petition that the two vehicles were "flying the Swatantra Party flag" and were used for transporting voters free of charge on the polling day to Torrivandan polling station from Puruvinwada and Appanyaturu that a report was lodged by Boyana Kanakaiah and B. Mamaray to the police Sub-Inspector of Kothun who was on election duty at Sarnakota stating that a number of voters were being carried by lorry No. APG-3911 and bus No. APS-1315 to vote for the respondent, that the Sub-Inspector prepared the statement of the bus conductor, the lorry driver and other persons and that a mediation report" was also recorded in that connection. The respondent denied the allegations. In his additional written statement he also pleaded that there was absence of essential particulars relating to the names of the voters and that the petition did not disclose a cause of action since the allegations did not make out a corrupt practice. In support of his case the appellant relied upon his own evidence and the evidence of the witnesses Boyana Kanakiah P. W. 13 and Boyina Kama Raju P. W. 14. It was the case of the appellant that these witnesses had seen the incident and had given a report promptly to the Sub-Inspector of Police, and that Sub-Inspector had detained the motor lorry and bus and got a mediators' report prepared. But the Sub-Inspector of police to whom the report is alleged to have been made was (though cited as a witness) not examined in the case and the report or the proceedings started pursuant thereto were not brought on the record. After the evidence was closed the appellant applied for calling the Sub-Inspector as a Court witness but the application was rejected. Boyana Kanakiah P.W. 13 and Boyina Kama Raju P.W. 14 are cousins of the appellant. In their evidence they did not specify the persons who used the said lorry and bus on behalf of the respondent, nor did their evidence disclose the names of the voters conveyed by the said lorry or bus.

11. In the view of the High Court the conditions of a corrupt practice falling within the meaning of S. 123 (5) of the Representation of the People Act were not established. The High Court pointed out that even if it be held that what Boyana Kanakiah P. W. 13 and Boyina Kama Raju P. W. 14 said that certain persons travelled by the lorry and bus was true unless it was established that the voters were taken to and from the polling stations at the instance of the respondent no charge of corrupt practice can be deemed to be made out for not a single person was named and no person was brought before the Court to prove that he had travelled in the bus or the lorry. The High Court held that the case set up in respect of the two vehicles was also not established.

12. The finding of the learned Trial Judge is based upon appreciation of evidence of the witnesses in the light of probabilities. A charge of corrupt practice under the Representation of the People Act must be established by clear and cogent evidence. When the Court of First Instance on a consideration of the evidence of the witnesses has refused to place any reliance upon their testimony the burden lying upon the party setting up a plea of corrupt practice becomes no lighter in appeal. The charge cannot be held established merely upon suspicion, or preponderance of probabilities. Unless the appellant establishes that the appreciation of evidence was vitiated by gross misreading or misconception of the evidence or because of failure to consider important pieces of evidence which had a bearing on the charge or because of serious irregularities in procedure which amount to a denial of a fair trial the appellate court will not proceed to re-appreciate the evidence on which the findings are recorded by the Court of First Instance on the credibility of witnesses.

13. The third head of charge relates to the printing and publication of a leaflet defamatory of the appellant and falling within S. 123 (4) of the Act. It was stated in the petition that one Dola Jagannatha Rao agent of the respondent caused the printing and publication at the instance of the election agent of the respondent of a leaflet containing the following false and defamatory statements in relation to the personal character of the appellant:

(a) that the appellant misappropriated large amounts to the tune of about Rs. 60 lakhs belonging to the Co-operative Sugar Factory and the Co-operative Central Bank for his own ends;

(b) that the Supreme Court confirmed the order of the High Court sentencing the appellant for contempt of Court. The leaflet posed the question whether the Congress Party could not get a candidate with better character and record of selfless public service?

The appellant said that the leaflet was printed at Sri Ramakrishna Printing Works at Srikakulam and the printing expenses thereof amounting to Rupees 85/- were according to the appellant defrayed by the election agent of the respondent, that the election agent of the respondent caused the distribution of those leaflets at several meetings held by the Swatantra Party at Srikakulam at 9-00 P.M. on April 24, 1967, at Mandasa at 6-00 P.M. on April 21, 1967, at Takkali at 7-00 P.M. on April 20, 1967 and at Palasa at 11-00 A.M. on April 21, 1967 and at other places to sponsor the candidature of the respondent to a seat in the Parliament. It was further averred that the respondent and his election agent exhorted the people at those meetings not to vote for a person who had misappropriated public funds. The respondent denied that he and his election agent had knowledge or had consented to, or were concerned with the leaflet, its printing, publishing and distribution. He also denied that he or his election agent exhorted the voters as alleged by the appellant.

14. The leaflet in question is in the form of several interrogations. The caption of the leaflet is "Peoples' Questionnaire to the Respected Minister." The relevant part of the leaflet is:

"1. Did not 18 gentlemen including Andhra Pradesh Congress Secretary Srikulapu Lokshammana Das, District Board President Sri Gorie Sriramulu Naidu, Ex-Assembly member Sri Andhavarapu Tavitayya Sri Challa Narasimhulu Naidu and others, present a memorandum in June 1966 to the Chief Minister and to the Minister for Co-operation stating that Sri Boddepalli Rajagopala Rao, who is to contest as a Congress party candidate in the Srikakulam Parliamentary Constituency bye-election on the 27th of this month, had misused like water nearly 60 lakhs of rupees of governmental monies and peoples' monies belonging to Co-operative Sugar Factory, District Co-operative Central Bank and such other co-operative institutions which were treated as his own and managed under his control? What action has been taken against it by the Government?

2. Did not your Government appoint the Regional Officer of Co-operative Societies, Panchayati Samiti, Amadalayalasa, to inquire into the affairs of the Gandhi Building Society which is managed under the control of Sri Boddepalli Narayana Murthy who is the brother of Rajagopala Rao, member of the Legislative Assembly? Could anybody deny the fact that when that officer brought to light the inner secrets and brought them to the notice of the Government, the Government on the ground that that officer did not obey their instructions, brought him out in the mid-night, beat him almost to death and broke his legs and threw him on the road? Is he not still in the hospital? When he complained to the police authorities, what action has been taken? Is there no protection under your Government to your officers who are just and impartial?

3. Did not the Supreme Court confirm the fine of Rs. 500/- imposed by the High Court on Rajagopala Rao for contempt of court because he flouted the orders of the High Court in that he by force, oppressive behaviour and threat to the Factory Manager, forcibly took all ballot papers and himself, acting as an officer, conducted the Sugar Factory elections in an irregular manner? When it is clearly stated in the Co-operative Act that such persons should not be even primary members in co-operative societies, could you tell how this person could still be in the governing body of co-operative societies?

"Could you not get a candidate who is better and who could render selfless service to people? Of course, it is difficult to get men of high and moral caliber in the 1967 model congress."

15. Section 123 (4) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, defines one of the corrupt practices, as under:

"The publication by a candidate or his election agent or by any other person with the consent of a candidate or his election agent of any statement of fact which is false, and which he either believes to be false or does not believe to be true, in relation to the personal character or conduct of any candidate, or in relation to the candidature, or withdrawal, of any candidate, being a statement reasonably calculated to prejudice the prospects of the candidate's election."

16. To constitute a corrupt practice under S. 123 (4) four conditions are required to be fulfilled: (1) that there should be publication of a statement of fact relating to the personal character or conduct of the candidate; (2) that the statement should be false; (3) that the person making it should either believe it to be false or should not believe it to be true and that the statement was reasonably calculated to prejudice the prospects of that candidate's election; and (4) that it was published by the candidate or his election agent or by any other person with the consent of a candidate or his election agent. If the publication is by a person other than the candidate or his election agent, the consent of the candidate or his election agent must be established before the charge is held proved. Proof of express consent is not necessary inference of such consent may be raised from the circumstances. Prior knowledge of the contents and the knowledge that it is likely to be published may raise an inference of consent, if the candidate deliberately keeps quiet and does not stop the publication if it be within his power. Where the offending matter has already been published and thereafter it comes to the knowledge of the candidate at the election and he does not take steps to repudiate it, the consent may not necessarily be inferred unless the candidate or his election agent permits or aids in publication. Section 100 of the Act sets out the grounds on which the election may be held to be void and one of the grounds is that if the High Court is of opinion that any corrupt practice has been committed by a returned candidate or his election agent or by any other person with the consent of a returned candidate or his election agent, the High Court shall declare the election of the returned candidate to be void. Mere commission of a corrupt practice is not sufficient: it is proof of consent of the candidate or his election agent to the commission of the corrupt practice which requires the Court to declare the election void. In the matter of publication of statements which are false and are reasonably calculated to prejudice the prospects of the candidate's election, proof of consent not infrequently assumes great importance, for, even if it be proved that the publication has been made, unless it is shown that it was with the consent of the candidate or his election agent, the corrupt practice may not be held to be committed so as to invalidate the election. Case of publication without authority or with a view to create evidence by interested persons against the candidate who is likely to be successful are not unknown.

17. It is not in dispute that the leaflet Ext. P-357 was published. The leaflet was again reasonably calculated to prejudice the prospects of the appellant's election. Parts of the leaflet related to the personal character and conduct of the appellant and were defamatory of him and were likely to lower him in the estimation of the electorate.

18. It is not necessary to decide whether the statements of fact made were false, for the High Court has held that it is not proved that the respondent or his election agent was concerned with the publication or distribution of the leaflet and we agree with that view.

19. The evidence on this part of the case may be considered in three sections: evidence relating to the printing of the leaflet; evidence relating to the distribution of the leaflet at the meetings held at several places as part of the election campaign of the respondent; and evidence relating to the making of oral statements reproducing the contents of Ext. P-357 at those meetings.

20. It is common ground that one Dola Jagannatha Rao procured the leaflet printed at Sri Ramakrishna Printing Works at Srikakulam. It was averred in the election petition that the printing expenses were defrayed by Latchanna the election agent of the respondent and that Latchanna had caused distribution of the leaflet at several meetings held by the Swatantra Party at Srikakulam on April 24, 1967; at Mandasa on April 21, 1967, at Takkali on April 20, 1967; and at Palasa on April 21, 1967. This was denied by the respondent. D. Jagannatha Rao was examined as a witness for the respondent. He deposed that he did get the leaflet printed on his own account and not at the instance of anybody else, that he defrayed the expenses and paid on April 9, 1967 the printing charges amounting to Rs. 85, that he wrote the draft of the leaflet in his house at Srikakulam; that no one else was present on that occasion, that he did not consult any other person nor did he take any other person's advice in that behalf; that before he took it to the press he did not show it to any other person, and that as the printers could not properly decipher the manuscript they got prepared a fair copy by their own employee.

20. The witness admitted that he was a Swatantra party worker and put his signature on the fair copy of the leaflet. Consent of the candidate or his election agent to the printing of the pamphlet cannot be inferred from that circumstance. To establish the consent of the respondent or his election agent to the printing of the leaflet, the appellant examined the Managing Proprietor of Sri Ramakrishna Printing Works who deposed that D. Jagannatha Rao placed with him an order for printing 10,000 copies of the leaflet Ext. P-357 and that in his books of account the name of D. Jagannatha Rao was entered as of the person who ordered printing of the leaflet. The witness stated that D. Jagannatha Rao had brought the written matter on 2 or 3 pages, and that the Manager of the Printing Press got "it fair copied" and took his signature on the fair copy which is Ext. P-358. At the time when he took delivery of the printed leaflet, D. Jagannatha Rao paid an amount of Rs. 85 for printing charges. The witness stated that one Chelapati Rao also came over to the printing press but only after D. Jagannatha Rao had paid the charges and that Chelapati Rao had nothing to do with that leaflet. In support of the evidence the witness produced Exts. P-346 and P-346/1 copies of the order and the voucher evidencing payment by D. Jagannatha Rao. This testimony fully supported the case of D. Jagannatha Rao. There was some discrepancy about the date of placing the order. D. Jagannatha Rao said that the order was placed on April 7, 1967; the Managing Proprietor said it was on April 4, 1967, but that was a minor discrepancy which did not affect the testimony of either witness.

21. This evidence did not support the case of the appellant. He examined D. Ramamurthy P.W. 26 who stated that the leaflet Ext. P-357 was drafted in the house of Latchanna by K. Chelapati Rao Patnaik to the dictation of Latchanna in the presence of Dola Jagannatha Rao, that one week thereafter the leaflets were got printed by Chelapati Rao Patnaik and Dola Jagannatha Rao, and that Latchanna gave them Rs. 300 and sent them to Srikakulam. In cross-examination the witness stated that he could not write Telugu, though he could read a little. He also admitted that he was not usually consulted in any matter, but whenever required the members of the party used only to take work from him. To explain his presence at the drafting of the leaflet he stated that Latchanna called him on April 25, 1967 at his residence, that when he reached Latchanna's place the leaflet was being drafted and that he was detained till the drafting was over and thereafter he was sent away. The witness could not explain the reason why the leaflet was not printed at Guntur. Witness D. Ramamurthy sought to support the case of the appellant on several other matters. The High Court observed that his statement was "highly artificial", that there was no reason why he should have been called by Latchanna to be a witness to the drafting of the manuscript of the leaflet, and that the "artificiality of his statement was obvious on the face of it and further his testimony did not bear scrutiny at all". Nothing has been said before us which would justify us in taking a different view.

22. Chalapati Rao, P.W. 1 was examined on behalf of the respondent. He denied that he wrote the draft or took any part in the printing of the leaflet at Latchanna's instance. He said that he had seen the leaflet for the first time only after it was printed and D. Jagannatha Rao had taken delivery and never thereafter.

23. Latchanna denied all knowledge in connection with the printing and dictation of the contents of the leaflet Ext. P-357.

24. The evidence clearly does not make out the case of the appellant. It was the case of the appellant, that Latchanna got the leaflet drafted and printed. From the mere fact that D. Jagannatha Rao was a partyman and a member of the State Council of the Swatantra Party of which Latchanna was the President, and that D. Jagannatha Rao had contested on the Swatantra Party ticket for a seat in the Andhra Pradesh Legislative Assembly in the general elections in 1967, no inference arises that the leaflet was published with the consent of the respondent or his election agent.

25. At the trial the appellant relied also upon the publication of the contents of the leaflet in two weekly newspapers — Bahujana and Vahini in their issues of April 17, 1967, and April 24, 1967 respectively. In the first newspaper the caption shows that it was a questionnaire of Srikakulam public to the Minister; and in the second newspaper the caption showed that it was a questionnaire by the Srikakulam public through D. Jagannatha Rao, President of Nogrskatakam Swatantra Party. Latchanna is the printer, publisher and editor of Bahujana. The contents which were published in the Bahujana largely tally with Ext. P-357. The caption, however, is different. Latchanna deposed that he did not send the leaflet for publication in the newspaper from Srikakulam to Hyderabad. He denied the suggestion that it was not D. Jagannatha Rao but he himself who caused the publication of the article in Bahujana. He further stated that though he was the editor of the paper he was away from Hyderabad and in his absence his brother's son G. Kranti Kumar was editing the paper, and that he came to know of the publication many days after the election was completed. There was no allegation in the petition that the publication in the Bahujana was caused by Latchanna or by the respondent. The evidence brought before the Court could not cure the defect in the pleadings. There is no evidence also that either the respondent or his election agent Latchanna had knowledge before the date of the publication or even before the date of the election of the respondent.

26. It was said that the respondent had expressed his thanks for the work done by the Vahini newspaper during the election. This was not a matter relevant to the issue under consideration, and the High Court was right in holding that it would be extending the scope of the inquiry contemplated to be made on the allegations made in the petition to hold that by reason of the publication in the Vahini and Bahujana the respondent or his election agent were guilty of any corrupt practice. In the petition it was expressly averred that the leaflet Ext. P-357 was published by the respondent and his election agent. It was not pleaded that the contents of the leaflet Ext. P-357 with some modifications were published in the Vahini and Bahujana and that by that publication a corrupt practice under S. 123 (4) was committed by the respondent.

27. The appellant also alleged that at meetings held at four places Takkali, Palasa, Mandasa and Srikakulam — these leaflets were distributed. In support of this case Suri Suryanarayana P. W. 25, D. Ramamurthi P. W. 26, Kirtichandra Rao P. W. 28, C. V. Babu Rao P. W. 29, M. Narayana Rao P. W. 30 and Sana Veerabhadra Rao P. W. 31 were examined. In rebuttal, K. Chalapati Rao Patnaik R. W. 1, Suvari Sanyasi Appa Rao R. W. 2, Bendi Appalla Suri R. W. 3, D. Kondaih Choudari R. W. 8, Garimella Kameswara Rao R. W. 11, B. Narayana Swamy R. W. 15, Narayan Dandekar R. W. 20, G. Chandraiah Naidu R. W. 21, N. Veerachari R. W. 22, Bendalam Rama Murthi R. W. 24, Allu Suryanarayana R. W. 29 and Raj Vallabh Misra R. W. 30, besides the respondent and his election agent, were examined to disprove the case of the appellant. The case of the respondent was that he was not present at any of the meetings except at Srikakulam which he attended at its concluding stage. Latchanna also denied that he was present at any of those meetings.

28. The High Court made a painstaking analysis of the evidence of the witnesses relating to the holding of the meetings and the distribution of the leaflet Ext. P-357 and the witnesses examined on behalf of the respondent, which ran into as many as 23 printed pages, and in conclusion observed:

"From the above discussion it is clear that it was Dola Jagannadha Rao himself who got printed Ext. P-357 of his own accord and neither the respondent nor his election agent was in any way concerned with it. The respondent and the election agent were in no way connected with its publication, when several thousands of copies of the pamphlet had been printed; they must of course be for purposes of distribution. Dola Jagannadha Rao could have personally distributed them or caused their distribution through others. But there is no positive evidence that these pamphlets were distributed amongst the public either by Dola Jagannadha Rao himself or by the election agent, as alleged, or to the knowledge of either the respondent or his election agent."

We see no reason to disagree with the view of the High Court on the evidence.

29. The question which remains to be considered is whether a corrupt practice falling within sub-section (6) of S. 123 was committed by the respondent. Incurring or authorizing expenditure in contravention of S. 77 is a corrupt practice. Section 77 requires that every candidate at the election shall either by himself or by his election agent keep a separate and correct account of all expenditure in connection with the election incurred or authorised by him or by his election agent between the date of publication of the notification calling the election and the date of declaration of the result thereof, both dates inclusive. By sub-section (3) of Section 77 the total of the said expenditure shall not exceed such amount as may be prescribed. For the parliamentary election an amount of Rs. 25,000/- was prescribed as the maximum amount to be spent. The respondent submitted a return disclosing expenditure of Rs. 15,834-92

30. It was averred in the election petition that the total expenditure of Rs. 15,834.92 returned by the respondent as election expenditure under Rule 86 was a "gross under-estimate of the expenses incurred by the respondent in connection with the election", that the respondent had not included in the account various items of expenditure incurred and had also "given grossly diminished figures in respect of items included therein", that "it was obvious that his accounts did not reflect the expenditure actually incurred, but it only represented a fictitious figure manipulated with a view to conform to R. 90". It was further averred that a large amount aggregating to Rs. 3 lakhs and more was spent for the purpose of the election. After setting out certain argumentative matters, it was stated in the petition that the expenditure in respect of the following items "had been suppressed or diminished or reduced in the account rendered by the respondent":

1) the amount of Rs. 1,192/- paid to Vijaya Auto Service under voucher dated April 30, 1967 for the purchase of diesel oil motor-spirit and lubricants was not included;

2.) though in fact the respondent incurred and paid an amount of Rupees 10,000/- for the purchase of motor spirit from the Esso Standard Bunk, Srikakulam, only an expenditure of about Rs. 200/- was shown in the account of election expenses;

3) that an amount of Rs. 6,000/- was spent for the purchase of motor-spirit from Esso Standard Bunk, Sompeta, but only Rs. 607-94 were shown in the account;

4) that various amounts aggregating to Rs. 10,000/- were paid at different bunks for motor spirit and diesel oil but those amounts had been deliberately suppressed from the account. Thereafter five names of the proprietors of those petrol bunks were mentioned.

The petition then proceeded to say that the total expenditure incurred on motor spirit was far in excess of Rs. 1,000/- odd shown in the account rendered, and that the motor spirit purchased during the period from the motor spirit bunks at Srikakulam, Sompeta, Itchapuram, Amadalavalasa and Takkali and other places was "ridiculously low", that a number of lorries from outside or within the District were engaged by the respondent during the last week of the election for propaganda purposes, as also on the polling day for conveying voters to the polling stations, and the expenditure on diesel oil, drivers and cleaners in respect of those vehicles had not been included in the account. The petition then referred to the expenditure on "wall posters", on printing, distributing and exhibiting them was far below the amount incurred, and only an amount of Rs. 2,081/- was shown as expenditure incurred by the respondent in his account of election expenses on that account. It was then stated that the expenditure incurred by the respondent in respect of "cycle rickshaws and jutkas" was not shown, that wages and maintenance of about 1,000 workers for about three weeks and about 1500 polling agents on the day of poll "was not accounted for", that no expenditure incurred towards boarding and lodging of the workers at the election "was accounted for"; that the amount of Rs. 4,000/- paid by the election agent of the respondent Venkayya to Sri Venkateswara Lodging & Boarding, Srikakulam was "suppressed in the account" of election expenses; and finally an amount of Rs. 500/- incurred for the purchase of voters' lists for the seven assembly constituencies was also not included.

31. The case of the appellant was sought to be proved by examining a large number of distributors at "petrol bunks" from whom motor-spirit was purchased on cash in respect of various vehicles. It was sought to be proved that a large number of vehicles were used for his election campaign by the respondent and the expenditure incurred according to the appellant exceeded Rs. 23,000/- for motor-spirit alone. A copy of a bank account maintained in the name of Latchanna with the Andhra Bank Ltd., Srikakulam, was tendered in evidence to support the case of the appellant that large amounts were withdrawn from time to time during the election days and it was suggested that all the money withdrawn was utilized by Latchanna for the election campaign of the respondent. It was the respondent's case that Latchanna did not have custody of the funds intended to be used for the election campaign, that he the respondent had kept his money for the election campaign with one Kavuri Venkaiah and that the latter spent the amount for election purposes. The respondent said that the amount spent by him was partly his own and partly received from donations. He denied that any election fund was opened by him, nor was such fund opened by Latchanna. He further stated that apart from Rs. 3,500/- provided by him in cash and Rs. 5,000/- being the proceeds of a cheque received by him as donation, a sum of Rs. 6,000/- was handed over to Kavuri Venkaiah and that some postal money orders addressed to him were received by Venkaiah in his absence. Those amounts were sent by his friends who were interested in him. The total amount that was received by way of donations or contributions from others was Rs. 18,000/- or Rs. 19,000/-. The entire amount was not spent for the election, and Venkaiah who had opened a bank account and kept the amounts in that account, returned the balance to him. According to the respondent the expenses of the election were met out of the amounts maintained in K. Venkaiah's name and not from the monies that belonged to Latchanna or the Swatantra Party or any other person. The case of the respondent was supported by Venkaiah. Latchanna also supported that case. Latchanna was the President of the State Swatantra Party. He stated that in the general elections, the Swatantra Party had spent large amounts of money and had incurred debts, and in order to pay off those debts the party had asked for donations from members of the State Party and also the Central Party, that an appeal was also made to the press to invite donations and also a request was made to the Central Party to make some grants, that in March and April 1967 some amounts were received in respect of which he maintained an account with the State Bank, Srikakulam, and a joint account in the State Bank at Sompeta in the names of his wife and himself, that certain amounts were received in his name by cheques and drafts and they were put in the joint current account at Srikakulam, but "not one pie out of this account" was used for the bye-election, and out of the amount that was left as balance after discharging debts he paid Rupees 16,000/- for the purchase of a jeep for the Central Party.

32. A mere general allegation that more than Rs. 3 lakhs were spent by the respondent or his election agent or other persons for the purposes of the election is not sufficient to make out a case under Section 123 (6) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951. It is not sufficient merely to allege that large sums of money were spent for the purpose of the election.

33. It is the case of the respondent that his friends and sympathisers sent him certain sums of money, and that whatever monies were received by him or in the name of his wife or by Venkaiah under his authority remained with Venkaiah. These receipts aggregated to Rs. 19,000 out of which Rs. 15,834-92 were spent for the election. Expenditure, if any, incurred by the party which sponsored the candidature of a candidate cannot be taken into account for the purpose of determining whether the corrupt practice within the meaning of S. 123 (7) was committed by the candidate. In Rananjava Singh v. Baijnath Singh, 1955-1 SCR 671 = (AIR 1954 SC 749) this Court held that expenditure incurred by persons other than candidate for election purposes will not be taken into account (unless it is incurred by such third person as the candidate's agent) in determining whether a corrupt practice was committed by the candidate: see also Ram Daval v. Brijraj Singh 1970-1 SCR 530 = (AIR 1970 SC 110) and Maḡraj Patodia v. R. K. Birla, C. A. No. 1069 (1094) of 1969 decided on September 10, 1970 (SC). It is true that Latchanna had from time to time withdrawn from the Andhra Bank various amounts of money. Those amounts, he says, were utilised for satisfying the debts of the party incurred in the general elections. There is no evidence to the contrary led by the appellant. Nor is there any evidence to show that the respondent had received any amount in excess of Rs. 19,000/- out of which he claimed he had spent Rs. 15,834-92.

34. A considerable body of evidence was tendered by the appellant to prove that a large number of vehicles were used for the election campaign of the respondent. Many witnesses were examined to support that case. The High Court made a detailed analysis of the evidence and held that only four vehicles Nos. APK-9486 jeep, (2) APU 7414 Ambassador-car, (3) APY-7719 Ambassador-car and (4) APG-4329 Fiat-car, were retained and used for "election purposes" and expenses for purchase of motor-spirit and oil for those vehicles during the election days were shown in the account. Besides this, in the view of the High Court two more vehicles Nos. APG-2123 and APP-97 were used for some time for the purpose of the election. These two vehicles were taken by Balaram and Chitti Babu once to Kanchili petrol bunk, and to that extent they may be held to have been used for the errand of the respondent. Taking into account this amount, the total amount in relation to the motor-spirit used for Kanchili was Rupees 1,141-13. The High Court held that on the evidence, the cash bills which were produced by the appellant in respect of the motor-spirit expenses were not connected with the motor vehicles of the respondent or of his agent or of any vehicles maintained by the respondent for election purposes. The High Court found the books of account of Vijaya Auto Service and the "petrol bunk" of Malla Satyanarayana and Brothers at Kanchili unreliable, and held that only those bill-books may be taken into consideration which recorded transactions signed by persons admitted to be the agents of the respondent. The High Court accordingly held that in addition to the amount admitted by the respondent an amount of Rs. 1,521-21 was proved. No substantial argument was advanced before us challenging the finding recorded by the learned Trial Judge on the question as to the expenditure incurred for the motor vehicles employed in the course of the election of the respondent, and we see no reason to disagree with the conclusion recorded by the High Court on a very elaborate and painstaking analysis of the evidence.

35. It was urged that as many as 1100 persons were employed by the respondent during the election days in the campaign for the respondent, and besides their remuneration, expenses for their boarding and lodging were incurred by the respondent, and that amount was not disclosed in the account filed under S. 77 (3). It was the case of the respondent that several persons had worked for the Swatantra Party candidate at the election. According to the rules of the Swatantra Party they worked voluntarily, and no remuneration was paid to any of the workers because payment of remuneration to any party workers was against the principles of that party. The High Court held that transport charges and expenses for meals for the workers were not incurred by the respondent, but by the Swatantra Party. In argument it was conceded there was nothing to show that any expenditure was incurred by the respondent for those workers. Venkaiah had, it is said, paid under the directions of Latchanna certain amounts of money for the expenses incurred for the workers of the Swatantra-Party. But in the absence of any evidence to show that any specific sums of money were expended on certain items by the respondent or his election agent, no conjecture can be permitted to defeat a candidate who has been elected.

36. Towards the boarding and lodging expenses of the workers, it appears, Simma Jagannadham, President of the District Swatantra Party, had paid Rs. 5,000/- and Rs. 1,200/- after the election. It was proved by the evidence that the party office was in the house of Simma Jagannadham. The workers were lodged and boarded at a place called Sri Venkateswara Lodging and Boarding Lodge at Sriakulam, and the expenditure incurred for them was met by Sri Venkateswara Lodge. The amounts which were paid by Simma Jagannadham were not shown to be paid towards the expenses of lodging and boarding of the workers at Sri Venkateswara Lodge. The Manager of Sri Venkateswara Lodge apparently boarded and lodged those workers free of charge. In the absence of any reliable evidence to the contrary, the finding of the High Court that no expenditure was incurred in respect of those workers by the respondent must be accepted.

37. The appellant's case that expenditure was incurred for "wall posters" and for printing, distributing and exhibiting them amounting to Rs. 2,081/- was not pressed, nor was the case about the expenditure incurred in respect of "cycle-rickshaws and jutkas" pressed before us. Even if it be granted that an amount of Rupee 500/- which was incurred for purchasing voters' lists be taken into account the total amount proved to have been expended by the respondent does not exceed Rs. 25,000/- prescribed under the Act.

38. We have carefully considered the evidence in the light of the arguments advanced at the Bar, and we are of the view that no case is made out for our interference with the conclusion recorded by the High Court.

39. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(V 58 C 68)

(From: Bombay)*

J. M. SHELAT AND C. A. VAIDIALINGAM, JJ.

Shankar Madhoji Nemade, Appellant v. Ghisuji Janaji Bhadke and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 85 of 1967, D/- 8-9-1970.

(A) Constitution of India, Article 136 — Revocation of special leave — Special leave application should not contain any untrue or false statements either in material particulars or on matters of importance or valuation — If proved to contain such statements which misled Supreme Court, leave granted will be revoked — Leave application adopting mistaken valuation given by High Court in its judgment — No deliberate attempt to mislead Court — Statement as to valuation not of much importance due to important points of law arising for decision in case — Leave held should not be cancelled. (Paras 8, 11 and 13)

(B) Constitution of India, Article 136 — Appeal by special leave — Costs — Normally costs should follow event — Appellant though successful not awarded costs on ground that he should have been more careful in giving valuation in special leave petition — (Civil P. C. (1908), Section 35). (Para 39)

(C) Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region and Kutch Area) Act (99 of 1958), Sections 52 and 132 (2) (i) — Interpretation of — 'Protected lessee' in Berar — Landlord terminating tenancy on ground of requirement of personal cultivation and obtaining possession under Section 9, Berar Act (28 of 1951) — Section 52 of Bombay Act applies to all cases where possession is taken by landlord on or after 30-12-1958, and also to cases where two years personal cultivation required by Section 9 (6) read with Rule 9 of Berar Act had not been completed on 30-12-1958 — In such cases period of 2 years is extended to 12 years and if landlord has before expiry of 12 years transferred land tenant is entitled to restoration of possession — Special Civil Appln. No. 831 of 1965, D/- 19-8-1966 (Bom. at Nag), Reversed — AIR 1967 Bom 158 (FB), partially Overruled. (Tenancy Laws — Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act (24 of 1951), Sections 9 (1) and (6) read with Rule 9 framed under Section 22).

Section 52 of the Bombay Act has to be interpreted in the light of Section 132 (2) (i) of that Act. Section 52 applies to all cases where possession is taken by the landlord on or after December 30, 1958 on the basis of an order obtained against a protected lessee under Section 9 of the Berar Act. It also applies to cases where possession had been taken by a landlord under the Berar Act but the two years period of personal cultivation had not been completed when the Bombay Act came into force. If the landlord on December 30, 1958 had completed the two years period of personal cultivation, his right not to be disturbed is continued and preserved under Section 132 (2) (i) of the Bombay Act. Again if the landlord in pursuance of an order obtained under the Berar Act, takes possession, after the commencement of the Bombay Act, Section 52 applies to him and his original obligation to cultivate personally for two years under the Berar Act gets extended by the 12 years period provided under that section. If he ceases to so cultivate land due to transfer by him within the period of 12 years from his taking possession, the tenant gets a right to apply for restoration of the land. Special Civil Appln. No. 831 of 1965, D/- 19-6-1966 (Bom. at Nag.), Reversed; AIR 1966 SC 557, Explained and Distinguished. (Paras 32, 33, 36 and 37)

The decision of the Full Bench in AIR 1967 Bom 158 laying down that the taking of possession of the land by the landlord after 30-12-1958 is the sole test for determining the applicability of Section 52 of the Bombay Act (99 of 1958) is too broad and is not correct. (Para 30)

Dr. W. S. Barlingay, Sr. Advocate (Mr. A. G. Ratnaparkhi, Advocate, with him), for Appellant; M/s. M. S. Gupta and S. K. Dhingra, Advocates, for Respondent No. 1.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by VAIDIALINGAM, J.:— The appellant was a protected lessee within the meaning of the expression contained in the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951 (Act 24 of 1951) (hereinafter called the Berar Act) in respect of the suit lands bearing survey No. 23 of an extent of 7 acres and 4 gunthas under the 5th respondent herein who was then the original owner of the lands. The 5th respondent served on the appellant (hereinafter called the tenant) a notice dated December 28, 1955 under Section 9 (1) of the Berar Act terminating the tenancy of the appellant on the ground that he required the lands for personal cultivation; and he also submitted an application to the Revenue Officer under Section 8 (1) (g) of the Berar Act for an order determining the tenancy. The 5th respondent obtained an order from the Revenue Officer on May 15, 1956 directing the tenant to surrender possession of the lands. The 5th respondent in pursuance of the order of the Revenue Officer obtained possession of the lands on April 4, 1957 and continued in such possession till June 21, 1961, on which date he transferred the suit lands to the first respondent (hereinafter to be referred as the landlord) and got in exchange 8 acres in survey No. 33 plus an amount of Rs. 13,000/-. In the meanwhile on Dec. 30, 1958 the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region and Kutch Area) Act of 1958 (Act No. XCIX of 1958) (hereinafter called the Bombay Act) came into force.

2. The tenant filed an application under Sec. 52 of the Bombay Act before the Naib Tahsildar, Achalpur against respondents Nos. 1 and 5 for restoration of the possession of the suit lands on the ground that the original owner, the 5th respondent, had ceased to cultivate the lands personally within the period of 12 years after obtaining possession of the lands on April 4, 1957. The Naib Tahsildar by his order dated November 14, 1962 dismissed the application on the ground that Section 52 does not apply and hence the application was not maintainable. On appeal by the tenant the Special Deputy Collector, Amravati by his order June 30, 1964 reversed the decision of the Naib Tahsildar and directed the landlord to restore possession of the lands as prayed for by the tenant. The first respondent's revision challenging the order of the Special Deputy Collector was dismissed on August 5, 1965 by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal. The Revenue Tribunal while dismissing the revision petition, inter alia, held that the tenant was a protected lessee and that in pursuance of the proceedings taken by the 5th respondent in terms of the notice under Section 9 (1) of the Berar Act, the tenant was deprived of the lands and his tenancy rights on the ground of personal cultivation by the then owner of the lands. The Tribunal further held that as the 5th respondent had transferred the suit lands in favour of the first respondent on June 21, 1961, the former must be considered to have failed to use the lands for the purposes specified in his notice within 12 years from the date on which he took possession and in consequence the tenant was entitled to be restored to possession under Section 52 of the Bombay Act. On this reasoning the Revenue Tribunal confirmed the order of restoration passed by the Special Deputy Collector in favour of the tenant.

3. The first respondent filed a writ petition under Article 227 of the Constitution, being Special Civil Application No. 831 of 1965, in the High Court of Bombay (Nagpur Bench) challenging the orders for restoration passed against him by the Special Deputy Collector and the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal. The High Court by its judgment and order dated August 19, 1966 has set aside the orders of the Special Deputy Collector and the Revenue Tribunal, thus restoring the order of the Naib Tahsildar and has dismissed the application for restoration filed by the tenant. The tenant challenges the decision of the High Court in this appeal by special leave.

4. The High Court in its order under appeal has recorded the following findings: The original owner, the 5th respondent, was entitled to terminate the lease of the tenant by giving a notice under Section 9 (1) of the Berar Act. He accordingly terminated the tenancy by giving notice dated December 23, 1955. After initiating proceedings under Section 8 (1) (g) read with Section 19 (1) of the Berar Act, the owner also obtained possession of the lands on April 4, 1957. Under the Berar Act there was a duty cast on the landlord to cultivate the lands personally for a period of 2 years and in this case the 5th respondent has complied with this requirement. As possession was taken from the tenant by the 5th respondent when the Berar Act was in operation and as the latter had cultivated the lands for a period of 2 years, as required by Section 9 (6) of the Berar Act, the tenant had ceased to have any rights after the expiry of the period of 2 years and hence Section 52 of the Bombay Act was not applicable and it follows that the application for restoration under that section filed by the tenant was not maintainable. The position is concluded against the tenant by an earlier Full Bench decision of the High Court reported in Saraswati-bai v. Bhikamchand Premasukhdas, (1966) 68 Bom LR 954 = (AIR 1967 Bom 158) (FB) wherein it had been held that when possession of the lands had been taken before coming into force of the Bombay Act, the rights and liabilities of the parties are governed by the Berar Act and that Section 52 of the Bombay Act has no retrospective operation. On these findings the High Court by its order allowed the writ petition of the first respondent.

5. Dr. Barkingay, learned counsel for the appellant, has urged that having due regard to the scheme of the Berar and Bombay Acts, the High Court's view that Section 52 of the Bombay Act has no application, is erroneous. In this case, he pointed out that Bombay Act has come into force on December 30, 1958 even before the expiry of the period of two years from April 4, 1957, on which date the original owner, the 5th respondent, had re-entered into possession after terminating the lease. Section 52 of the Bombay Act contains provisions substantially similar to Section 9 (6) of the Berar Act which was repealed and the only change was that the Bombay Act enlarged the period for which the landlord was required to continue to cultivate land personally from two years to 12 years. As the enlarged period under the Bombay Act has come into operation before the expiry of the shorter period under the Berar Act, which was repealed, the landlord was bound to conform to the requirements of the larger period provided under the Bombay Act. In this case the 5th respondent had transferred the suit lands to the first respondent on June 21, 1961 and hence there has been a failure in law on the part of the 5th respondent to utilise the lands for the purpose of personal cultivation for the period mentioned in S. 52 of the Bombay Act and so the said section fully applies and the dismissal of the tenant's application for restoration by the High Court is opposed to the mandatory provisions of the Bombay Act. The counsel, further pointed out that in the Full Bench decision, on which the present judgment of the High Court is rested is not applicable for the reason that the Full Bench was dealing with a case where the period provided under Section 9 (6) of the Berar Act had already expired before the coming into force of the Bombay Act, whereas in the case on hand even before the expiry of that two years' period the Bombay Act has come into force. This material difference has not been noted in the present order by the High Court. He further urged that if the Full Bench decision applies, as held by the High Court, it should be held by this Court that the Full Bench decision is not correct.

6. Mr. M. S. Gupta, learned counsel for the first respondent landlord raised a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal and prayed for cancellation of the special leave granted by this Court on January 11, 1967. According to him the appellant has made deliberately certain false statements in his application for grant of special leave. We will revert to this aspect a little later. On merits Mr. Gupta contended that the obligation of his client's transferor, the 5th respondent, after obtaining possession of the lands from the tenant under the Berar Act was only to cultivate the lands for two years. Admittedly in this case the 5th respondent had cultivated the lands for the said period of two years and the obligation incurred by him under Section 9 (6) of the Berar Act having been duly complied with, Section 132 (2) of the Bombay Act stands attracted. The counsel pointed out that Sec. 132 deals with repeals and savings. Sub-section (1) had repealed the enactments specified in Schedule I to the extent specified in column No. 4 of the said Schedule. Schedule I shows that the Berar Act has been repealed in its entirety. Notwithstanding the repeal sub-section (2) has saved certain matters and one of the matters so saved is the obligation or liability already incurred before the commencement of the Bombay Act. The 5th respondent, who had incurred the obligation or liability to cultivate the lands for two years under the Berar Act before the commencement of the Bombay Act, has discharged the said obligation or liability and hence the tenant has no further rights which he can enforce. He also urged that S. 52 protects even cases where possession has been taken after the coming into force of the Bombay Act on the basis of an order for restoration obtained under the Berar Act. In support of this contention he relied on the decision in Ramchandra v. Tukaram, (1966) 1 SCR 594 = (AIR 1966 SC 557).

7. Before we deal with the merits we will now dispose of the preliminary objection raised by Mr. Gupta and praying for cancellation of special leave granted by this Court. According to the learned counsel the appellant has deliberately made certain false statements in the application for grant of special leave and has misguided the Court. He also drew our attention to the statements made in paragraph 6 of the application where-in the appellant has stated that the 5th respondent had transferred the suit lands in favour of the first respondent on June 21, 1961 by taking in exchange 8 acres of land plus a sum of Rs. 30,000/-. Again in paragraph 10 of the petition the appellant has stated that his claim in these proceedings is for restoration of possession of the lands measuring 7 acres and 4 gunthas, the market value of which happens to be more than Rs. 20,000/-, and that this fact is further strengthened because of the 5th respondent exchanging his lands with the first respondent for a sum of Rs. 30,000/- plus 8 acres of land. The appellant has filed an affidavit stating that the statements contained in the special leave petition 'are true and correct to the best of my personal knowledge'. From these statements Mr. Gupta pointed out that it is clear that the appellant has categorically stated that the value of the lands concerned in this appeal is over Rs. 20,000/- and he has also specifically stated that the suit lands were exchanged for Rs. 30,000/- plus 8 acres of lands and these statements have been affirmed to be true to the personal knowledge of the appellant.

8. Mr. Gupta pointed out that these statements regarding valuation are absolutely false to the knowledge of the appellant as will be clear from the value given in the writ petition filed by the respondent in the High Court. In para I of the writ petition the first respondent has stated that the 5th respondent after transferring the suit lands of 7 acres and 4 gunthas has taken in exchange from him 8 acres of land and a sum of Rs. 13,000/-. Thus making a total of Rs. 19,000/-. In the affidavit filed along with the writ petition the first respondent has again stated that the amount received from him along with 8 acres of land was Rs. 13,000 and the total value of the lands being only Rs. 19,000/-. He also drew our attention to the recitals in the judgment printed in the appeal records wherein the exchange has been stated as being of 8 acres of land plus a sum of Rs. 13,000. In view of these circumstances, the counsel points out that the statements made by the appellant, which have been affirmed to be true to his knowledge about valuation of the suit lands being over Rs. 20,000/- and the exchange having been obtained of 8 acres and Rs. 30,000/- are false and have been deliberately made to mislead the Court so as to obtain special leave making it appear that the requirement regarding valuation is satisfied. Mr. Gupta drew our attention to the decisions of this Court, namely, Hari Narain v. Badri Das, 1964-2 SCR 203 = (AIR 1963 SC 1558), Sita Bai v. Soni Vanji Wani, Civil Appeal No. 982 of 1965 D/- 25-4-1968 (SC) and S. R. Shetty v. Phirozeshah Nuserwanji, Civil Appeal No. 155 of 1963 D/- 5-4-1963 (SC). Mr. Gupta pointed out that in all these decisions when there has been false statements made on material particulars or matters of importance either on facts or about valuation, this Court had cancelled special leave already granted. The proposition enunciated by Mr. Gupta that the statements in the special leave application should not contain any untrue or false statements either in material particulars or on matters of importance or about valuation is certainly laid down in those decisions and the requirement in this regard cannot be overemphasised. In (1964) 2 SCR 203 = (AIR 1963 SC 1558) this Court held that the special leave petition contained inaccurate, untrue and misleading statements and cancelled special leave already granted. This Court observed at p. 209 (of SCR) = (at p. 1560 of AIR) as follows:

"It is of utmost importance that in making material statements and setting forth grounds in applications for special leave, care must be taken not to make any statements which are inaccurate, untrue or misleading. In dealing with applications for special leave, the Court naturally takes statements of fact and grounds of fact contained in the petitions at their face value and it would be unfair to betray the confidence of the Court by making statements which are untrue and misleading."

9. From the facts in that case it will be seen that the material statements made in the special leave petition were false.

10. In Civil Appeal No. 982 of 1965, D/- 25-4-1968 (SC) this Court held that in the special leave petition there was a misrepresentation of facts on a matter of importance, though it was not possible to say that when granting special leave these untrue facts had misled the Court. It has been further emphasised in this decision that the appellant had deliberately made untrue statements on matters of importance and that they were not the result of inadvertence. Similarly in Civil Appeal No. 155 of 1963, D/- 5-4-1963 (SC) a statement had been made regarding the value of the subject-matter as being above Rs. 20,000/- though the suit had been valued only in the sum of Rs. 500/- and court fee paid on that valuation. This Court held that the statements of valuation in the plaint, namely, Rs. 500/- cannot be reconciled with the statement regarding valuation in the special leave application and this Court took the view that the valuation has been deliberately inflated with a view to getting over the preliminary hurdle as regards valuation. In this view special leave granted was revoked.

11. If it is held that there has been an untrue averment regarding material statements or a false statement on matters of importance or a deliberate untrue statement regarding valuation has been made to mislead this Court, it cannot be gainsaid that the special leave granted by this Court will have to be revoked.

12. Dr. Barlingay pointed out that there has been no untrue or false statement made by his client on any material particular nor has any statement been deliberately made to mislead the Court so as to enable his client to obtain special leave. On the other hand, the counsel pointed out, that in the certified copy of the judgment of the High Court furnished to his client and which has been filed in this Court clearly shows that in the said copy the High Court has stated that the 5th respondent obtained an exchange from the first respondent 8 acres of land plus a sum of Rs. 30,000/-. That mistaken value given in the High Court judgment has been adopted in the special leave petition. The points that have been raised in the special leave petition are all questions of law relating to legal effect of possession under the Berar Act after coming into force of the Bombay Act. The valuation given in the certified copy of the High Court judgment was incorporated in the special leave petition filed as early as January 11, 1967. He further pointed out that on March 28, 1967 his client had moved the High Court for correcting the High Court's judgment by deleting the valuation of Rs. 30,000/- and substitute the same by correct figure of Rs. 13,000/-. The counsel for both the parties agreed before the High Court that the figure of Rs. 30,000/- contained in the judgment was an error and that the correct figure should be Rs. 13,000/-. The High Court accordingly by its order dated April 17, 1967 corrected the judgment by stating that the valuation of Rupees 30,000/- should be corrected to Rupees 13,000/-. That order was passed nearly three months after the special leave application was filed in this Court. In view of the fact that his client and the counsel acting for him at the time of drafting the petition for special leave adopted the valuation given in the certified copy of the High Court's judgment, Dr. Earlingay pointed out that there has been no untrue or false statement given by his client so as to justify revocation of the leave already granted.

13. We have given due consideration to all these aspects presented before us by both the learned counsel and we are of the view that in the particular circumstances of this case it cannot be said that the appellant is guilty of making any false or untrue statement on any material particulars or matters of importance or regarding valuation. The mistake committed by the appellant regarding valuation was the result of the mistaken value given by the High Court itself in its judgment, which was corrected only long afterwards. No doubt, the appellant who is a party to the proceedings should have been a little more careful, but that does not disclose any deliberate attempt on his part to mislead this Court. Further the statement regarding valuation is not of much consequence in this case because the questions arising for decision are really points of law regarding applicability of either the Berar or Bombay Acts. Therefore, Mr. Gupta has not been able to make out a case for cancelling the special leave already granted.

14. We will now proceed to consider the appeal on merits. The suit land was originally in the Vidharbha Region, which before the passing of Bombay Act of 1958 was part of the State of Madhya Pradesh and the tenancy of the appellant was governed by the Berar Act. As proceedings had been taken by the 5th respondent for evicting the appellant and for possession of the land under the Berar Act it is necessary to refer to some of the material provisions of that statute.

15. Section 2 (h) defines a protected lessee as 'a protected lessee within the meaning of S. 3.' Section 3 enumerates various lessees who are protected lessees. There is no controversy that the appellant before us was a protected lessee under the Berar Act. Section 3 (1) enumerates in cls. (a) to (g) the grounds on which the lease of a land held by a protected lessee can be got terminated under the orders of a Revenue Officer. One of the grounds for eviction is provided under cl. (g) of S. 8 (1), namely, lessee having been served with the notice by a landholder as provided in S. 9. Section 9 deals with the right of the landholder to terminate the lease of a protected lessee. Sub-sections (1) and (6) of the said section which are material for the present purpose are as follows:

Section 9(1). Notwithstanding anything contained in Sec. 8 the landholder may terminate the lease of a protected lessee by giving him notice in writing delivered not less than three months before the commencement of the next agricultural year stating therein the reasons for such termination and the description of the area in respect of which it is proposed to terminate the lease, if the landholder requires the lands for cultivating the land personally.

Section 9 (6). If on re-entering upon any land after termination of the lease of a protected lessee in accordance with this section, a landholder fails at any time during such period as may be prescribed to utilise the land for the purpose for which the lease was terminated, the dispossessed lessee may apply to the Revenue Officer to put him in possession of the land from the commencement of the agricultural year next following and the Revenue Officer shall, after hearing the landholder and making such enquiry as he deems fit, put the lessee in possession of the land if he is satisfied of the failure and also award him such sum by way of compensation as the Revenue Officer may consider sufficient".

16. Section 19(1) provides for a landholder applying to the Revenue Officer to eject a protected lessee against whom an order for the termination of the lease had been passed under Section 8 or 9. Section 22 gives power to the State Government to make rules as stated therein. Under clause (3) of Section 22 (2) rules can be made regarding 'the period under sub-section (6) of Section 9'. Rules have been framed under Section 22 and in particular Rule 9 prescribes 'such period as that of two years'. Hence it will be seen that Section 9(6) read with Rule 9 requires the landholder who terminated the tenancy of his protected lessee on the ground that the land was required by him for his personal cultivation, to cultivate the land personally for a period of two years. Under the Berar Act, after having entered upon the land, if the landholder fails to cultivate the land personally during the above period, then S. 9 (6) confers a right on the former protected lessee to apply to the Revenue Officer for being restored to possession.

17. We have already indicated that the Bombay Act came into force on December 30, 1958. The material provisions to be referred to in the said statute are Ss. 52 (1) and 132. Section 52 (1) runs as follows:

"Landlord to restore possession if he fails to cultivate within one year:

Section 52 (1): Where after terminating the tenancy of any land under S. 9 of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951, or under section 38, 39 or 39A of this Act, the landlord has taken possession of such land and he fails to use the land for the purpose specified in the notice given under the said S. 9 or as the case may be within one year from the date on which he took possession or ceases to use it at any time for any of the aforesaid purposes within twelve years from the date on which he took such possession, the landlord shall forthwith restore possession of the land to the tenant whose tenancy was terminated by him, unless he has obtained from the tenant his refusal in writing to accept the tenancy on the same terms and conditions or has offered in writing to give possession of the land to the tenant on the same terms and conditions and the tenant has failed to accept the offer within three months of the receipt thereof:

Provided that no refusal of the tenant shall be valid unless it has been verified before the Tahsildar in the prescribed manner."

18. Section 132 relates to repeals and savings. Sub-section (1) states that the provisions of the enactments specified in Schedule I are repealed to the extent specified in column 4 of the said Schedule. It may be stated at this stage that one of the enactments so repealed was the Berar Act in its entirety. Sub-section (3) is not relevant. Sub-section (2) of S. 132 on which some reliance has been placed by both the parties is as follows:

"Repeals and Savings:

Section 132 (2): Nothing in sub-section (1) shall, save as expressly provided in this Act, affect or be deemed to affect —

(i) any right, title, interest, obligation or liability already acquired, accrued or incurred before the commencement of this Act, or

(ii) any legal proceeding or remedy in respect of any such right, title, interest, obligation or liability or anything done or suffered before the commencement of this Act, and any such proceedings shall be instituted, continued and disposed of as if this Act had not been passed".

19. We have already referred to the fact that the 5th respondent had issued the necessary notice terminating the tenancy of the appellant on December 28, 1955 under S. 9 (1) and after initiating proceedings under Section 8 (1) (g) read with S. 19 (1) he obtained an order for possession as against the appellant from the Revenue Officer on May 15, 1956, and had also obtained possession of the lands on April 4, 1957. All these proceedings were under the Berar Act before the coming into force of the Bombay Act. The 5th respondent continued in such possession of the lands till June 21, 1961, on which date he transferred the suit lands to the first respondent in exchange for certain other lands. The appellant filed an application for restoration seeking relief on the ground that the 5th respondent had ceased to be in possession of the lands within twelve years from April 4, 1957.

20. Therefore the short question that arises for consideration is whether S. 52 of the Bombay Act applies to those lands the possession of which was obtained by the landlord under S. 9 of the Berar Act but in respect of which the period of two years' disability as imposed under Section 9 (6) read with rule 9 of the Rules was not over before the coming into operation of the Bombay Act.

21. From the scheme of the Berar and Bombay Acts, it will be noted that while S. 52 of the Bombay Act enlarged the period of personal cultivation to 12 years, the Berar Act had provided for personal cultivation only for a period of 2 years. Under the Berar Act if the landlord does not personally cultivate for 2 years, the tenant can apply for restoration of possession from the landlord. Similarly under the Bombay Act, if the landlord had ceased to cultivate the land within a period of 12 years, from the date of taking possession, the tenant can apply for restoration.

22. We have already referred to the fact that Mr. Gupta, learned counsel for the respondent, has relied on the decision of this Court in (1966) 1 SCR 594 = (AIR 1966 SC 557) in support of his proposition that S. 52 of the Bombay Act applies, even to cases where possession has been taken after the coming into force of the Bombay Act in pursuance of an order for restoration obtained by the landlord under the Berar Act. We have gone through the above decision and we are of the opinion that it does not lay down any such proposition. The question that arose for consideration therein was a totally different one. In that case one X was a protected lessee under the Berar Act and the landlord had terminated the tenancy under Section 9 (1) on the ground of personal cultivation and had also submitted an application to the Revenue Officer under S. 8 (1) (g) for an order terminating the tenancy. The Revenue Officer determined the tenancy by order dated July 2, 1957 and made it effective from April 1, 1958. But before the latter date, Ordinance No. 4 of 1957 was promulgated, which in turn was replaced by the Bombay Act IX of 1958. The said Act had imposed a ban on eviction of tenants and had also stayed all such proceedings pending on the date of commencement of the said Act. The landlord had applied on May 15, 1958 to the Naib Tahsildar for an order for restoration of possession of the land by the tenant. The Bombay Act which repealed the Berar Act and the Bombay Act No. IX of 1958 came into force on December 30, 1958, on which date the application filed by the landlord for restoration was pending before the Naib Tahsildar. There was a controversy as to the nature of relief that could be granted to the landlord. Having due regard to S. 132 (2) (ii) and (3) of the Bombay Act, this Court held that the application, filed by the landlord for restoration of possession on the basis of the order obtained under S. 8 (1) (g) of the Berar Act and which was pending when the Bombay Act came into force must be treated as an application under S. 19 of the Berar Act and had to be tried and disposed of by the appropriate authority. This Court further held that the application of the landlord being a pending proceeding in respect of a right acquired before the Bombay Act, it had to be continued and disposed of as if the Bombay Act had not been passed. It was further held that in so disposing of the application, treating it as one under S. 19 of the Berar Act, there was no scope for the application of the conditions and restrictions prescribed by sub-sections (3) and (4) of Section 38 of the Bombay Act as those provisions do not apply to proceedings to enforce rights acquired when the Berar Act was in operation. This judgment, in our opinion, does not support the landlord in the case before us.

23. We have already referred to the fact that the High Court, in its order under appeal, has held that Section 52 of the Bombay Act does not apply to the present case as the landlord had cultivated the land for two years though a part of that period was after the commencement of the Bombay Act. The High Court has also stated that S. 52 of the said Act will have no application to the case on hand inasmuch as the landlord had obtained possession on April 4, 1957 long before the coming into force of the Bombay Act. For this proposition, the High Court has relied on an earlier decision of a Full Bench of the same Court in (1966) 68 Bom LR 954 = (AIR 1967 Bom 158). According to Dr. Barlingay, the High Court's view that even if a landlord completes the period of two years personal cultivation, as required under section 9 (6) of the Berar Act, after the coming into force of the Bombay Act, the larger period provided under Section 52 does not apply, is not correct. We have already stated that Dr. Barlingay has further urged that the Full Bench decision of the Bombay High Court does not apply and if that applies, the said decision must be held to be erroneous.

24. As the decision under appeal is substantially rested on the decision of the Full Bench, it is necessary to examine the scope of the Full Bench decision. But we may straightway say that the High Court's view that the Full Bench has held that S. 52 will not apply to cases where the two years' period is completed even after the Bombay Act came into force is not correct, because the Full Bench has not laid down any such proposition. The Full Bench has only held that Section 52 applies to cases where a landlord takes possession of the land on determination of a tenancy either under S. 9 of the Berar Act or under Sections 38, 39 or 39A of the Bombay Act, after the latter Act has come into force.

25. The facts in the Full Bench case were briefly as follows: X, a landlord obtained possession on July 3, 1955 of certain lands from his tenant under the Berar Act on the ground that he required the same for personal cultivation. After the death of X on October 28, 1955, his heirs inherited the property and continued in possession of the same till February 9, 1959, on which date they sold the lands to one S. After purchase by S, the original tenant applied under S. 52 of the Bombay Act for restoration of possession on the ground that the landlord had ceased to use the property for a period of 12 years as required by the Section. The heirs of X and the purchaser S, were both made parties to the said application and relief was asked for against both of them. At this stage it may be mentioned that the Bombay Act came into force on December 30, 1958.

26. From the facts stated above, it will be seen that the landlord had obtained possession from the tenant on July 3, 1955 and he and his heirs had completed the requirement of Section 9 (6) of the Berar Act, namely, two years personal cultivation on July 3, 1957, long before the Bombay Act came into force. After having completed the said two years' period, the heirs were in possession not only on the date of the coming into force of the Bombay Act, but also till the date of sale to S. (February 9, 1959). The question naturally arose whether Section 52 of the Bombay Act will apply when the two years' period under the Berar Act had expired before December 12, 1958. There appears to have been earlier single Judge's decisions of the Bombay High Court holding that S. 52 of the Bombay Act will apply to cases where possession has been taken after the Bombay Act had come into force and also to cases where the period of 2 years' personal cultivation by the landlord had been completed even before the coming into force of the Bombay Act. Mr. Justice Wagle, before whom the matter came in the first instance expressed doubt about the correctness of the earlier decisions. Mr. Justice Wagle was inclined to take the view that S. 52 of the Bombay Act would apply only to those lands, the possession of which was obtained by the landlord under S. 9 of the Berar Act, but in respect of which the period of two years' disability as imposed under S. 9 (6) read with Rule 9 of the Rules was not over before the coming into force of the Bombay Act. As the learned Judge was inclined to take the view, which was in conflict with the previous view of the Bombay High Court, he referred the matter to a Division Bench, which in turn referred the matter to the Full Bench.

27. From what is stated above, it will be seen that in that case possession of the lands was taken by the landlord, from the tenant under the Berar Act and the two years' period as required under S. 9 (6) of the said

Act had also expired before the coming into force of the Bombay Act. The transfer in favour of S., no doubt, was made long after December 28, 1958. In the case before us the landlord had obtained possession under the Berar Act on April 4, 1957 and he had not completed the two years' period under S. 9 (6) of the Berar Act on December 30, 1958. We are only referring to these dates to show that the Full Bench decision did not have occasion to directly tackle the problem that arises for consideration before us. But nevertheless there are certain broad principles laid down in that decision, the correctness of which will have to be considered by us. The Full Bench posed the following two questions for consideration:

"1. Whether the provisions of section 52 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region and Kutch Area) Act, 1958 are attracted to cases where the lease of a protected lessee had been determined by the landholder under section 9 of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951 and possession thereof taken prior to the date the new Tenancy Act came into force and the landholder continued to personally cultivate the land on the date the new Act came into force.

2. If the answer to the first question is in the affirmative, whether the expiry of two years prior to the coming into force of the new Act would have any bearing on the application of section 52."

The first question, it will be noted, refers to the effect of taking possession by the landlord before December 30, 1958 and his still being in possession on the date of the coming into force of the Bombay Act. The second question refers to the effect of the expiry of two years prior to the coming into force of the Bombay Act.

28. So far as the first question is concerned, the learned Judges held that S. 52 of the Bombay Act would be attracted only to such cases where a landlord takes possession after determination of tenancy either under S. 9 of the Berar Act or under Ss. 38, 39 or 39A of the Bombay Act, after the Bombay Act has come into force. So far as the second question is concerned, the learned Judges have not expressed any opinion on the ground that it does not survive on the view expressed by them on the first question.

29. It will be noted from a reading of the Full Bench judgment that the learned Judges have placed considerable emphasis for the applicability of S. 52 of the Bombay Act about the landlord taking possession after the Bombay Act has come into force. If possession had been taken before December 30, 1958, according to the Full Bench, S. 52 does not apply; whereas if possession is taken after the said date, the said section will apply. For coming to this conclusion the Full Bench has given considerable importance to the fact that Section 52 refers also to Ss. 38, 39 and 39-A of the Bombay Act and that it uses the expression "landlord has taken possession of such land and he fails to use the land." These expressions, according to the Full Bench, can refer only to cases of lands taken possession by a landlord after the Bombay Act has come into force as S. 52 is not retrospective.

30. In our opinion, the Full Bench has too broadly stated the principles regarding the circumstances under which S. 52 of the Bombay Act will apply. If taking possession of the land by the landlord after December 30, 1958, is the sole test for the applicability of S. 52, the position, in our view, will be very anomalous. For instance if a landlord had taken possession on December 29, 1958, S. 52 will not apply and the requirement of two years' personal cultivation may not also become necessary as the Berar Act stands repealed as on December 30, 1958. Similarly if the landlord had taken possession and had also complied with the requirement of two years' personal cultivation long before December 30, 1958, but nevertheless if he is in possession of the land on December 30, 1958, according to the Full Bench, Section 52 will stand attracted. No doubt the Full Bench has not answered the second question posed before it, but the reasoning of the decision will be to that effect if the test of possession on December 30, 1958 is the only criteria.

31. We are of the opinion that the question of S. 52 being retrospective or not has no material bearing in interpreting that section. That section had necessarily to refer Sections 38, 39 and 39A as they were also provisions enabling a landlord to get possession from a lessee. It is in the light of these matters that the expressions occurring therein have to be given their natural meaning. The Full Bench has misinterpreted that section.

32. In interpreting S. 52, in our opinion, S. 132 (2) (i) will be helpful. The obligation of the landlord when he takes possession of the land from the tenant under the Berar Act is to cultivate it personally for two years and once the landlord complies with that requirement before the Bombay Act came into force, the tenant's right to get restoration stands extinguished as the landlord has discharged his obligation.

33. Section 52 of the Bombay Act extends the period of personal cultivation to 12 years to all cases to which it applies. If the landlord had taken possession under the Berar Act, there was an obligation on him to cultivate personally for two years and if he had not so cultivated, the tenant had acquired a right to be restored to possession. That right which has been acquired by the tenant or accrued to him before the commencement of the Bombay Act is saved under Section 132 (2) (i). Similarly, if the landlord had cultivated the lands personally for the required period, before the Bombay Act came into force, the landlord had acquired a right not to be disturbed from his possession thereafter. That right again, which has been acquired by landlord or accrued to him, has been saved under Section 132 (2) (i). Having due regard to the provisions of the two statutes and what has been stated by us earlier the position is that if the landlord on December 30, 1958 had completed the two years period of personal cultivation, his right not to be disturbed is continued and preserved under Section 132 (2) (i) of the Bombay Act. Again if the landlord in pursuance of an order obtained under the Berar Act, takes possession, after the commencement of the Bombay Act, Section 52 applies to him and his original obligation to cultivate personally for two years under the Berar Act gets extended by the 12 years period provided under that section. If he ceases to so cultivate within the period of 12 years from his taking possession, the tenant gets a right to apply for restoration of the land.

34. The several aspects enumerated above have not been considered by the Full Bench of the Bombay High Court and it has rested its decision for applying Section 52 by applying the sole test whether the landlord has taken possession before or after December 30, 1958. Such a test is not warranted by the provisions of both the statutes read together. A fair reading of Section 52 also, in our opinion, leads to the same conclusion. Section 52 provides for:

(i) the tenancy being terminated under Section 9 of the Berar Act;

(ii) the landlord taking possession of such land on the basis of such termination of the tenancy;

(iii) the landlord failing to use the land for the purpose specified in the notice under Section 9 of the Berar Act;

(iv) failure to use the land for the purpose mentioned in the notice within one year from the date on which he took possession;

(v) the landlord ceasing to use the land for the purpose for which he obtains possession within 12 years of his taking possession.

35. To the case of a landlord who had already completed two years personal cultivation before Dec. 30, 1958, the requirement of his failing to use the land for the purpose specified in the notice under Section 9 within one year from the date of his taking possession, will have no application whatsoever. The normal and reasonable construction to be placed upon Section 52 is that it will apply only to cases of lands, the possession of which was obtained by the landlord under Section 9 of the Berar Act, but in respect of which the period of two years' disability imposed under Section 9 (6) read with Rule 9 of the Rules was not over before the coming into force of the Bombay Act. In respect of such landlords, Section 52 enlarges the period for which he is required to personally cultivate the lands. In this respect we are inclined to agree with the view of Mr. Justice Wagle.

36. To conclude Section 52 applies to all cases where possession is taken by the landlord on or after December 30, 1958 on the basis of an order obtained under the Berar Act. It applies to cases where possession had been taken by a landlord under the Berar Act but the two years' period of personal cultivation had not been completed when the Bombay Act came into force. The instances of obtaining possession under Ss. 38, 39 or 39-A of the Bombay Act have not been considered by us in this appeal.

37. It follows that Section 52 of the Bombay Act applies to the case before us, as the landlord has not completed two years' personal cultivation on December 30, 1958, the date on which the Bombay Act came into force. He had taken possession on April 4, 1957, and the two years' period will expire only on April 4, 1959. In the meanwhile the Bombay Act had come into force on December 30, 1958. Under Section 52 the period of personal cultivation had been extended to 12 years from the date of taking possession. But as the 5th respondent, who obtained possession for personal cultivation had transferred the suit lands to the 1st respondent on June 21, 1961, on which date the 12 years' period had not expired, the appellant tenant was entitled to apply for restoration on the ground that the said landlord had ceased to cultivate the lands for the required period as provided under Section 52.

38. In the result the judgment and order of the High Court are set aside and the orders of the Special Deputy Collector and the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal are restored and the appeal allowed.

39. Though normally costs should follow the event, in this case, though the appellant succeeds, we decline to award him costs, as we are of the view that he should have been more careful in giving the valuation in the special leave petition.

Appeal allowed.

The expression “any prohibition” in Section 111 (d) applies to every type of prohibition. The prohibition may be complete or partial. Any restriction on import or export is to an extent a prohibition. Therefore, Section 111 (d) includes restrictions. Merely because Section 3 of the Imports and Exports

“otherwise controlling”, the amplitude of the word ‘any prohibition’ in Section 111 (d) cannot be cut down.
Import of living animals of all sorts is prohibited by part IV Sch. 1 Item 1 of

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

HEGDE, J.—In this appeal by certificate two questions of law arise namely (1) whether on the facts of this case the mare “Jury Maid” can be considered as a “pet animal” within the meaning of that expression in the notification issued by the Government of India, Ministry of Commerce and Industries, Import Trade Control Public Notice No. 1-I.T.C.(PN)/61 dated 2nd January 1961 and (2) whether the expression “prohibition” contained in Sec. 111 (d) of the Customs Act 1962 (which will hereinafter be referred to as the Act) includes prohibition of imports coupled with a power to permit importation under certain conditions.

2. The facts relevant for the purpose of deciding the points in issue are not many. They may now be stated. The appellant, Sheikh Mohd.
Omer, as found by the High Court was a dealer in horses especially in racing horses. He was breeding horses out of mares owned by him. He owned two stallions by name “Pieta” and “Rontgen”. He claimed to have had a considerable reputation as race horse owner and for racing with horses bred by himself. He appears to have won several prizes awarded for horse races.
In September, 1964, the appellant went to Europe. While he was in Switzerland he received a letter from
M/s. British Bloodstock Agency Ltd., London informing him that one of its clients was interested in obtaining a foal by stallion “Pieta” from the said client’s Brood Mare. After some correspondence it was agreed that the Glasgow Stud Farm would lease a brown English mare to the appellant which would be shipped to India and would be kept there pending her producing two foals by the appellant’s breeding race horse “Pieta” after which the mare will be returned to England with one foal. The appellant returned to Calcutta on November 7, 1964 by air. At the Dum Dum Airport he gave a declaration showing that his seven unaccompanied baggages will follow him by sea or by air. Eventually, "Jury Maid" was shipped to Calcutta by S. S. "Chinkoa" which reached Calcutta port on December 25, 1964. When the appellant tried to take delivery of the same, the Customs authorities objected on the ground that the mare had been imported in contravention of the provisions of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947. After due enquiry the Customs authorities confiscated the mare. At this stage, it may be mentioned that when the mare came to India, it was pregnant. After its arrival in India it gave birth to a foal and thereafter it died. The foal given birth by it is alive.

3. The first question that arises for decision is whether by importing the mare in question the appellant contravened the provisions of the Act.

4. Section 111 (d) of the Act provides:

"The following goods brought from a place outside India shall be liable to confiscation:—.....

(d) any goods which are imported or attempted to be imported or are brought within the Indian customs waters for the purpose of being imported, contrary to any prohibition imposed by or under this Act or any other law for the time being in force."

5. "Prohibited goods" is defined in Sec. 2 (33) of the Act. That definition reads:

"Prohibited goods" means any goods the import or export of which is subject to any prohibition under this Act or any other law for the time being in force but does not include any such goods in respect of which the conditions subject to which the goods are permitted to be imported or exported have been complied with."

6. From this definition, it is clear that "prohibited goods" under the Act (Contd. on Column 2)

"Sl. No.	Name of Article	Item of First Schedule to Indian Tariff Act, 1934.
(1)	(2)	(3)
	Part IV
1.	Animals, living all sorts	I and I (I)."

10. By the notification dated January 2, 1961 referred to earlier certain exemptions were provided for personal baggage of a passenger. One of the exemptions granted is for clearance of one dog, pet animal and birds includes also such goods as may be imported by complying with the prescribed conditions. It is admitted that the import of horses or mares is not prohibited under the Act. Therefore the question is whether such import is prohibited "by any other law for the time being in force."

7. Section 3 (1) of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947 provides: "Powers to prohibit or restrict imports and exports:—

(1) The Central Government may, by order published in the Official Gazette, make provision for prohibiting, restricting or otherwise controlling, in all cases or in specified classes of cases and subject to such exceptions, if any as may be made by or under the order.—

(a) the import, export, carriage coastwise or shipment as ships' stores of goods of any specified description;

(b) the bringing into any port or place in India of goods of any specified description intended to be taken out of India without being removed from the ship or conveyance in which they are being carried."

8. In exercise of the powers conferred by Sec. 3 of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947, the Government of India promulgated an order known as the "Imports Control" Order, 1955 dated 7th December, 1955. Clause 3 (1) of the said order reads:

"Restriction on Import of Certain Goods.—

(1) Save as otherwise provided in this order, no person shall import any goods of the description specified in Schedule I, except under, and in accordance with, a licence or a customs clearance permit granted by the Central Government or by any officer specified in Schedule II."

9. The relevant Entry is to be found in Item I of Schedule I in Part IV which is as follows:—

in a limited number subject to certain conditions.

11. Now we shall go back to the question whether "Jury Maid" can be considered as a pet animal. A pet is explained in Concise Oxford Dictionary of Current English as "any animal tamed and kept as favourite or treated with fondness."

The shorter Oxford Dictionary explains that word thus:

"Any animal that is domesticated or tamed and kept as a favourite or treated with fondness; esp. applied to a lamb reared by hand."

The same word is explained in Chambers's Twentieth Century Dictionary thus:

"Any animal, tamed and fondled."

12. There is no evidence to show that "Jury Maid" was tamed. That apart the "Jury Maid" was not fondled or treated with fondness by the appellant. He obtained that animal on lease for certain specified purpose. In respect of that animal he had only a business connection. Rejecting the contention of the appellant that "Jury Maid" is a pet animal, the learned Judges of the appellate bench of the Calcutta High Court observed:

"There is no such species of animal known as "Pet animal". What happens is that certain kind of animals or birds are often domesticated and when a particular person becomes fond of such an animal or bird it may be said to have become a "pet" of that person and may be called a "pet animal". It is a subjective expression. In the present case, the mare "Jury Maid" was not the "pet" of any particular person. So far as the appellant is concerned, he had not even seen the mare when it arrived in India. It cannot be said that he became fond of it at any relevant point of time. In actual life we find that men have at times become fond of strange animals like lions, tigers and even crocodiles. It was not intended to make the baggage rules a warrant for transforming passengers ships into a Noah's Ark....."

13. We entirely agree with those observations and reject the contention of the appellant that "Jury Maid" was a pet animal.

14. This takes us to the question whether by importing the mare "Jury Maid" the appellant contravened Section 111 (d) read with Sec. 125 of the Act. It was urged on behalf of the appellant that expression "prohibition" in Section 111 (d) must be considered as a total prohibition and that expression does not bring within its fold the restrictions imposed by Cl. 3 of the Imports Control Order, 1955. According to the learned counsel for the appellant clause 3 of that order deals with the restrictions of import of certain goods. Such a restriction cannot be considered as a prohibition under Sec. 111 (d) of the Act. While elaborating his argument the learned Counsel invited our attention to the fact that while Sec. 111 (d) of the Act uses the word "prohibition", Section 3 of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947 takes in not merely prohibition of imports and exports, it also includes "restrictions or otherwise controlling" all imports and exports. According to him restrictions cannot be considered as prohibition more particularly under the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947 as that statute deals with "restrictions or otherwise controlling" separately from prohibitions. We are not impressed with this argument. What clause (d) of Sec. 111 says is that any goods which are imported or attempted to be imported contrary to "any prohibition imposed by any law for the time being in force in this country" is liable to be confiscated. "Any prohibition" referred to in that section applies to every type of "prohibition". That prohibition may be complete or partial. Any restriction on import or export is to an extent a prohibition. The expression "any prohibition" in Section 111 (d) of the Customs Act, 1962 includes restrictions. Merely because Section 3 of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947 uses three different expressions "prohibiting", "restricting" or "otherwise controlling," we cannot cut down the amplitude of the word "any prohibition" in Section 111 (d) of the Act. "Any prohibition" means every prohibition. In other words all types of prohibitions. Restriction is one type of prohibition. From item (I) of Schedule I, Part IV to Import Control Order, 1955, it is clear that import of living animals of all sorts is prohibited. But certain exceptions are provided for. But none the less the prohibition continues.

15. In the result this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(V 58 C 70)

(From: Allahabad)*

V. BHARGAVA AND I. D. DUA, JJ.

Angnoo and others, Appellants v. State of Uttar Pradesh, Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 209 of 1967, D/- 11-9-1970.

Evidence—Appreciation of—Murder case — Witness brother of deceased — Fact of his relationship would add to value of his evidence because he would be interested in getting the real culprit, rather than innocent persons, punished. (Para 8)

M/s. S. C. Agarwal, R. K. Garg and D. P. Singh, Advocates of M/s. Ramamurthi and Co. and Miss S. Chakravarti, M/s. R. K. Jain and Anil Kumar Gupta, Advocates, for Appellants; Mr. O. P. Rana, Advocate, for Respondent.

BHARGAVA, J.:— The ten appellants in this appeal were convicted for offences punishable under Section 148 of the Indian Penal Code and Section 302 read with Section 149 of the Indian Penal Code, and each one of them was awarded concurrent sentences of two years rigorous imprisonment for the first offence and imprisonment for life for the second offence. The conviction was recorded in respect of the murder of one Mahadeo on the 12th November, 1964.

2. The prosecution case was that Mahadeo had appeared as a witness in an enquiry under Section 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which was being held on a complaint filed by one Chotai for an offence under Section 500, I. P. C., against Angnoo appellant. That complaint was filed by Chotai on the ground that Angnoo had earlier lodged a false report with the Police against Chotai and his brother Sumer for an offence under S. 454, I. P. C. After Mahadeo had been examined as a witness in the enquiry, the Court issued summonses against the accused. The service of the summons on Angnoo took place on 12th November, 1964. On that day, at about noon, Mahadeo had gone from his village Banyan Khera to another village Rampur, one mile away. It may be mentioned that eight of the appellants belonged to the same village Banyan Khera where Mahadeo resided, while two of them resided in neighbouring villages. When Mahadeo was returning about an hour before sunset and had reached a place, two furlongs away from his own village Banyan Khera, near the field of one Badal, the ten appellants are alleged to have come out of an ambush and attacked Mahadeo with spears and Kantas. Five of the appellants were armed with spears and other five with Kantas. Mahadeo raised a hue and cry and also tried to defend himself with the lathi which he was carrying. He was, however, badly injured and died as a result of those injuries on the spot. A number of witnesses had arrived near the place of occurrence and saw part of the attack on Mahadeo. When some of the witnesses wanted to come near, one of the appellants, Barjor fired a warning shot in the air with his pistol, so that none of the witnesses came very close. They all remained at a distance of about 50 paces from the place of incident. After having caused injuries to Mahadeo, the appellants escaped to the north through the fields and, thereafter, witnesses came near Mahadeo and found him dead. Mahadeo's brother Puttu Lal dictated a report of the incident which was written down by prosecution witness Raja Ram. It was then given to one Kallu to be taken to the police station Qasimpur. On the basis of that written report, the First Information Report was recorded at Qasimpur at 8.30 p.m. The offence was, however, committed at a place which fell within the circle of Police Station Auras, so that a copy of the report recorded at Police Station Qasimpur was sent to the Police Station Auras, where the information reached at 11.30 p.m. Thereafter, the case was investigated and the appellants were sent up for trial. The trial Court relied on the evidence of five eye-witnesses and the medical evidence to record the conviction of the appellants for the offences mentioned above. The High Court upheld the conviction and dismissed the appeal filed by the appellants. Consequently, the appellants have come up in this appeal by special leave.

*(Cri. Appeal No. 590 of 1965, D/- 17-3-1967 — All.)

3. The trial Court convicted the appellants on the basis of the evidence of five eye-witnesses P. W. 1, Puttu Lal brother of Mahadeo deceased, P.W. 2 Maiku, P.W. 3 Shri Krishna, P.W. 4 Raja Ram and P.W. 5 Juddhi. The argument that has been advanced before us on behalf of the appellants is that the evidence of these witnesses should not have been accepted by the Courts because of five reasons. First, there was delay in lodging the First Information Report; secondly, there was conflict between the medical evidence and the evidence of the eye-witnesses; thirdly, it was not probable that these witnesses could have arrived sufficiently close to the scene of occurrence in time to see the actual assault on Mahadeo; fourthly, it was not very probable that they would be able to recognise all the ten appellants as assailants of Mahadeo and fifthly, all the eye-witnesses are partisan witnesses and should not have been relied upon. All these arguments were advanced before the High Court also, and the High Court did not find any force in them. Having heard learned counsel, we are also unable to hold that any of these grounds would justify our interference with the concurrent decision of the trial Court and the High Court.

4. It is true that, according to the prosecution witnesses, the incident took place at about 4.30 P. M. The time has been estimated on the basis of the version of the witnesses that it took place one hour before sunset and, during those days, the time of sunset was about 5-30 P. M. The report was lodged at Police Station Qasimpur, five miles away, at 8-30 P. M. Part of the delay is explained by the circumstance that some time must have been taken in looking after Mahadeo before his brother Puttu Lal could gather his wits to dictate report, and then time must have been taken in actual dictation while the report was being recorded by P. W. 4 Raja Ram. It however, appears that the report was written without the aid of any artificial light and, consequently, the writing of the report must have been completed by about 6-30 P. M. Thereafter, that written report was given to one Kallu to be taken to village Qasimpur and he left the place of occurrence on a cycle. It is true that, normally, he should have gone straight to the police station, in which case the report at the police station should have been recorded much earlier than 8-30 p. m. However, the explanation for the delay could not be put forward by the prosecution, because Kallu turned hostile and could not be examined by the prosecution for this purpose. It seems to be probable, as indicated by the High Court, that Kallu, for some reason or the other, did not proceed straight to the police station and went off for his own work and, realising that he had committed this mistake, he may have turned hostile to the prosecution. The absence of the explanation for the delay committed by Kallu; under these circumstances, cannot be considered to be a ground for disbelieving the eye-witnesses.

5. So far as the question of conflict between medical evidence and the evidence of eye-witnesses is concerned, the submission is based on the fact that, amongst the 27 injuries which were received by Mahadeo, there were 4 blunt-weapon injuries. According to the prosecution witnesses, the weapons that were carried by the assailants and were used in the attack were spears and Kantas. The argument was that neither a spear nor a Kanta could cause a contusion, bruises or a depression on the head and, consequently, the evidence given by the eye-witnesses does not fully explain all the injuries received by Mahadeo. It appears to us that most of these witnesses arrived at the scene of occurrence after the attack had already started and were able to see only part of the incident, so that some blows must have been inflicted on Mahadeo before their arrival and some after their arrival. It may be that they failed to notice that some of the assailants were carrying lathis or, more probably, some of the assailants used their spears like lathis. They gave blows wielding spears as lathis rather than thrusting the spears every time. They may have done so even before some of the witnesses arrived. The use of a spear in such a manner will not be very unnatural if a large number of persons surround one single man and try to beat him. In such a situation, it may be easier to wield the spear as a lathi than to try and thrust it at the person being attacked. There is, therefore, in our opinion, no conflict at all between the medical evidence and the evidence given by the eye-witnesses.

6. The witnesses came from different places. Puttu Lal P. W. 1 and Juddhi P.W. 5 both came from their village Banyan Khera, which was at a distance of about two furlongs from the scene of occurrence. The distance was not so great that, after hearing the first hue and cry raised by Mahadeo, these two witnesses could not have come in time to see part of the assault on Mahadeo. They both stated that they stopped at a distance of about 50 paces from the place from where Mahadeo was being beaten and saw the occurrence from that place. As pointed out by the High Court, the appellants were in the field of Badal about 100 paces away where they were concealing themselves. It is possible that Mahadeo started raising a hue and cry as soon as he saw these appellants rushing at him. These cries having been heard by Puttu Lal and Juddhi, they must have started running immediately towards the scene of occurrence and could, therefore, very well come in time to see some of the blows falling on Mahadeo. The other three witnesses Maiku, Shri Krishna and Raja Ram were also not much further away. In this connection, Shri Krishna's evidence is challenged on the ground that, according to him, he arrived in village Khanjhri at about 2 or 2-30 P. M., stayed there for half an hour, and was then coming back when he saw this incident. Khanjhri is at a distance of only five furlongs from the scene of occurrence. The argument was that, if he left Khanjhri at about 3 P. M., he could not still be at that village and the scene of occurrence, because he could not have taken 1½ hours to cover a distance of less than five furlongs. This argument overlooks the circumstance that villagers have no watches or clocks and only give timing from their estimate. It can very well be that Shri Krishna may have made a mistake of more than an hour in respect of the time of his arrival in village Khanjhri and may have also under-estimated the period during which he stayed there before starting back. In fact, villagers have very little idea of distances also; and this is clear from the evidence of P. W. 4 Raja Ram who stated that his village was at a distance of half a mile from the scene of occurrence. According to him, he heard the shouts when he had covered about 1½ field away from the village which distance, according to him, would be 90 steps. At the same time, he stated that when he heard the shouts, he was 50 steps away from the place of occurrence. It was pointed out to him by the Court that, according to his evidence, the total distance between the scene of occurrence and his village was half a mile, while, calculating from his own position, the distance would be only 90 steps plus 50 steps. He was unable to explain the discrepancy. It is obvious that he had no idea of distances. We are unable to agree with learned counsel for the appellants that, from this circumstance, an inference can at all be drawn that Raja Ram was nowhere near the scene of occurrence and did not see the assault on Mahadeo.

7. So far as the possibility of recognising the ten appellants is concerned, all the witnesses have stated that they arrived within a distance of about 50 steps while the assault was still going on. All the appellants were well-known to the witnesses and there is no reason to doubt their evidence that they were able to recognise all the ten of them. Persons well-known can be recognised within a very short time. The appellants were seen by them while continuing the attack on Mahadeo and while they were going away after completing the assault.

8. So far as the last point is concerned, it does appear that two of the witnesses are not independent. Juddhi is the son of Chotai who has litigation with Angnoo appellant. Seven of the other accused are related to Angnoo, while the two of them are said to be his friends, these two being Ram Adhar and Barjor Singh. Maiku once appeared as a witness for the prosecution in a case against Ram Adhar and, in that case, his evidence was disbelieved by the Court on the ground that he was a partisan witness. It, however, appears to us that at least the other three witnesses are quite reliable. Puttu Lal is, no doubt, the brother of deceased Mahadeo, but this very circumstance would, in our opinion, add to the value of his evidence, because he would be interested in ensuring that the real culprits responsible for the murder of Mahadeo are punished and not innocent persons. Shri Krishna and Raja Ram are both totally independent. No relationship between them and any other interested person has been established. They have no motive to give wrong evidence against the appellants.

9. Considering all these circumstances, we are unable to hold that the High Court committed any error in upholding the conviction of these appellants. The appeal fails and is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

The following Order of the Court was delivered by HIDAYATULLAH, C. J.—This order will govern the disposal of Civil Appeals Nos. 2634 of 1969 and 63 of 1970. These two appeals arise out of two writ petitions filed in the High Court of Delhi which were disposed of by a common judgment delivered by a learned single Judge on December 5, 1969. The appeals have been brought on certificate granted suo motu by the learned single Judge under Article 132 (1) of the Constitution of India. While granting the certificate, the learned single Judge observed that at an earlier stage in the case, request was made to him to refer these two petitions for decision to a Bench, because important questions were involved in them. At that time, the learned Judge felt that since there was a Division Bench decision of the Rajasthan High Court in Jaipur Udyog Ltd. v. Union of India, AIR 1969 Raj 281 there was no need to refer the matter to a larger Bench. The learned Judge goes on to say in the order granting certificate that at the time of the hearing, he found that several questions arose before him which were not covered by the Rajasthan decision. He probably felt that as the points which he had to decide were not considered by this Court in any earlier decision and as he had decided the case sitting singly, he should grant certificate suo motu for appeal to this Court.

2. In our opinion, and we say it respectfully, the learned Judge was in error in not making a reference to a Bench when he found that important questions of law were arising before him. Even if he did not make any reference, he should have allowed the parties to take an appeal in the High Court itself under the provisions pertaining to appeals against decisions of a single Judge. The practice of deciding the case sitting singly and giving a certificate under Article 132 (1) for appeal to this Court, although technically correct, is an improper practice. It is the right of the party to file an appeal in the High Court itself against the decision of the single Judge and that right should not be short-circuited by passing on the case to the Supreme Court for decision. We think we should not endorse this practice which would create a bad precedent in India. We accordingly cancel the certificate and leave the parties free to file an appeal in the High Court, if they so desire. There will be no order as to costs.

Order accordingly.

Dhedh Nathu Raja (dead) by his legal representatives, Appellants v. Langha Nathu Jamal (dead) by his legal representatives and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 1456 of 1966, D/-16-9-1969.

States Reorganisation Act (1956), Ss. 52, 57 — Saurashtra High Court abolished and jurisdiction conferred on Bombay High Court — Appeal again transferred to Gujarat High Court under Bombay Reorganisation Act (1960) — Held appeal from single Judge to Division Bench was governed by Letters Patent Cl. 15 (Bom.) and not by Sec. 22A of Saurashtra Ordinance 2 of 1948. AIR 1965 Guj 87, Reversed.

By virtue of Section 22A (2) of the Saurashtra Ordinance (2 of 1948) (as amended by Ordinance 5 of 1950) an appeal lay to a Division Bench of the High Court from a judgment of a single Judge in respect of a decree or order made in exercise of appellate jurisdiction, if the single Judge certified the case as fit for appeal. But an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent of the High Court of Bombay in an appeal from the judgment of the Court of First instance could be filed without a certificate of the Judge hearing the appeal. The Saurashtra High Court was abolished from November 1, 1956 and the jurisdiction of the Saurashtra High Court was conferred upon the Bombay High Court. Subsequently the appeal under Bombay Reorganisation Act, 1960, stood transferred to the High Court of Gujarat. Once the Saurashtra Ordinance 2 of 1948 was repealed and the jurisdiction to try the appeal was conferred upon the High Court of Bombay, the right of appeal exercisable by the parties to the litigation decided by the High Court of Bombay was governed by the Letters Patent of that Court and not by S. 22A of the Saurashtra Ordinance 2 of 1948. Section 52 of the States Reorganisation Act preserved the original, appellate and other jurisdiction which was under the law in force immediately before the appointed day exercisable in respect of the territories within the State of Saurashtra. Unless in the exercise of that jurisdiction any restriction under the law then in force was by express provision or by clear implication preserved, the provisions of clause 15 of the Letters Patent must apply. 1905 AC 369 and AIR 1957 SC 540, Rel. on; AIR 1965 Guj 87, Reversed.

M/s. D. U. Shah and P. C. Bhartari, Advocates, and Mr. J. B. Dadachanji, Advocate of M/s J. B. Dadachanji and Co., for Appellants; M/s S. K. Dholakia and Vineet Kumar, Advocates, for Respondents Nos. 1 (a) to 1 (e) and (g).

SHAH, J.—The facts which give rise to this appeal are few and simple. The appellant commenced on May 3, 1951 an action in the Court of the Assistant Judge, Morvi, in the former Part 'B' State of Saurashtra for a decree for Rs. 9,387/5/- against one L. Angha Nathu. Jamal and respondents 2 and 3 in this appeal. The Trial Court decreed the suit on October 17, 1955. An appeal was filed against the decree in the High Court of Saurashtra at Rajkot. On November 1, 1956, the High Court of Saurashtra was abolished and the proceedings pending in that Court stood transferred to the High Court of Bombay. On February 21, 1958, Vyas, J., of the High Court of Bombay allowed the appeal. Against that order an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent of the High Court of Bombay was filed by the plaintiff but without an order of Vyas, J., certifying that the case was fit for appeal to a Division Bench of the High Court. On May 1, 1960 under the Bombay Reorganisation Act, 1960 the appeal stood transferred to the High Court of Gujarat. The High Court of Gujarat held that the appeal was incompetent in the absence of an order under Section 22A of the Saurashtra Ordinance 2 of 1948 certifying that the case was fit for appeal to a Division Bench. With certificate granted by the High Court of Gujarat this appeal has been preferred.

2. The Rulers of Indian States in Kathiawar agreed "to unite and integrate" their territories in one State to be styled the United State of Saurashtra with a common executive, legislature and judiciary. By Ordinance 1 of 1948 the administration of the covenanting States was taken over by the Rajpramukh. The Rajpramukh issued, in exercise of power reserved to him by Article 9, clause (3) of the Covenant, Ordinance 2 of 1948 setting up with effect from February 29, 1948, a High Court of Judicature for the State of Saurashtra. The expression "High Court" was defined in Section 3 (c) as meaning "the High Court established and constituted by this Ordinance and functioning as the High Court of the Saurashtra State." By Section 21 the High Court was to be the highest Court of appeal and revision in the State and to have jurisdiction to maintain and dispose of such appeals, revision and other cases civil or criminal, as it may be empowered to do under the Ordinance or any enactment in force in the State. By Section 22 the High Court was also to be a Court of reference with power to hear, revise and determine all cases referred to it. By Ordinance 5 of 1950, Section 22A was added: it was provided thereby:

"(1) Except as otherwise provided by any enactment for the time being in force, an appeal from any original decree, or from any order against which an appeal is permitted by any law for the time being in force or from any order under Art. 226 of the Constitution of India, made by a single Judge of the High Court, shall lie to a Bench consisting of two other Judges of the High Court.

(2) An appeal shall lie from a judgment of one Judge of the High Court in respect of a decree or order made in exercise of Appellate Jurisdiction to a Bench consisting of two other Judges of the High Court if the Judge who made the decree or order certifies that the case is a fit case for appeal."

3. Under the Constitution of India, the territory of the United State of Saurashtra was formed into a Part 'B' State of Saurashtra. By the States Reorganisation Act 1956 the territory of the State of Saurashtra merged into the State of Bombay.

4. By Section 49 of the States Reorganisation Act, 1956, it was enacted that the High Court exercising immediately before the appointed day, jurisdiction in relation to the existing State of Bombay shall, as from the appointed day, be deemed to be the High Court for the new State of Bombay. By Section 50 (1) as from the appointed day, the High Courts of all the existing Part B States (with certain exceptions not material) were to cease to function and were abolished. By Section 52 it was provided:

"The High Court for a new State shall have, in respect of any part of the territories included in that new State, all such original, appellate and other jurisdiction as, under the law in force immediately before the appointed day, is exercisable in respect of that part of the said territories by any High Court or Judicial Commissioner's Court for an existing State."

By Section 54 it was provided:

"Subject to the provisions of this Part, the law in force immediately before the appointed day with respect to practice and procedure in the High Court for the corresponding State shall, with the necessary modifications, apply in relation to the High Court for a new State, and accordingly, the High Court for the new State shall have all such powers to make rules and orders with respect to practice and procedure as are, immediately, before the appointed day, exercisable by the High Court, for the corresponding State:

Provided that any rules or orders which are in force immediately before the appointed day with respect to practice and procedure in the High Court for the corresponding State shall, until varied or revoked by rules or orders made by the High Court for a new State, apply with the necessary modifications in relation to practice and procedure in the High Court for the new State as if made by that Court."

Section 59 (3) provided that all proceedings pending in the High Court of Saurashtra or in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner for Kutch immediately before the appointed day shall stand transferred to the High Court of Bombay. By Section 119 it was provided:

"The provisions of Part II shall not be deemed to have effected any change in the territories to which any law in force immediately before the appointed day extends or applies and territorial references in any such law to an existing State shall, until otherwise provided by a competent Legislature or other competent authority, be construed as meaning the territories within that State immediately before the appointed day."

Section 127 provided:

"The provisions of this Act shall have effect notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith contained in any other law."

5. In exercise of the power conferred upon the Central Government by S. 120 of the States Reorganisation Act, 1956, the Saurashtra (Adaptation of Laws on Union Subjects) Order, 1957, was promulgated by the Central Government. By clause 5 of the order it was provided that Saurashtra Ordinance 2 of 1948 shall stand repealed with effect from November 1, 1956. The High Court of Bombay for the new State added rr. 252-A and 252-B to the Rules of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay, Appellate Side, 1950.

By Rule 252-A it was provided:

"Rules and orders relating to practice and procedure in the High Court in force immediately prior to the appointed day in the High Court of Bombay shall, subject to modifications made from time to time thereto, apply to the practice and procedure in the High Court."

Rule 252-B provided:

"Rules and orders relating to practice and procedure in the High Court framed by the High Courts of Nagpur, Hyderabad and Saurashtra and Judicial Commissioner's Court, Kutch, shall stand abrogated as from the 1st November, 1956 in the areas of the new State of Bombay which before the 1st November, 1956 were parts of the States of Madhya Pradesh, Hyderabad, Saurashtra and Kutch."

6. The High Court of Gujarat held that the appeal filed by the respondents in the High Court of Saurashtra against the judgment of the Assistant Judge, was continued to remain subject to the provisions of Section 22A of Saurashtra Ordinance 2 of 1948 and an appeal could lie against the decision of Vyas J., only if he certified that the case was fit for appeal to a Division Bench. Clause 15 of the Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court provided:

"And we do further ordain that an appeal shall lie to the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal (sic) from the judgment (not being a judgment passed in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction in respect of a decree or order made in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction by a Court subject to the superintendence of the said High Court, and not being an order made in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction and not being a sentence or order passed or made in the exercise of the power of superintendence under the provisions of Section 107 of the Government of India Act or in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction) of one Judge of the said High Court or one Judge of any Division Court, pursuant to Section 108 of the Government of India Act, and that notwithstanding anything hereinbefore provided an appeal shall lie to the said High Court from a judgment of one Judge of the said High Court or one Judge of any Division Court, pursuant to Section 108 of the Government of India Act made on or after the first day of February 1929, in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction in respect of a decree or order made in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction by a Court subject to the superintendence of the said High Court, where the Judge who passed the judgment declares that the case is a fit one for appeal; but x x x right of appeal from other judgments of Judges of the said High Court or of such Division Court shall be to Us, Our Heirs or Successors. x x x"

By clause 15 of the Letters Patent a judgment in an appeal from a civil suit by a single Judge of the High Court of Bombay is subject to appeal to a Division Bench except where the order is made in exercise of the revisional jurisdiction of the Court or in second appeal, or in exercise of criminal jurisdiction, or in exercise of power of superintendence under Section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1935 (Article 227 of the Constitution). Vyas J., decided the appeal sitting as a Judge of the High Court of Bombay. Prima facie, his judgment delivered in a first appeal from a judgment of the subordinate court was subject to appeal to a Division Bench of the High Court of Bombay.

7. There was clearly an inconsistency between Section 22A of the Saurashtra Ordinance 2 of 1948, and clause 15 of the Letters Patent of the High Court of Bombay. By virtue of Section 22A (2) an appeal lay to a Division Bench of the Saurashtra High Court from a Judgment of one Judge,

"in respect of a decree or order made in exercise of Appellate Jurisdiction when the Judge who made the decree or order certified that the case is a fit one for appeal".

The Legislature made no distinction between a first appeal, a second appeal, an appeal from order and an application in exercise of revisional jurisdiction. But an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent of the High Court of Bombay in an appeal from the judgment of the Court of First Instance could be filed without a certificate of the Judge hearing the appeal.

8. The right to appeal from a decree or order is a substantive right. As a corollary thereto, the right to maintain a decree of a Court without interference by a superior Court and subject only to the limitation therein is also a vested right and may be taken away by express enactment or clear implication of the amending statute. In Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving 1905 AC 369, the Judicial Committee held that a provision which deprives a suitor in a pending action of an appeal to a superior tribunal which belonged to him as of right does not regulate procedure. The Australian Commonwealth Judiciary Act, 1903, came into force on August 25, 1903. Against the judgment of the Supreme Court of Queensland in an action commenced on October 25, 1902, an application was made for leave to appeal to the Judicial Committee and leave was granted on September 4, 1903. At the hearing of the appeal by the Judicial Committee the respondents applied that the appeal from the judgment of the Supreme Court of Queensland be dismissed on the ground that the power of the Court below to give leave to appeal stood abrogated by Sec. 39 of the Australian Commonwealth Judiciary Act, 1903. The application was rejected by the Judicial Committee. Lord Macnaghten observed:

"As regards the general principles applicable to the case there was no controversy. On the one hand it was not disputed that if the matter in question be a matter of procedure only, the petition (to dismiss) is well founded. On the other hand, if it be more than a matter of procedure, if it touches a right in existence at the passing of the Judiciary Act, it was conceded that in accordance with a long line of authorities from the time of Lord Coke to the present day the appellants (the sugar Company) would be entitled to succeed. The Judiciary Act is not retrospective by express enactment or by necessary intent. And therefore, the only question is, was the appeal to His Majesty in Council a right vested in the appellants at the date of the passing of the Act, or was it a mere matter of procedure? It seems to their Lordships that the question does not admit of doubt. To deprive a suitor in a pending action of an appeal to a superior tribunal which belonged to him as of right is a very different thing from regulating procedure."

In Garikapati Veeraya v. N. Subbiah Choudhury, 1957 SCR 488 = (AIR 1957 SC 540), this Court accepted the principle in Colonial Sugar Refining Company's case, 1905 AC 369. In the absence of any provision to the contrary, therefore, a right attached to the action when it was commenced in 1951, that an appeal against the decision of a single Judge of the High Court of Saurashtra shall lie only if the Judge deciding the case certified the case to be a fit one for appeal. But the Saurashtra High Court was abolished from November 1, 1956 and the jurisdiction of the Saurashtra High Court was conferred upon the Bombay High Court. The case was tried by Vyas, J., not as a Judge of the Saurashtra High Court but as a Judge of the High Court of Bombay. In terms the restriction placed by Section 22A applies to a judgment of one of the Judges of the High Court of Saurashtra: it does not apply to a judgment of a Judge of the High Court of Bombay. Once the Saurashtra Ordinance 2 of 1948 was repealed and the jurisdiction to try the appeal was conferred upon the High Court of Bombay, the right of appeal exercisable by the parties to the litigation decided by the High Court of Bombay was governed by the Letters Patent of that court and not by Section 22A of the Saurashtra Ordinance 2 of 1948. Granting that the incident prescribed by Section 22A continued to attach to the action, in terms of Section 22A of the Saurashtra Ordinance could not operate to restrict a right of appeal exercisable by clause 15 of the Letters Patent governing the judgments of the Judges of the High Court of Bombay. The expression "Judge of the High Court" in Section 22A of the ordinance for the purpose of giving effect to the rule in Colonial Sugar Refining Company's case, 1905 AC 369, cannot be read as meaning a Judge of the High Court of Bombay. By the clearest implication of the repeal by the Saurashtra (Adaptation of Laws on Union Subjects) Order, 1957, promulgated by the Central Government and by the application of clause 15 of the Letters Patent of the Bombay

High Court, the judgment of Vyas, J., was subject to appeal to a Division Bench without an order of the learned Judge certifying the case to be fit for appeal.

9. In support of his submission counsel for the respondents relied upon the terms of Section 52 of the States Reorganisation Act, 1956. But that section only confers upon the High Court of Bombay after November 1, 1956 the original, appellate and other jurisdiction, which was exercisable by the High Court of Saurashtra immediately prior to November 1, 1956, in respect of the territories within the State of Saurashtra. The section does not incorporate either expressly or by implication the limitations prescribed by Section 22A (2) of Saurashtra Ordinance 2 of 1948 into the Letters Patent of the High Court of Bombay. The jurisdiction—original, appellate and other—which the High Court of Saurashtra could exercise prior to November 1, 1956, survived to the High Court of Bombay in respect of the territories of the State of Saurashtra, and the appeal filed by the respondent before the High Court of Saurashtra was triable in the exercise of the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court of Bombay, after the case stood transferred to that Court by virtue of sub-sec. (3) of Section 59 of the States Reorganisation Act, 1956. Vyas, J., functioned as a Judge of the High Court of Bombay and his judgments in first appeals were, in the absence of an express provision to the contrary, subject to appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent to a Division Bench without a certificate.

10. The High Court of Gujarat was right in holding that in respect of the areas of the former Saurashtra State, the High Court of Bombay acquired the same jurisdiction which the High Court of Saurashtra possessed. That however, does not mean that the jurisdiction was to be regulated "with reference to the law which was in force on the appointed day i.e., November 1, 1956". Section 52 of the States Reorganisation Act preserved the original, appellate and other jurisdiction which was under the law in force immediately before the appointed day exercisable in respect of the territories within the State of Saurashtra. Unless in the exercise of that jurisdiction any restriction under the law then in force was by express provision or by clear implication preserved, the provisions of clause 15 of the Letters Patent must apply.

11. It is necessary to recall the provisions of Section 57 of the States Reorganisation Act, 1956, which provide that the law in force immediately before the appointed day relating to the powers of the Chief Justice, single Judges and division courts of the High Court for the corresponding State and with respect to matters ancillary to the exercise of the powers shall, with the necessary modifications, apply in relation to the High Court for a new State. Immediately before November 1, 1956, against the judgment of a single Judge of the High Court of Bombay exercising power in a first appeal, an appeal lay to a Division Bench without a certificate. The power of a Division Bench to entertain an appeal continued to remain exercisable by the Judges of the Bombay High Court when dealing with cases transferred under Section 59 (3) to the Bombay High Court from the Saurashtra High Court. In terms Section 57 provides that powers of the Division Bench of the High Court for the corresponding State i. e. the new State of Bombay shall be the same as the powers of the Division Bench under the law in force immediately before the appointed day in the State of Bombay. A Division Bench of the High Court of Bombay was competent to entertain an appeal against the judgment of a single Judge deciding a first appeal from the decision of a subordinate court, without a certificate of the Judge deciding the appeal.

12. The High Court of Gujarat made a distinction between "power" and "jurisdiction", and held that when Section 52 of the States Reorganisation Act, 1956, enacts that the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court of Bombay for the new State of Bombay shall in relation to the Saurashtra area be the same as the jurisdiction which the Saurashtra High Court possessed, it is meant that the High Court of Bombay has the same jurisdiction which the High Court of Saurashtra originally had, and in exercise of that jurisdiction is subject to the same limitation which the High Court of Saurashtra was subject. We are unable to agree with that view. Section 52 of the States Reorganization Act, 1956, does not say so, and Sec. 57 of that Act provides to the contrary.

13. The High Court of Gujarat was also of the view that Section 52 of the States Reorganisation Act, 1956 "crystallizes the law" only with respect to the territorial jurisdiction of each of the areas comprised in the High Court of Bombay, and if the Legislature extended the jurisdiction of the High Court of Bombay and also retained the jurisdiction which the abolished High Court possessed, the result would be "odd and conflicting" — there being conflict of jurisdiction. But that, in our judgment, is a ground for holding that the jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court superseded in case of conflict the restrictions on the exercise of jurisdiction only, the original High Court qua the Saurashtra territory, and not that the jurisdiction of the High Court of Bombay was because of some unexpressed limitation restricted.

14. The High Court of Gujarat recognised that the conclusion to which they had reached "revealed a defect in the administration of justice." They observed:

"The Legislature may have had a good reason for preserving intact the old jurisdiction of the Saurashtra High Court in regard to pending cases. However, our conclusion affects cases instituted after the Reorganisation Act came into force. In our judgment, there is no reason why the litigants from the Saurashtra and Kutch areas should now be treated on a different footing from the litigants in the old Bombay area. In our judgment, the rights of appeal of litigants in all the areas should now be placed on the same footing. We would recommend to the authorities concerned to examine this question and, if so advised, to undertake the necessary legislation so as to confer the same rights of appeal to the litigants from the Saurashtra and Kutch areas as are given to the litigants from the rest of the State of Gujarat."

In our view the conclusion that the restriction on the "old jurisdiction of the Saurashtra High Court" in regard to pending cases was preserved by Sec. 52 is erroneous. The States Reorganisation Act, 1960 (sic) does not purport to preserve the restrictions upon the exercise of jurisdiction and no implication arises from the use of the expression "original, appellate and other jurisdiction as under the law in force immediately before the appointed day," that the limitations upon the exercise of the jurisdiction which were existing prior to November 1, 1956, notwithstanding the provisions of Sec. 57 of the States Reorganisation Act were preserved.

15. The order passed by the High Court of Gujarat is set aside, and the case is remanded to the High Court to be re-entered under the original number and to be heard and disposed of according to law. Costs will be costs in the High Court.

Appeal allowed.

1. Narendrajit Singh (In C. A. No. 1192 of 1967); 2. Ranjit Singh and others, (In C. A. No. 1193 of 1967), Appellants v. The State of U. P. and others (in both the Appeals), Respondents.

Civil Appeals Nos. 1192 and 1193 of 1967, D/- 21-11-1969.

Land Acquisition Act (1894), S. 4 (1) — Notification under, is sine qua non of process of acquisition and must be strictly construed — Notification not complying with essential requirements of that provision is bad — Notification not specifying locality where lands were needed does not comply with essential requirement — Defect is not cured by giving particulars in later notification under Section 6 (1).

It becomes clear from a perusal of the sections of the Act that the process of acquisition must start with a notification under Section 4. Even in extremely urgent cases like those mentioned in sub-section (2) of Section 17, the notification under Section 4 is a sine qua non. In some cases the Government may not follow up the notification under sub-sec. (1)

by further proceedings specially where it finds that the land was unsuited for the purpose for which it is required. But the issue of a notification under sub-section (1) of Section 4 is a condition precedent to the exercise of any further powers under the Act and a notification which does not comply with the essential requirement of that provision of law must be held to be bad. (Para 8)

Section 4 (1) does not require that the identity of the lands which may ultimately be acquired should be specified, but it enjoins upon the Government the duty to specify the locality in which the land is needed. (Para 9)

Any notification which is the first step towards depriving a man of his property must be strictly construed and Courts ought not to tolerate any lapse on the part of the acquiring authority in the issue of such notification if it be of a serious nature. AIR 1960 SC 1203, Ref. (Para 10)

The defect in a notification under Section 4 (1) cannot be cured by giving full particulars in the notification under Section 6 (1). (Para 10)

The fact that the petitioners (owners) did not go to Court immediately after the publication of the first notification is not a matter of any moment. The defects were not cured and cannot be glossed over by reason of the fact that the petitioners went to Court after the issue of the notification under Section 6 (1). Mr. S. V. Gupte, Sr. Advocate (M/s. J. P. Goyal and G. N. Untoo, Advocates with him), for Appellants (in both Appeals); Mr. C. B. Agarwala, Sr. Advocate (Mr. O. P. Rana, Advocate, with him), for Respondents (in both Appeals).

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

MITTER, J. — These two appeals by certificate from a common judgment of the High Court of Allahabad arise out of certain land acquisition proceedings in the District of Rampur.

2. The facts relevant for the disposal of the appeals are as follows: On October 15, 1960 the Government of Uttar Pradesh issued a notification purporting to be one under Section 4 (1) of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 to the effect that "the land mentioned in the schedule is needed for a public purpose". The notification further showed that "the Governor being of opinion that the provisions of sub-section (1) of Section 17 of the said Act are applicable to the land, is further pleased under sub-section (4) of the said section to direct that the provisions of Section 5-A of the Act shall not apply". The schedule to the notification reads as follows:—

"SCHEDULE"

District	Pargana	Mauza	Approximate area	For what purpose required.
				For the rehabilitation of displaced families from East Pakistan, under the Ministry of Rehabilitation, Government of India.

NOTE.—The plan of the land may be inspected in the office of the Collector. Rampur."

3. This was followed by a notification under Section 6 (1) of the Act dated October 28, 1960. This notification shows that the Governor was pleased to declare under Section 5 of the Act that he was satisfied that the land mentioned in the schedule was needed for a public purpose and under Section 7 of the Act to direct the Collector of Rampur to take order for the acquisition of the land.

(Contd. on Column 2)

4. The case being one of urgency the Governor was further pleased under sub-section (1) of Section 17 of the Act to direct the Collector of Rampur, though no award under Section 11 has been made, on the expiration of the notice mentioned in sub-section (1) of Section 9, to take possession of the land, being waste or arable land mentioned in the schedule for a public purpose.

SCHEDULE

District	Pargana	Mauza	Approximate area	For what purpose required	Remarks,
Rampur	Bilaspur	Gokal Nagri	125 acres	For the rehabilitation of East Pakistan displaced families, under the Ministry of Rehabilitation, Government of India.

5. The petitioners — appellants before us—filed writ petitions in the High Court on December 1, 1960. The appellant in Appeal No. 1192 of 1967 was the sole petitioner in Writ Petition No. 3274 of 1960 while his father, Ranjit Singh and two others, brothers of the petitioners were the applicants in Writ Petition No. 283 of 1961. The two writ petitions contained common complaints. The case of the petitioners was that it was the Maharaja of Dewas with whom the petitioners had certain litigation who was responsible for singling them out for the purported acquisition of their land for the rehabilitation of displaced families of East Pakistan. The first ground put forward in both the petitions was that the notice under Section 4 of the Act was invalid for non-compliance with the mandatory provisions of the Act rendering the whole proceedings void. The points urged in support of the applications were turned down by the learned single Judge and a Special Appeal therefrom to a Division Bench met with no better fate. The learned Judges of the Division Bench noted that the exact land which was required by the State Government was not specified in the notification and that the petitioners had raised further objection that the notification under Section 4 was invalid because it had not been published at convenient places in the locality. The Division Bench relied on certain observations of this Court in Babu Barkya Thakur v. State of Bombay, (1961) 1 SCR 128 = (AIR 1960 SC 1203) to the effect that the notification under Section 4 was for the purpose of carrying on a preliminary investigation with a view to finding out after necessary survey and levels, and if necessary, digging or boring into the sub soil, whether the land was adapted for the purpose for which it was sought to be acquired. According to the Division Bench there was no substance in the pleas raised on behalf of the petitioners and their appeals were therefore dismissed.

6. Before us Mr. Gupte wanted to urge several points in support of the appeals. His first contention was that the notification under Section 4 was not in compliance with the Act and therefore it should be struck down and the proceedings held to be illegal. Sub-section (1) of Section 4 of the Act provides as follows:

"Whenever it appears to the appropriate Government that land in any locality is needed or is likely to be needed for any public purpose, a notification to that effect shall be published in the Official Gazette and the Collector shall cause public notice of the substance of such notification to be given at convenient places in the said locality".

Sub-section (2) of the section shows that it is only after compliance with the provisions of sub-section (1) that the officers authorised by Government can enter upon the land and carry on the operations mentioned therein. Section 5-A gives persons interested in the land notified under Section 4 (1) a right to object to the acquisition. It is only after disposal of the objections that the State Government is empowered when satisfied after considering the report made under Section 5-A that any particular land is needed for a public purpose to make a declaration to that effect and such declaration has to be published in the Official Gazette under sub-section (2). In the normal course after lands have been declared to be needed for a public purpose the appropriate Government may direct the Collector to take orders for the acquisition of the land. Thereafter the Collector may proceed under Section 8 to mark out the land covered by the declaration. Section 9 enjoins upon the Collector to cause public notice to be given at convenient places after compliance with the provisions of Section 8 that the Government intends to take possession of the land and that claims to compensation for interest in such land may be made to him. Section 11 enjoins upon the Collector to hear objections by persons interested after issue of notice under Section 9 to the measurements made under Section 8 and into the value of the land. It is only after compliance with the formalities of this section that the Collector has to make an award as to the true area of the land and the compensation to be allowed for the lands as also the apportionment of the compensation among all the persons known or believed to be interested in the land. The Collector after making an award may take possession of the land under the provisions of Section 16.

7. In cases of urgency however this elaborate procedure may be cut short. Under sub-section (1) of Section 17 the Collector under the directions of the Government may be authorised in cases of urgency, on the expiration of 15 days from the publication of the notice mentioned in Section 9 sub-section (1) to take possession of any waste or arable land needed for a public purpose and such land thereupon vest absolutely in the Government. Under sub-section (2) of Section 17 the Collector may immediately after the publication of the notice mentioned in sub-section (1) and with the previous sanction of the appropriate Government enter upon and take possession of the land if the same be needed owing to any sudden change in the channel of any navigable river or other unforeseen emergency it becomes necessary for any Railway administration to acquire the immediate possession of any land or for incidental purposes. Sub-section (4) of the section provides:

"In the case of any land to which, in the opinion of the appropriate Government, the provisions of sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) are applicable, the appropriate Government may direct that the provisions of Section 5-A shall not apply, and, if it does so direct, a declaration may be made under Section 6 in respect of the land at any time after the publication of the notification under Sec. 4, sub-section (1)."

8. It becomes clear from a perusal of the said sections of the Act that the process of acquisition must start with a notification under Section 4. Even in extremely urgent cases like those mentioned in sub-section (2) of Section 17, the notification under Sec. 4 is a sine qua non. In some cases the Government may not follow up the notification under sub-section (1) by further proceedings specially where it finds that the land was unsuited for the purpose for which it is required. But the issue of a notification under sub-section (1) of Section 4 is a condition precedent to the exercise of any further powers under the Act and in our opinion a notification which does not comply with the essential requirement of that provision of law must be held to be bad.

9. Section 4 (1) does not require that the identity of the lands which may ultimately be acquired should be specified but it enjoins upon the Government the duty to specify the locality in which the land is needed. In the instant cases the notifications suffer from a very serious defect in that the locality where the lands were needed was not specified. The notification merely showed that lands mentioned in the schedule were needed. The schedule in its turn though it contained the heading District, Pargana, Mauza and approximate area, gave no particulars of the same and all that was mentioned by way of a note was that the plan of the land might be inspected in the office of the Collector of Rampur. As no details were given, the only indication about the locality of the lands was possibly the District of Rampur inasmuch as the plan of the land was to be found in the office of the Collector of the same district. Certainly the Act did not intend that all the persons owning land in a district should rush to the Collector's office to find out whether his lands were covered by the notification.

10. It was urged before us that the notification was in terms of the section and that the petitioners could not complain inasmuch as the defect was remedied by the notification under S. 6 which was issued within a fortnight after the Section 4 notification. In our view this contention cannot be accepted. Any notification which is the first step towards depriving a man of his property must be strictly construed and Courts ought not to tolerate any lapse on the part of the acquiring authority in the issue of such notification if it be of a serious nature. In the case of Babu Barkya Thakur, (1961) 1 SCR 128 = (AIR 1960 SC 1203) (supra) it was pointed out by this Court that "The proceedings begin with a Government notification under Section 4 that land in any locality is needed or is likely to be needed for any public purpose".

It is well known that a person interested in the land which is affected by any notification under Sec. 4 (1) may immediately object to it and take proceedings in Court against it. In Smt. Somavanti v. State of Punjab, (1963) 2 SCR 774 = (AIR 1963 SC 151), one of the main questions before this Court was whether a notification under Section 4 (1) and one under Section 6 (1) could be issued simultaneously. Although the Court took the view that where Section 5-A was not in the way there was no irregularity in publishing the notifications on the same day, yet it observed that:

"notification under sub-section (1) of Section 4 is a condition precedent to the making of a notification under sub-section (1) of Section 6".

In our view the defect in a notification under Section 4 (1) cannot be cured by giving full particulars in the notification under Section 6 (1). In this case it is apparent that even before the issue of the first notification Government had made up its mind to acquire the lands of the petitioners inasmuch as there was no enquiry in between the two notifications and no valid reason has been put forward to explain why the details specified in the notification under Section 6 (1) could not be given in the one under Section 4 (1). The fact that the petitioners did not go to Court immediately after the publication of the first notification is not a matter of any moment. The defects were not cured and cannot be glossed over by reason of the fact that the petitioners went to Court after the issue of the notification under Section 6 (1).

11. Moreover if it was the intention of the Legislature that in cases of urgency a notification under Sec. 4 (1) was not necessary, a suitable provision would have been made in Section 17 for that purpose. The provisions of that section show that even in cases of extreme urgency like the maintenance of railway traffic by reason of any sudden change in the channel of any navigable river or other unforeseen emergency, the Legislature only thought it fit to bypass the provisions of Section 5-A but not those of Section 4, sub-section (1).

12. In this view, we did not think it necessary to hear Mr. Gupte on the other points. The appeals will therefore be allowed and the judgment of the High Court set aside. There will be no order as to costs.

Appeals allowed.

G. K. MITTER, JJ.

Mathuralal, Appellant v. Keshar Bai and another, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 774 of 1967, D/- 20-2-1970.

Transfer of Property Act (1882), Sections 58, 60 — Mortgage with possession — Lease back to mortgagor — Preliminary decree on mortgage but no application for final decree — Mortgagee only loses his right to recover money by sale of property — Otherwise his security remains intact — Mortgagee can sue on rent note — Mortgageor continues to have his right to redeem — AIR 1958 Bom 8; AIR 1957 Pat 24 and AIR 1944 Pat 5, Overruled.

The leasing back of the property arises because of the mortgage with possession. If the security is good and considered to be sufficient by the mortgagee he should not be driven to file a suit on his mortgage when he can file a suit for realisation of the monies due under the rent note. The position of the creditor is strengthened where the interest on the amount of the mortgage is not the same as the rental fixed. Under the provisions of Order 34, Rule 4, Civil P. C. the mortgagee cannot deprive the mortgagor of his right to redeem excepting by proceeding on his mortgage. So long as the mortgagor has a right to redeem the mortgage he can always pay off the mortgagee and get back possession. This position would continue so long as the property is not sold under a final decree for sale under the provisions of Order 34, Civil P. C. The rights of a mortgagee do not merge in his rights under the preliminary decree for sale. If the right of the mortgagee arose on the strength of the rent note which continued to be in force notwithstanding that the period for applying for a final decree for sale had expired, there could be no extinction of his right to sue for possession because of Section 28 of the Limitation Act. D. N. Mukherjee, Advocate, for Appellant; Janardan Sharma, Advocate, for Respondents.

MITTER, J. — This is an appeal by special leave from a judgment of the Madhya Pradesh High Court dated 6th February 1967 dismissing a Second Appeal by the appellant before this Court against a decree passed by the Additional District Judge of Ratlam for ejectment of the appellant from a house mortgaged by the predecessor-in-interest of the appellant to one Kesharimal for Rs. 3,100/- and further decreeing a claim for arrears of rent amounting to Rs. 731-35 and mesne profits at the rate of Rs. 20/- per month until eviction.

2. The relevant facts are as follows. On July, 29, 1945 Mathuralal, predecessor-in-interest of the appellant, mortgaged his house in Ratlam to Kesharimal for a sum of Rs. 3,100/- with possession. The deed of mortgage contained the following terms:—

1. That interest would run on Rs. 3,100/- at Re. 0-10-0 per cent per mensem till realisation.

2. The period of redemption would be two years.

3. During the period of mortgage "the tenant as may be shall execute the rent notes in favour of the mortgagee and whatever rent shall be realised will be credited in lieu of interest and if the amount of rent shall exceed the amount of interest, the difference shall be deducted from the original sum due, but if the amount of interest shall exceed the amount of interest, the difference shall be deducted from the original sum due". But if the amount of interest shall exceed the amount of rent, then the mortgagor shall pay it.

4. Notwithstanding any vacancy during the period of the mortgage the rent would continue.

5. During the period of the mortgage an account of the rent and interest shall be settled after every six months.

6. The mortgagor undertook to keep the house in repairs during the period of the mortgage and in default of repairs by him the mortgagee was to be entitled to execute the necessary repairs and add the cost to his dues.

7. "The burden of the mortgage money shall be on the mortgaged house. In case the amount is not realised from the house, the mortgagee shall have a right to take steps to realise his money" from the mortgagor and his property of every kind.

3. On the same day the mortgagor executed another document in favour of the mortgagee reciting that his house in Ratlam was mortgaged with possession to the creditor who was "having its possession" and the mortgagor had taken the same on rent at Rs. 20 per month on the following terms:—

1. The executant would pay the rent every month regularly and in default of payment of two months' rent the mortgagee would be entitled to get him evicted.

2. The executant would white-wash and repair the house and keep it in good condition.

3. Kesharimal would be entitled to increase or decrease the rent.

4. The executant would vacate the house whenever asked to do so.

5. The executant would hand over possession of the house in the same condition in which he had received it.

4. Kesharimal filed a suit on his mortgage in 1954 and a preliminary decree for sale for the amount of Rs. 5,637-6-0 besides interest at the rate of Re. 0-10-0 per cent per mensem for six months on the sum of Rs. 3,600 was duly passed. The defendant was directed to pay the full amount of the decree before the 24th May 1955 and in case of his doing so the property was to be released from the mortgage and the plaintiffs were to hand over all the documents which they had in their possession, but in case of failure to pay the plaintiffs would be entitled to file an application for the execution of the decree and get the property auctioned; and in case of non-satisfaction of the decree by the sale, the plaintiffs were to be at liberty to recover the balance of the decretal claim by a personal decree against the defendant.

5. It appears that Kesharimal had died during the pendency of the suit and his legal representatives were brought on record and the preliminary decree passed in their favour. Whatever be the reason no application for a final decree for sale of the property was made within the period fixed under the Limitation Act. The application for this purpose made by the executors to the estate of Kesharimal was dismissed on July 29, 1960 as barred by limitation. On December 27, 1960 the said executors filed a suit for ejectment against the appellant alleging that the rent for the premises had remained unpaid from September 29, 1957 till November 28, 1960. An amount of Rs. 731-75 was arrived at by totalling the rent for the period mentioned and mesne profits from 29th November 1960 to 26th December 1960 at the same rate and incidental charges and expenses and deducting therefrom the rent for two months which was barred by the lapse of time the plaintiffs asked for a decree for ejectment and further mesne profits. The trial Judge dismissed the suit. But on appeal this was set aside and the plaintiffs' claim allowed in full. The High Court in Second Appeal maintained the decree of the appellate Court.

6. The points urged by counsel for the appellant before us were:

1. The rent note executed simultaneously with the mortgage was a mere device to secure payment of interest and did not record an independent transaction. Further it did not create any relationship of landlord and tenant.

2. The plaintiffs' right as mortgagee merged in the decree and execution thereof being barred by the laws of limitation the plaintiffs had lost all their rights.

3. The mortgage being extinguished the mortgagor could not bring a suit for redemption.

7. Before examining the contentions urged we propose to note the substance of the two documents and what the parties sought to achieve thereby. It is clear that the mortgage was with possession of the house and that the mortgagee wanted to make sure of Rs. 20/- per month irrespective of the fact as to whether the mortgagor or some other person occupied the house and notwithstanding any vacancy during the period of the mortgage. The sum of Rs. 20/- per month which the mortgagee wanted to ensure payment of every month exceeded the interest stipulated for by Re. 0-10-0 per month. There was to be no decrease in this amount even if the mortgagor were to repay a portion of the principal. The mortgagee had further the right to increase or decrease the rent and the mortgagor covenanted to vacate the property whenever the mortgagee asked for possession. In other words, if the mortgagee chose to go into possession himself, the mortgagor would be entitled to have Rs. 20/- p. m. credited towards the dues on the mortgage so long as he continued in possession. Even during the period of redemption when the mortgagee could not have sued for the mortgage money he still had a right to evict the mortgagor in case the latter defaulted in payment of Rs. 20/- a month for two months.

8. It would appear that the relationship between the parties was not simply that of a mortgagee and mortgagor: the creditor also had the rights of a landlord qua his tenant besides other rights conferred on him which were greater than those possessed by an ordinary landlord. There can be no doubt that by leasing the property back to the mortgagor in the way mentioned above the mortgagee tried to ensure the regular payment of interest but his rights were not limited to that alone. In case he decided to go into possession himself the only remedy left to the mortgagor was to sue for redemption. This right under the Limitation Act of 1908 was to ensure for 60 years from the date of the mortgage and the mortgagor had not lost his right to redeem notwithstanding the passing of the preliminary decree in the mortgage suit. The mortgage security continued even after the passing of the said decree: if the mortgagee had continued in possession of the property after the passing of the preliminary decree and did not apply for a final decree, he would only lose his right to recover the mortgage money by sale of the property unless he applied for that purpose within the period of limitation fixed by the Limitation Act. After the mortgagee had lost his right to apply for a final decree for sale he did not lose his status as a mortgagee: he only lost his remedy to recover the mortgage money by sale. The mortgagor did not lose his right to redeem.

9. We may now examine the authorities which were cited at the Bar in aid of the respective contentions. In aid of his first proposition Mr. Mukherjee relied principally on the decisions of the Bombay High Court in Harilal Bhagwanji v. Hemshanker, (AIR 1958 Bom 8) and Ramnarain v. Sukhi, (AIR 1957 Pat 24). The facts of the Bombay case were as follows. The defendant-appellant mortgaged with possession the house in suit for Rs. 7,500/- on August 23, 1952. Under the deed of mortgage the principal amount was to carry interest at 9 per cent and both principal and interest were charged on the mortgaged property. A portion of the house was already in the occupation of the plaintiff as the defendant's tenant on a monthly rental of Rs. 15/- and another portion was let out to one Mansukhlal at the rate of Rs. 17/- p. m., the defendant himself occupying the remaining part of the house. Simultaneously with the mortgage a rent note was executed on the same day in respect of the portion of the house in the defendant's occupation which was leased back to him by the plaintiff for a term of six months at the rate of Rs. 24-4-0 per month. The plaintiff sued the defendant for possession of the said portion and for arrears of rent on the strength of the rent note. The defence was that the rent note was a nominal document executed for securing payment of interest and that no relationship of landlord and tenant was created. It was contended that the principal money and interest were to be realised from the mortgaged property and a suit for rent alone which was in reality interest would not lie. It was held by the High Court that the fact that the two documents had varying periods of operation would not make any difference in the determination of the question as to whether they formed part of the same transaction or not. Further the rent to be realised from the tenant Mansukhlal was to be credited towards interest and the significant circumstance was that the rent payable by the defendant under the rent note was fixed with a view to making up the interest on the mortgage sum at 9 per cent. Although the mortgage deed recited that the plaintiff could let out the property to anyone he liked but as the property was already wholly occupied the High Court took the view that the question of leasing it out to another tenant was not in contemplation of the parties. As a result of the above findings the Court held that the rent note was a mere device for securing payment of interest. Reference was placed on AIR 1957 Pat 24 (supra) and it was held that although the decree for eviction of the defendant from the suit property could not stand, that awarding arrears of rent was to be maintained.

10. In AIR 1957 Pat 24 (supra) an application was made by the defendant for setting aside the decree of the Small Cause Court evicting him. The defendant had executed a usufructuary mortgage in favour of the plaintiff and by a kerayanama executed on the same day had taken back the house on a rent of Rs. 6/- per month from the plaintiff. He had not paid any rent for over three years and the suit was brought for recovery of arrears of rent for the said period. It was his contention that the agreement between the parties was not for execution of a usufructuary mortgage but one of a simple mortgage. It was further contended on his behalf that the mortgage and the kerayanama were one and the same transaction and no relationship of landlord and tenant was created and the ijara term having expired the plaintiff's remedy to recover the house rent which represented the interest on the mortgage money could only lie under Section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act. The High Court referred to several decisions and came to the conclusion that the intention of the parties was that the mortgagee would not get possession of the mortgaged property but would only get interest on the amount advanced in the shape of rent so long as the lease continued and the amount payable under the kerayanama was interest on the mortgage money and not rent for use and occupation of the mortgaged property. The mortgage bond and the kerayanama being part of the same transaction the mortgagee in execution of his decree for money obtained in respect of the so-called rent of the house against the mortgagor would not be entitled to execute the decree for arrears of rent by sale of the property, as such a case would be governed by Order 34, Rule 14, Civil Procedure Code. In the result the claim of the creditor in excess of 9 per cent. p. a. was rejected but as the defendant had been in occupation of the house, although under an invalid lease, he was directed to pay compensation to the plaintiff for use and occupation of the house for the period of his occupation.

11. Reference may also be made to the case of Umeshwar Prasad v. Dwarika Prasad, (AIR 1944 Pat 5). In this case the mortgagor executed a usufructuary mortgage of certain properties for Rs. 14,400/- for a period of seven years. Soon thereafter the mortgagee leased back the entire property to the mortgagor for a period of about seven years at the annual rent of Rs. 432/- which was equal to the interest on the sum advanced. It was held by the Patna High Court that the mortgage bond and the lease deed were parts of the same transaction and the fact that the periods of the two deeds were not identical was immaterial and the case was governed by Order 34, Rule 14 and as such the mortgagee could not execute the decree for arrears of rent by sale of equity of redemption.

12. In Ganpat Ruri v. Md. Asraf Ali, (AIR 1961 Pat 133) the plaintiff had filed a suit claiming arrears of rent at the rate of Rs. 20/- per month in respect of a house which had been given to him by the defendant in usufructuary mortgage by a registered document, the property being let out to the defendant on lease on the same day at the monthly rent of Rs. 20/-. Applying the test as to whether on a reasonable construction of the two documents the property given in security was not only for the principal amount secured under the bond but also for the interest accruing thereupon, the Court held that the transactions were two different transactions and for this reliance was placed on the fact that no rate of interest was prescribed in the bond and Rs. 20/- p. m. could not possibly be treated as interest due on the principal amount of Rs. 500/-.

13. In contrast with the above cases reference may be made to the case of Jankidas v. Laxminarain, ILR (1957) 7 Raj 268 = (AIR 1957 Raj 32). In this case the plaintiffs who were usufructuary mortgagees of a house gave a lease of it to the defendant mortgagor on rent and put the lessee in possession thereof on the same day. The rent remaining unpaid the plaintiff filed a suit for arrears of rent and ejectment. Ultimately however the High Court of the former State of Marwar granted a decree for arrears of rent but refused the prayer for ejectment. The plaintiff thereupon filed the suit in 1953 claiming arrears of rent amounting to Rs. 126/- for three years preceding the date of the suit. The suit was resisted by the defendant who among other pleas, contended that the suit was barred by Or. II, Rule 2, Civil P. C. There it was said that although the mortgage and the deed of lease represented one transaction that would not mean that no tenancy came into existence by the execution of the deed of lease. It was held that the right which arose to the mortgagees to sue for rent was an independent obligation though it might be part of the same transaction in the sense that it was brought into existence by an arrangement made at the same time for a common purpose.

14. In Lalchand v. Nenuram, ILR (1962) 12 Raj 947 = (AIR 1963 Raj 69) the defendants had executed a mortgage in favour of the plaintiff's agreeing to pay interest at 8 per cent. p. a. which came to Rs. 27-8-0 per month. The mortgagors had delivered possession to the mortgagees and a registered qubuliat reciting that they were taking on lease the property described at a monthly rental of Rs. 27-8-0. The lower Courts took the view that the mortgage deed was a rent note and part and parcel of the same transaction and the plaintiffs were not entitled to get a decree for ejectment on the basis of the rent note. Rejecting this the Rajasthan High Court observed at p. 952 (of ILR Raj) = (at pp. 71-72 of AIR):

"Whether the two documents represent one transaction or two different transactions, a Court of law should be anxious to give effect to the terms in both the documents instead of being unduly critical about them Having secured the possession of the mortgage, the mortgagee is further entitled to lease it out even to the mortgagor. It is in the interest of the mortgagor that the property is leased out to him as he can better look after it. There is nothing objectionable in this, nor is there any statutory prohibition for such transactions. Now if the parties do this by executing proper documents, it is the duty of the Court of law to give effect to them".

15. The reasoning of the Rajasthan judgment seems to be logical and commends itself to us. In all such cases the leasing back of the property arises because of the mortgage with possession but we find ourselves unable to hold that the mortgagee does not secure to himself any rights under the deed of lease but must proceed on his mortgage in case the amount secured to him under the deed of lease is not paid. If the security is good and considered to be sufficient by the mortgagee there is no reason why he should be driven to file a suit on his mortgage when he can file a suit for realisation of the moneys due under the rent note. The position of the creditor is strengthened whereas in this case the interest on the amount of the mortgage is not the same as the rental fixed. If during the continuance of the security the mortgagee wants to sue the mortgagor on the basis of the rent note and take possession himself or to induct some other tenant thereby securing to himself the amount which the mortgagor had covenanted to pay, there can be no legal objection to it. Under the provisions of Order 34, Rule 4, he cannot deprive the mortgagor of his right to redeem excepting by proceeding on his mortgage. Although we express no final opinion on this point it may be that a mortgagee who secures a decree for payment of arrears of rent cannot put the property to sale for realisation of the amount decreed but there can be no objection to his suing for possession if the rent note entitles him to do so. So long as the mortgagor had a right to redeem the mortgage he can always pay off the mortgagee and get back possession. This position would continue so long as the property is not sold under a final decree for sale under the provisions of Order 34, Civil P. C.

16. In our opinion the second contention put forward on behalf of the appellant has no force. The rights of a mortgagee do not merge in his rights under the preliminary decree for sale. As already mentioned, the mortgagee lost his right to recover the money by sale of the mortgaged property; otherwise his security remained intact and the mortgagor continued to have his right to redeem the property.

17. As regards the third point the only statutory provision to which a reference was made was Section 28 of the Limitation Act of 1908 which provided that:

"At the determination of the period hereby limited to any person for instituting a suit for possession of any property, his right to such property shall be extinguished".

If the right of the mortgagee arose on the strength of the rent note which continued to be in force notwithstanding that the period for applying for a final decree for sale had expired, there could be no extinction of his right to sue for possession because of Section 28 of the Limitation Act.

18. In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(A) Constitution of India, Art. 227 — Powers of High Court — Not greater than those under Article 226 — Power limited to seeing that tribunals function within limits of their authority — High Court cannot sit in appeal against order of Tribunal — High Court while agreeing with Revenue Tribunal on all material findings, differing in two material aspects which affect jurisdiction of Revenue Tribunal to grant necessary relief — High Court commits no error of jurisdiction.

(Para 9)

(B) Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act (1956), Section 6 — Natural guardians — Mother comes only after death of father — Position is same under Hindu Law — Father though alive not taking any interest in minor and as good as non-existent — Mother treated as natural guardian — (Hindu Law — Minority and Guardianship).

The position in the Hindu Law as well as under Section 6 of the Act is that normally when the father is alive he is the natural guardian and it is only after him that the mother becomes the natural guardian. Where the father was alive but had fallen out with the mother of the minor daughter and was living separately for several years without taking any interest in the affairs of the minor who was in the keeping and care of the mother it was held that in the peculiar circumstances, the father should be treated as if non-existent and therefore the mother could be considered as the natural guardian of the minor's person as well as property and had power to bind the minor by granting lease of her land in proper course of management of the property.

VAIDIALINGAM, J.:— This appeal, by special leave, is directed against the judgment and order dated July 13, 1966 of the High Court of Bombay (Nagpur Bench) in Special Civil Application No. 499 of 1965 filed under Article 227 of the Constitution by the first respondent herein (to be referred as the tenant).

2. The appellant (to be referred as the landlord) was the daughter of one Champatrao. She had obtained from her father under a gift deed dated September 15, 1944 the suit field survey No. 56 of an extent of 27 acres 37 gunthas. As owner of the lands she served a notice dated March 31, 1962 on the tenant informing him of her intention to terminate his tenancy of the lands on the ground that she required the lands bona fide for her personal cultivation. On March 30, 1963 she filed an application before the Naib Tahsildar, Darwha under Section 36 read with Section 39 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, Bombay Act No. XCIX of 1958 (hereinafter referred to as the Act) for termination of tenancy of the tenant and for directing him to surrender possession of the entire lands comprised in field survey No. 56. Later on she amended her application and prayed in the alternative that if for any reason she was found not entitled to get possession of the entire lands, she may be allowed to recover half of the lands in the possession of the tenant and that in respect of that half, in the eastern portion 13 acres and 38 gunthas may be allotted to her.

3. The tenant resisted the claim of the landlord on various grounds. He pleaded that the father and mother of the landlord had fallen out very long ago and that the landlord was a minor, was being looked after and protected by her mother Smt. Chandrabhagabai and the mother was managing the suit properties on behalf of her minor daughter. In the course of such management the suit properties were being leased in his favour from time to time beginning from 1951-52 and as such he has been in possession as tenant from April, 1951. Though the original leases granted by the mother were oral, for the year 1956-57 he had executed a kabuliyat in favour of the landlord represented by her mother as guardian. Inasmuch as he had been the tenant of the properties under a lease created prior to April 1, 1957, he had acquired the status of a protected lessee even before the coming into force of the Act. He further pleaded that as the landlord had not filed the application within one year of the coming into force of the Act, her claim was barred by limitation and the application under Section 39 was not maintainable. He had also raised a controversy regarding her date of birth as well as the validity of the notice dated March 31, 1962, issued by the landlord.

4. The Naib Tahsildar held that the application filed by the landlord under Section 36 read with Section 39 was maintainable and that the notice issued by her on March 31, 1962 was valid. He further found that the landlord was born on July 6, 1944 and attained majority on July 6, 1962. On an interpretation of Section 39, the Naib Tahsildar found that the landlord was entitled to file the application within one year after her attaining majority and in this case the application has been filed within that time. He further found that there were oral leases granted by the mother of the landlord in favour of the tenant from 1951 onwards and that the tenant had also executed a lease deed in favour of the landlord represented by her mother on February 12, 1956 for the year 1956-57 and that he has been in possession of the lands as tenant even during the period 1958-59. But the Naib Tahsildar held that as the father of the appellant was alive and was in law her natural guardian, the lease executed by the tenant on February 12, 1956 was not legal and valid as the mother was not entitled to represent her minor daughter. But as the tenant was in occupation of the lands during the year 1958-59, he must be treated as a deemed tenant under Section 6 of the Act. On this reasoning he held that the lease in favour of the tenant can be taken as a lease after April 1, 1957 and hence the landlord was entitled to get relief under Section 39 of the Act. In view of his further finding that the landlord had no other land and no other source of income and as the suit lands were less than the family holding, she was entitled to get possession of the entire lands from the tenant. Accordingly he granted the relief asked for by the landlord in full. The findings of the Naib Tahsildar enumerated above were confirmed by the Sub-Divisional Officer, Darwha in the appeal filed by the tenant. The Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, whose revisional jurisdiction was invoked by the tenant also substantially confirmed the findings of the two subordinate authorities.

5. All these three orders were challenged by the tenant before the High Court in the writ petition under Article 227 of the Constitution. The High Court, in its order under appeal, has accepted the findings of facts regarding the date of birth of the landlord; the date of her attaining majority as well as the legal validity of the notice issued by her on March 31, 1962. The High Court also accepted the finding recorded by the Revenue Tribunal that the father and mother had fallen out and were living separate and that the father was not looking after the interests of his minor daughter and that, on the other hand, the landlord was living under the care and protection of her mother Smt. Chandrabhagabai, who was also managing the suit properties on her behalf. The High Court also found that the tenant has been in possession of the lands on the basis of the lease granted in his favour by the mother from 1951 onwards. But the High Court differed from the views expressed by the Revenue Tribunal on two important aspects, namely, (i) legal validity of the lease granted by the mother of the landlord in favour of the tenant and (ii) the maintainability of the application filed by the landlord under Section 39 of the Act. Regarding validity of the lease granted by the mother, the High Court held that even if the oral leases from 1951 onwards are eliminated, there has been a written lease executed by the tenant on February 12, 1956 in favour of the landlord represented by her mother for the year 1956-57. As the father was not taking any interest in his minor daughter's affairs and as the mother was looking after her minor daughter's interest and managing the suit properties, the mother must be considered, in the circumstances, to be the natural guardian of the landlord and as natural guardian she was entitled to lease the properties and hence the written lease granted by her on February 12, 1956 was legal and valid, and therefore the lease in favour of the tenant is one created prior to April 1, 1957 and hence Section 39 was not attracted.

6. The High Court on a construction of Section 39 of the Act held that as the Act had come into force on January 28, 1961, the application should have been filed within one year, namely, on or before January 28, 1962. The landlord was not entitled to file the application as she has done in the present case within one year of her attaining majority as Section 39 does not give any such extended period for minors. Hence the High Court held that application filed on March 30, 1963 was barred by limitation. Notwithstanding the finding that the application under Section 39 was not maintainable the High Court held that the landlord's application could be treated as one filed under Section 36 read with Section 38 and as the application had been filed within the period referred to in Section 38, she could be granted the relief under the latter section. In this view the High Court held that though the landlord was not entitled to possession of the entire field as claimed by her, she is nevertheless entitled to resume for personal cultivation one third of the family holding, or half of the land leased by her, whichever is more. In this view the High Court remanded the proceedings to the Naib Tahsildar for passing necessary orders treating the application filed by the appellant as one under Section 36 read with Section 38.

7. Mr. G. L. Sanghi, learned counsel for the appellant raised three contentions: (i) the High Court in exercising jurisdiction under Article 227 of the Constitution has functioned in this case as a Court of Appeal and interfered with the concurrent findings of facts recorded by the three revenue tribunals and such exercise of jurisdiction is not warranted by the decisions of this Court; (ii) the High Court's view that the lease executed by the mother on behalf of the appellant on February 12, 1956, as guardian of the appellant is valid in law, is erroneous; (iii) the High Court's view that the application filed by the appellant before the Naib Tahsildar on March 30, 1963 is barred by limitation and as such the application under Section 39 is not maintainable, is again erroneous.

8. On the other hand, Mr. Danial A. Latifi, learned counsel appearing for the tenant respondent has urged that the High Court has not exceeded its jurisdiction under Article 227, but has strictly limited its inquiry to find out whether the subordinate tribunals have functioned within the limits of their jurisdiction. All the findings of facts recorded by those tribunals have been accepted by the High Court. The High Court has only differed on the question of interpretation to be placed on the material sections so as to find out whether the revenue tribunals had jurisdiction to entertain the application of the appellant under Section 36 read with Section 39 of the Act. The learned counsel also pointed out that on the findings recorded by the revenue tribunals about the father not taking any interest in the affairs of the minor daughter, the High Court has come to a different conclusion of law that the mother, under the circumstances, was the natural guardian of her minor daughter and was competent to enter into lease transactions on behalf of the appellant. If it was found that the lease transaction entered into with the tenant by the mother of the appellant was valid, the nature of the reliefs to be granted to the appellant under the Act will radically differ. The counsel further urged that the construction placed upon Section 39 of the Act by the High Court is also correct.

9. Mr. Sanghi in support of his first contention has drawn our attention to the principles laid down in Nagendra Nath Bora v. Commr. of Hills Division and Appeals, Assam, 1958 SCR 1240 = (AIR 1958 SC 398) and in Rambhau v. Shankar Singh, Civil Appeal No. 35 of 1966, D/- 17-3-1966 (SC). It is no doubt true that this Court has held in those decisions that the powers of the High Court under Article 227 are not greater than the powers under Article 226 of the Constitution. It has been further laid down that the power of interference under Article 227 was limited to seeing that the tribunals function within the limits of their authority and that the High Courts cannot sit in appeal against the order of a tribunal in a petition under Article 227. In our opinion, the High Court in this case cannot be considered to have exceeded its jurisdiction under Article 227 of the Constitution. We have already stated that all findings on material facts have been accepted by the High Court. It is only on two material aspects which affect the jurisdiction of the revenue tribunals to grant the necessary relief under the Act that the High Court differed. Those were: (i) the power of the mother on the facts found by the tribunals to grant the lease on behalf of her minor daughter and its legal effect; and (ii) the maintainability of the application of the appellant under Section 39 of the Act. Therefore, we cannot accept the contention of Mr. Sanghi that any error has been committed by the High Court in considering these aspects in proceedings under Article 227.

10. The nature of the relief that could be granted to the appellant under the Act depends upon the question whether the tenancy in this case has been created "not earlier than the first day of April, 1957". There is no controversy that the appellant was not owning lands exceeding a family holding. If the tenancy in favour of the tenant in this case is one created "not earlier than the first day of April, 1957" and if the other conditions mentioned in Section 39 are satisfied, the relief could be granted to the appellant under that section. We have already referred to the facts that the appellant's application was under Section 36 read with Section 39. In order to find out whether the lease in this case is one created "not earlier than the first day of April, 1957", it is really necessary to inquire about the legal effect of the lease executed by the mother as guardian of the appellant on February 12, 1956, for the year 1956-57. If that lease is valid and binding on the appellant, the result will be that Section 39 will not be attracted. Therefore, we will first consider the question as to the legal effect of the lease granted by the mother, which is the subject of the second contention raised by Mr. Sanghi. Mr. Sanghi urged that on the findings of all revenue tribunals and accepted by the High Court, Champat-rao, the father of the appellant was admittedly alive. If so, the father is the natural guardian of the appellant under the Hindu Law. Though the appellant may have been staying under the protection of her mother Smt. Chandrabhagabai, the mother had no authority in law to execute the lease deed so as to bind the appellant. The counsel further urged that even if it be held that the mother was competent to enter into lease transactions on behalf of her minor daughter, there is no evidence led by the tenant that the lease is beneficial or advantageous to the interest of the minor. Under those circumstances the counsel urged, the lease is void and has to be ignored, and if so, this is not a case of tenancy created "not earlier than the first day of April, 1957" and hence Section 39 fully applies to the facts of this case.

11. We are not impressed with this contention of Mr. Sanghi. Mr. Sanghi referred us to certain decisions where the powers of a guardian of a minor have been considered. But in the view that we take that the contention of Mr. Sanghi in this regard is not acceptable to us, no useful purpose will be served by reference to those decisions. We have already referred to the fact that the father and mother of the appellant had fallen out and that the mother was living separately for over 20 years. It was the mother who was actually managing the affairs of her minor daughter, who was under her care and protection. From 1951 onwards the mother in the usual course of management had been leasing out the properties of the appellant to the tenant. Though from 1951 to 1956 the leases were oral, for the year 1956-57 a written lease was executed by the tenant in favour of the appellant represented by her mother. It is no doubt true that the father was alive but he was not taking any interest in the affairs of the minor and it was as good as if he was non-existent so far as the minor appellant was concerned. We are inclined to agree with the view of the High Court that in the particular circumstances of this case, the mother can be considered to be the natural guardian of her minor daughter. It is needless to state that even before the passing of the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956 (Act 32 of 1956) the mother is the natural guardian after the father. The above Act came into force on August 25, 1956 and under Section 6 the natural guardians of a Hindu minor in respect of the minor's person as well as the minor's property are the father and after him the mother. The position in the Hindu Law before this enactment was also the same. That is why we have stated that normally when the father is alive he is the natural guardian and it is only after him that the mother becomes the natural guardian. But on the facts found above the mother was rightly treated by the High Court as the natural guardian.

12. It has also been found by the High Court and all the revenue tribunals that the mother was protecting the appellant and looking after her interest and was also managing the suit lands by leasing them to the tenant. There is no evidence to establish that the transaction of lease is in any way an imprudent one or not in the interest of the minor appellant. It has also been found that the lease in favour of the tenant has begun from 1951. Though the lease for some years was oral, for the year 1956-57 a written lease deed was executed on February, 12, 1956 by the tenant in favour of the appellant represented by her mother as guardian. If so, it follows, as held by the High Court, that the tenancy had been created even prior "to the first day of April, 1957". Though the revenue tribunals also found that the tenant was in possession of the properties as lessee from 1951 onwards, they declined to recognise his rights, on the view that those leases were not binding on the appellant. That view, as we have already pointed out, is erroneous. Therefore, it follows that the contention of Mr. Sanghi that the High Court's view about the validity and legality of the lease executed by the mother on February 12, 1956 is not correct, cannot be accepted.

13. In view of the above finding that the lease executed on February 12, 1956 is valid and binding on the appellant, it follows that this is not a case of a tenancy created by the landlord "not earlier than the first day of April, 1957" which is one of the essential ingredients for the maintainability of the application under Section 39. Therefore, the third contention of Mr. Sanghi that the construction placed upon Section 39 by the High Court and holding that the application of the appellant is barred by limitation is not correct, does not arise for consideration. The applicability of Section 39 would have arisen for consideration only if it had been found that the lease by the mother is not valid and by virtue of occupation of the land in 1958-59 the tenant is to be considered as a 'deemed tenant' under Section 6.

14. We may, however, indicate that the High Court has held that Section 39 will not apply on the ground that the lease in this case is prior to April 1, 1957, and the application filed by the appellant on March 30, 1963 was barred by limitation. So far as the view of the High Court that the lease in this case is one created prior to April 1, 1957 is concerned, we have already accepted that finding. Regarding the application being barred by limitation, the view of the High Court briefly is as follows: The Act in the Vidarbha region came into force on January 28, 1961. Under Section 39, sub-section (1), the application by the landlord should be filed within one year from the date of the Act coming into force, i.e., on or before January 28, 1962. Sections 38 and 39-A while providing a period for making the application had also enabled a minor to file an application within one year of his or her attaining majority. Similar provisions are not to be found in Section 39 (1). Therefore, the fact that the appellant attained majority on July 6, 1962 and had filed the application within one year of her attaining majority, is of no avail. The High Court declined to accept the contention on behalf of the appellant that the words but subject to the provisions of sub-section (2) occurring in Section 39 (1) referred to the enabling provisions in favour of the minor contained in sub-section (2) of Section 38. At any rate as one of the ingredients for attracting Section 39, namely, the tenancy having been created after April 1, 1957, is not present in this case and as such Section 39 stands eliminated, we do not think it necessary to express any opinion on the construction placed by the High Court on Section 39 (1) regarding other aspects.

15. The High Court has rightly pointed out that the revenue tribunals have only proceeded to grant relief to the appellant on the basis that Section 39 is inapplicable. However, the High Court, even after holding that Section 39 does not apply, has shown consideration to the appellant when it has treated her application as one under Section 36 read with Section 38. Applying Section 38, the appellant would not be entitled to the possession of the entire field. As per clause (a) proviso (i) of sub-sec. (4) of Section 38, she would be entitled to resume for personal cultivation either one third of the family holding or half of the lands leased by her, whichever is more. It is seen that the High Court was informed that the family holding in this case consists of 32 acres and on that basis the High Court held that half of the land leased would be more and as such the appellant would be entitled to get possession of half of the area leased, namely, half of 27 acres and 37 gunthas. It is for the purpose of effecting a division of the leased properties into two halves and place the landlord and the tenant in possession of one portion, that the High Court after setting aside the order of the revenue tribunals remanded the matter to the Naib Tahsildar. Those directions given by the High Court, in our view, are perfectly correct and justified.

16. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs of the first respondent.
Appeal dismissed.

M. HIDAYATULLAH, C. J., G. K. MITTER AND A. N. RAY, JJ.

Bajaj Auto Ltd., Poona, Appellant
v. N. K. Firodia and another etc., Respondents.

Civil Appeals Nos. 546, 547 and 692 to 1031 of 1970, D/- 4-9-1970.

Companies Act (1956), Section 111 (2) — Transfer of shares — Absolute discretion vested in directors under articles of company to refuse registration — Test for Court to consider how far reasons for refusal were justified — Refusal in this case was held arbitrary and unjustified.

Where the directors under the articles of a company have uncontrolled and absolute discretion in regard to declining registration of transfer of shares, discretion does not mean a bare affirmation or negation of a proposal. Discretion implies just and proper consideration of the proposal in the facts and circumstances of the case. In the exercise of that discretion the directors will act for the paramount interest of the company and for the general interest of the shareholders because the directors are in a fiduciary position both towards the company and towards every shareholder. The directors are therefore required to act bona fide and not arbitrarily and not for any collateral motive. (Para 13)

If the articles permit the directors to decline to register transfer of shares without stating the reasons, the Court would not draw unfavourable inferences against the directors because they did not give reasons. In other words, the Court will assume that the directors acted reasonably and bona fide and those who allege to the contrary would have to prove and establish the same by evidence. Where however the directors gave reasons

the Court would consider whether they were legitimate and whether the directors proceeded on a right or wrong principle. (Para 14)

The reasons of the directors have to be tested from three points of view: First, whether the directors acted in the interest of the company; secondly, whether they acted on a wrong principle; and, thirdly, whether they acted with an oblique motive or for a collateral purpose. The discretion of the directors would be nullified if it were established that the Directors acted oppressively, capriciously or in some other way mala fide. (Para 15)

If the Court found that the Directors gave reasons which were legitimate, the Court would not overrule that decision merely on the ground that the Court would not have come to the same conclusion. (Para 22)

The discretion of the Directors is to be tested as the opinion of fair and sensible men in the interest of the company. (Para 34)

Held, (in the circumstances of the case) that the Directors did not act bona fide nor did they act in the general interest of the company. On the contrary they acted upon a wrong principle and for the oblique motive. The inescapable conclusion was that the Directors acted arbitrarily and unjustifiably. Case law discussed.

B. Dadachanji and Co., with them), for Appellant (In all the Appeals); M/s. F. S. Nariman, A. B. Diwan, K. J. Merchant and I. N. Shroff, Advocates, for Respondent No. 1 (In all the Appeals).

RAY, J.:— These appeals are by special leave against the order dated 14th March, 1970 made by the Company Law Board, Department of Company Affairs, Ministry of Industrial Development, Internal Trade and Company Affairs, New Delhi, under Section 111 (3) of the Companies Act, 1956 directing the appellant company to register transfer of 3643 shares forming the subject matter of these appeals.

2. The respondents in these appeals are Jaya Hind Industries Ltd., N. K. Firodia and other persons who will be referred to as the Firodia group. The appellant will be referred to as the Bajaj group.

3. The Firodia group lodged in different lots 3643 shares of the appellant for being transferred to different names. Jaya Hind Industries Private Ltd., applied for transfer of 1500 shares in their names. Firodia applied for transfer of 30 shares in his name. The other transfers were in the names of associates, nominees and friends of the Firodia group. The Board of the appellant refused to register transfer of the said shares at the Board meetings held on 23 May, 1968 in respect of 2532 shares and on 24 June, 1968 in respect of 1111 shares. The appellant communicated the said refusal to transfer the shares in the month of June, 1968.

4. Thereafter, in the month of August, 1968, 338 appeals were filed before the Company Law Board in respect of refusal of the appellant to transfer 3643 shares. The Company

Law Board by its letter dated 16th January, 1969 asked the appellant to disclose the reasons for refusal to register transfer of shares. The appellant company gave three reasons for refusal to register transfer of the said 3643 shares. First, that Jaya Hind Industries Private Ltd., was a beneficiary to the extent of 4th share in the Managing Agency remuneration receivable by Jamnalal Sons Private Ltd., from Bajaj Auto Ltd., and yet N. K. Firodia chose to write to the Company Law Board against the extension of the Managing Agency of Jamnalal Sons Private, Ltd. The company further said that N. K. Firodia, according to the appellant company, was their representatives and when N. K. Firodia acted in such a treacherous fashion and against the interest of the company and behind the back of the Board of Directors it became evident that Firodia's design was to create mischief. Secondly, the transfer of shares received from Jaya Hind Industries Private Ltd., was part of the design to acquire interest in the company which was likely to result in a threat to the smooth functioning of the management of the company, and to vote down the passing of a special resolution required for the management of the company, and, therefore, transfer should not be permitted. Thirdly, the purchase of shares by Jaya Hind Industries Private Ltd., was not with a view to bona fide investment but was with a mala fide purpose and evil design. It was said that the issued share capital of the company was 1,04,250 shares of Rs. 100 each. Firodia group was holding 21,500 shares. Transferring further shares to the names of Firodia group would obstruct the business of the appellant company in the passing of special resolution which was required in the day to day business of the company. It was also said that from the investment point of view with a dividend of Rs. 10 per share on a paid up share of Rs. 100 the purchase price paid by Firodia group was artificial and could only be with a view to try to take control and/or obstruct the business and smooth working of the company and to injure the existing management. The appellant company concluded by saying that the Board of Directors came to the conclusion that it was in the interest of the company to refuse the said transfers.

5. In order to appreciate whether the Directors used the discretion in proper exercise of their fiduciary power and the reasons were bona fide and legitimate in the interest of the company as a whole, it is necessary to refer to certain features of the case.

6. In the year 1947 a joint venture business was entered into between Jaya Hind Industries Ltd. and Bachhraj Trading Corporation Ltd. In the month of March, 1950, Bachhraj Trading Corporation suffered heavy losses and the joint venture was transferred to Bajaj Factories Ltd., with the consent of Jaya Hind Industries Ltd.

7. In the year 1952 N. K. Firodia became a Director of Eachhraj Trading Corporation Ltd. In the month of April, 1954 Jaya Hind Industries Ltd., acquired 1800 shares of the face value of Rs. 1,80,000 of Bachhraj Trading Corporation Ltd., at Rs. 36/8/- per share which together with 50 shares held by N. K. Firodia equalled 3/8ths of the share capital. In the month of May, 1954, Bachhraj Trading Corporation Ltd., again took over the business of the joint venture from Bajaj Factories Ltd. In the year 1955 N. K. Firodia as a Director of Eachhraj Trading Corporation Ltd., applied to the Central Government for the manufacturing licence of scooters, auto rickshaws and tempo three wheeler vehicles. In the year 1957 Bachhraj Trading Corporation Ltd. was granted the manufacturing licence of tempo three wheelers. In 1958 Bajaj Tempo Private Ltd. was formed to manufacture tempo three wheeler vehicles and N. K. Firodia was appointed the Managing Director of the same. In the year 1959 Bachhraj Trading Corporation Ltd. was granted licence to manufacture scooters and auto rickshaws. In the year 1960 the name of Bachhraj Trading Corporation Ltd. was changed to Bajaj Auto Private Ltd. Shares of Bajaj Auto Private Ltd. were offered to shareholders of Bachhraj Trading Corporation in proportion to their shareholding.

8. Between the years 1954 and 1960, Jaya Hind Industries Private Ltd. of the Firodia group had provided substantial funds amounting to Rs. 4,36,000 to the appellant company in its former name. In the year 1960 there was a Managing Agency agreement between the appellant company and Jamnalal Sons Private Ltd. for a period of five years. In 1960 when the appellant was converted into a public limited company and Firodia was appointed as its Chief Executive, the respondent company of the Firodia group by themselves, their shareholders and friends subscribed for 37½ per cent of the shares offered to the then existing shareholders of the appellant company. An agreement was entered into between Jamnalal Sons, Private Ltd. Managing Agents of the appellant company and the respondent Jaya Hind Industries Private Ltd., on 15th August, 1960 by which the Managing Agents agreed to pay 25 per cent of the remuneration of the Managing Agency to the respondent company in consideration of services rendered to the appellant company. Gradually, the appellant company grew into a prosperous and very well developed automobile unit. Land was acquired, buildings were constructed and machinery and equipment worth more than a crore of rupees was purchased and installed. The manufacturing activity of the appellant company made good progress and 90 per cent. of the components of scooters and auto rickshaws were capable of being manufactured indigenously.

9. In the month of June, 1965 the appellant company applied to the Central Government for re-appointment of Jamnalal Sons Private Ltd., as Managing Agents of the appellant company for a period of 10 years. The Central Government on 11 August, 1965 sanctioned the said re-appointment of Managing Agents for the period commencing 16 August, 1965 and ending 31 March, 1968, viz., for an approximate period of three years. The appellant company entered into an agreement with the Managing Agents on similar terms.

10. In the month of August, 1967, Kamalnayan Bajaj of the Bajaj group proposed at the Board meeting of the appellant that an application should be made to extend the term of the Managing Agency. Firodia of the respondent company group opposed any such extension. In the month of December, 1967 the appellant applied to the Company Law Board for extension of the term of Managing Agency of Jamnalal Sons Private Ltd., for a period of 7 years so that the Managing Agents would have a term of 10 years commencing 16 August, 1965. The letter of the appellant company was signed by the Secretary. In the month of March, 1968 Firodia came to know about the said letter and wrote to the Chairman of the Company Law Board that there was neither any resolution of the general meeting of the Company for such extension nor any publication of such appointment. Firodia said that the appellant company contravened, in particular, the provisions contained in Sections 326 and 640B of the Companies Act, 1956. The Company Law Board, however, approved of the extension of the Managing Agency for a period of two years from 31 March, 1970.

11. The appellant company was converted into a public limited company in 1960 and the share capital was increased from Rs. 9,90,000 to Rs. 70,00,000. In the months of February and March, 1967 the capital of the appellant company was increased by issue of right shares. By the end of February, 1968 out of the issued share capital of 1,04,250 shares the Bajaj group held about 58,600 shares, the Firodia group 23,400 shares and the general public about 52,250 shares. The Bajaj group however alleged that in February, 1968 they held 31,500 shares and the Firodia group had 21,735 shares. In the month of March, 1968 the Bajaj group bought about 16,230 shares up to the maximum value of Rs. 411 per share. It may be mentioned here that out of the said 16,230 shares the Bajaj group bought about 4000 shares from the Life Insurance Corporation Ltd., and the Unit Trust of India. The Bajaj group obtained transfer of the said 16,230 shares in their names. The Firodia group, on the other hand, from the month of April, 1968 onwards lodged in different lots 3643 shares of the appellant company for being transferred to their names. The Board declined to register any transfer in respect of the said 3643 shares.

12. It is also necessary to know about the antecedents and activities of Firodia in relation to the affairs of the appellant company. When the joint venture was started in the year 1946 between Bachhraj

Trading Corporation Ltd., and the respondent company Firodia was in actual charge of the joint venture. In the year 1950 Firodia went to Germany and obtained representation from Vidal and Sohn Tempo Works Hamburg, Germany in connection with the manufacture of tempo three wheeler vehicles. In 1952 Firodia became a Director of Bachhraj Trading Corporation Ltd. Firodia thereafter submitted a scheme for the manufacture of scooters and auto rickshaws and obtained a licence for Bachhraj Trading Corporation Ltd., in that behalf. The Firodia group acquired shares of the face value of Rs. 1,80,000 in Bachhraj Trading Corporation in the year 1954 and helped its rehabilitation after it suffered heavy losses. The Firodia group provided funds to the extent of Rs. 4,36,000 to the Bajaj group during the years 1954 and 1960. When the appellant company became a public limited company in the year 1960 the Firodia group subscribed for 37½ per cent. of the shares and assisted in procuring subscription to the shares offered to the public. Jamnalal Sons Private Ltd., the Managing Agents of the appellant agreed to pay 25 per cent. of their remuneration of the Managing Agency to the respondent company of the Firodia group in consideration of the services rendered.

13. Article 52 of the appellant company provided that the Directors might at their absolute and uncontrolled discretion decline to register any transfer of shares. Discretion does not mean a bare affirmation or negation of a proposal. Discretion implies just and proper consideration of the proposal in the facts and circumstances of the case. In the exercise of that discretion the Directors will act for the paramount interest of the company and for the general interest of the shareholders because the Directors are in a fiduciary position both towards the company and towards every shareholder. The Directors are therefore required to act bona fide and not arbitrarily and not for any collateral motive.

14. If the Articles permit the Directors to decline to register transfer of shares without stating the reasons the Court would not draw unfavourable inferences against the Directors because they did not give reasons. In other words, the Court will assume that the Directors acted reasonably and bona fide and those who allege to the contrary would have to prove and establish the same by evidence. Where however the Directors gave reasons the Court would consider whether they were legitimate and whether the Directors proceeded on a right or wrong principle. As a result of the introduction of Sec. 111 (5-A) in the Companies Act, 1956 two consequences follow. First, if the Articles permit the Directors not to disclose reasons for declining to register a transfer the statute confers power to interrogate the Directors and disclose the reasons. Secondly, if the Directors do not disclose reasons presumption can be drawn against the Directors for non-disclosure of reasons in spite of being called upon to do so.

15. In the present appeals, the reasons of the Directors have to be tested from three points of view. First, whether the Directors acted in the interest of the company; secondly, whether they acted on a wrong principle; and, thirdly, whether they acted with an oblique motive or for a collateral purpose. This Court in M/s. Harinagar Sugar Mills Ltd. v. Shyam Sundar Jhunjhunwala, (1962) 2 SCR 339 = (AIR 1961 SC 1669) said that "the discretion of the Directors would be nullified if it were established that the Directors acted oppressively, capriciously or corruptly or in some other way mala fide".

The decision in Harinagar Sugar Mills Ltd., (1962) 2 SCR 339 = (AIR 1961 SC 1669) (supra) related to a case under the Companies Act, 1956 prior to the introduction of Section 111 (5A). That is why if the Directors under the Articles were not to disclose reasons it was said that the Court would presume where the Directors refused to register the transfer of shares that their power of absolute discretion was exercised bona fide unless corrupt or mala fide motives were affirmatively pleaded and proved. It would be for the aggrieved transferor to show that the refusal to register transfer was exercised mala fide and not in the interest of the company and thereby the presumption of bona fide would be displaced.

16. The words 'bona fide and for the benefit of the company as a whole' have been considered in some English decisions. Reference may be made to the decision in Greenhalgh v. Arderne Cinemas Ltd., (1950) 2 All ER 1120, where Evershed, M. R. said that if a resolution had the effect "to discriminate between the majority shareholders and the minority shareholders so as to give the former advantage of which the latter were deprived", the resolution could be attacked on grounds of elements of dishonesty or impropriety. The acts of the Directors would have to be scrutinised as to whether they were the honest opinion of the Directors acting for the company as a whole.

17. Melish, L. J. in Ex parte Penney, (1872) 8 Ch A 446, said that the Directors would have no right to force a particular shareholder to continue as a shareholder and not to allow him to transfer shares at all because that would be an abuse of their power. Lord Cozens-Hardy, M. R. in Re. Bede Steam Shipping Co. Ltd., (1917) 1 Ch 123, said that the personal objections to a transferee were where the transferee would be a quarrelsome person or he would be an unreasonable person or he would be acting in the interest of a rival company. The Directors there had power to refuse to register transfer of shares if "in their opinion it is contrary to the interest of the company that the proposed transferee should be a member thereof". In that case there were disputes between the Elder brothers who were Directors. One of the Elder Brothers sold his two shares to a clerk of his and another share to his house-keeper. The other Director said that the company was really a family concern and therefore shares should not be transferred singly or in small lots to outside persons having no interest in, or knowledge, of shipping.

18. In Bede Steam Shipping Co., (1917) 1 Ch 123 (supra) the power of the Directors was to refuse to register the transfer of share to any person of whom the Directors did not approve as transferee. The Directors in declining to register the transfer gave two reasons. First, that there would be increase in expenditure if the body of shareholders who numerically increased and secondly the individuals who were neither related to the founder's family nor connected in business with the company would become members by the proposed transfer. Neither of these reasons was held to touch the fitness of the transferees. The real power of the Directors in refusing registration of transfer was on the ground of personal objections to the transferees. The apprehension on the part of the Directors in the increase in the number of shareholders was therefore found to be an abuse of power. It was found that the Directors in refusing registration to transfer thought of the proposed transferees as mere nominees who could adopt the attitude of the transferor who had disagreed with the Directors of the company. The Directors did not look at the relevant circumstances in which they were placed, namely, their status, their occupation, and, in particular, whether the transferees were interested in any private business competing with the company.

19. Reference may be made to an old decision in Re. Bell Brothers, Ltd., (1891) 7 TLR 689, as an illustration of the power of the Directors to refuse registration of transfer. The relevant Article in the case of Bell Brothers, (1891) 7 TLR 689 (supra), conferred discretionary power on the Directors to refuse registration of transfer of shares on the ground that the Directors did not approve of the transferee. Chitty, J. said in relation to the Directors' power that the Directors must act in good faith and in the interest of the company and with due regard to the right of a shareholder to transfer his shares and they must fairly consider the question of the transferee's fitness at a Board meeting. The Directors in that case were not required to disclose reasons. Three propositions can be extracted from that case. First, where the Directors do not assign any reason because of the Articles it is competent for those who seek to have the transfer registered to show affirmatively by proper evidence that the Directors had not duly exercised their power. Secondly, if reasons are given by the Directors and the reasons are legitimate the Court will not overrule the Directors' decision merely because the Court itself would not have come to the same conclusion. Thirdly, if the reasons are not legitimate, the Court would hold that the power had not been duly exercised. An example would be where the Directors said that they rejected the transfer because the transferor's object was to increase the voting power in respect of his shares by splitting them among his nominees.

20. In the case of Bell Brothers, (1891) 7 TLR 689 (supra), two Bell Brothers John and Lowthian and the members of their families were shareholders in Bell Brothers. John died leaving a will and the beneficiaries under the will were his widow and children. The will provided for the widow an annuity. The will contained a general trust for conversion. John's shares were sold to provide a fund to meet the annuity. Hodgson purchased those shares. The Directors were Lowthian, his son Hugh and his son-in-law. Hugh was an executor trustee under the will of John and as such was one of the transferors of the shares of John. The shares of the testator were in the names of Hugh, the nephew and Charles, the son of the testator as executor trustees. The shares being registered in two names, Hugh as the first on the register had the right to vote. Hugh had on the one hand expressed the opinion to sell the shares in the true interest of the beneficiaries and on the other hand as a Director opposed the sale to Hodgson on the ground that the shares should be held by the members of the Bell family. The Directors did not allow registration either in the name of Hodgson or his nominees.

21. It has been well settled since the decision in Pender v. Lushington, (1877) 6 Ch D 70, that the Directors are not entitled to look behind the register for any purpose. They do not take notice of trust. Similarly, they cannot say that the transferee is the nominee of some one whom they consider objectionable. The accent is always on personal objections to the transferee. The solicitors of the Directors in the case of Bell Brothers, (1891) 7 TLR 689, gave the real reason for refusal of registration that Hodgson was holder of shares in a rival company. Chitty, J. said that the Directors carefully abstained from stating what their personal objection to Hodgson was and put forward their solicitors to assign the reason for it. The Directors who had an opportunity of exercising their power attempted to exercise it upon a wrong principle and therefore their power was gone. It is quite likely that if the Directors had given evidence of their real reason the Court might have accepted it as legitimate. The decision in the case of Bell Brothers (supra) illustrates that where the Directors have the power to refuse registration of the transfer of shares, their exercise of power on a wrong principle will vitiate the exercise of the power.

22. It follows that where the Directors have uncontrolled and absolute discretion in regard to declining registration of transfer of shares the Court will consider if the reasons are legitimate or the Directors have acted on a wrong principle or from corrupt motive. If the Court found that the Directors gave reasons which were legitimate, the Court would not overrule that decision merely on the ground that the Court would not have come to the same conclusion. Reference may be made to the decision in Balwant Transport Co. Ltd., Amratti v. Y. H. Deshpande, AIR 1950 Nag 20 which is a Bench decision of the Nagpur High Court. Sapate was a shareholder in the company and owned 31 shares. One of his shares was sold by public auction and was purchased by Deshpande. Deshpande applied for registration. The Article in the Nagpur case conferred absolute and uncontrolled discretion on the Directors to refuse to register transfer where in the opinion of the Directors it was not in the interest of the company to admit the proposed transferee to membership. The evidence in that case was that Deshpande was the lawyer of Sapate. Sapate was quarrelling with the company. Sapate also joined a rival concern. The Directors' decision in those surrounding circumstances was found to be a legitimate exercise of the power of the Directors in the interest of the company.

23. The decision in Re. Smith & Fawcett Ltd., 1942 Ch 304 indicates the extent to which the Court upholds the exercise of absolute and uncontrolled discretion of the Directors to refuse to register any transfer of shares. In that case there were two Directors who held the shares in equal numbers. One died. The other Director refused to register the transfer of shares in the names of the executors of the deceased Director except in respect of a part of the holding and upon the condition that the balance be transferred to the surviving Director. It was found to be a justifiable act of the Director in the interest of the Company.

24. In the old Bombay decision in Kaikhosro Muncharji Heeramanek v. Coorla Spinning and Weaving Co., (1892) ILR 16 Bom 80, (sic) (one of the Articles of Association of a company provided that?) the Board of Directors might decline to register any transfer of shares, unless the transferees were approved by the Board. A shareholder became insolvent. His share vested in the Official Assignee. The Official Assignee sold the shares. The purchaser applied for registration. The Directors declined to approve of the transferees unless the transferees would pledge themselves not to oppose a certain change in the mode of remunerating the Agents of the company, which the Directors desired to effect, and which they believed would be very advantageous to the company. It may be mentioned here that the purchaser of the shares required the Official Assignee to register transfer in the names of the two nominees who were already the holders of shares in the company. The company, however, did not take any objection to the nominees in their personal capacity. The Directors acted on wrong principle and in abuse of power in insisting on obtaining a pledge from the transferees not to oppose change in remuneration of the Managing Agents.

25. A Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Muir Mills Co. Ltd. of Cawnpore v. T. H. Condon, (1900) ILR 22 All 410, related to the absolute power of the Directors to refuse registration of transfer of shares on personal objections to the transferee. The Muir Mills in that case disallowed the transfers on the ground that the transferees were subordinates of McRobert, the Managing Director of Cawnpore Mills. There was personal animosity between Johnson, the Managing Director of the Muir Mills and McRobert. The Directors of the Muir Mills came to a conclusion that McRobert should not add to his voting power and 'harass the management'. It was found to be abuse of fiduciary discretionary power of the Directors when they wanted to safeguard the Director's personal interest against McRobert.

26. The first reason of the appellant company for the refusal of registration of transfer of the shares was that Firodia acted in a treacherous fashion against the interest of the company and behind the back of the Board of Directors. The evidence is that the Managing Agents of the Bajaj group in the year 1965 failed to obtain from the Government approval of an extension of term for 10 years. The Government sanctioned the term for about three years which was to expire on 31 March, 1968. In the month of August, 1967 when Kamalnayan Bajaj of the Bajaj group proposed an extension of the term of the Managing Agents Firodia represented to the Board that Firodia was opposed to the same. No application for extension of the term of Managing Agents was made at that time. The appellant however behind the back of Firodia wrote to the Company Law Board in the month of December, 1967 and though Firodia was the Chief Executive the letter was signed by the Secretary and kept concealed from Firodia. Firodia came to know of the letter in the month of March, 1968 and he wrote to the Company Law Board that the company had made "false statement" in the application for extension of the term, namely, that the appellant company gave a wrong impression that it had received permission to increase its production to 60,000 scooters per year whereas in fact no such permission had been granted. Firodia also pointed out that the appellant suggested that its progress was because of the Bajaj group and made no reference to Firodia who was the Chief Executive of the appellant.

27. In 1965 the appellant asked for appointment of the Managing Agents for ten years. The Company Law Board approved of the appointment upto 31 March, 1968. It is true that there was a resolution of the appellant company in the year 1965 for the appointment of the Managing Agents for a period of ten years. That resolution of 1965 after the appointment of the Managing Agents for a term of less than three years and, in particular, after an agreement had been entered into between the appellant company on the one hand and the Managing Agents on the other in that behalf, was exhausted, and spent its force and could not be said to have either a life of its own for 10 years or to spring into action in the year 1968 for a revival of the resolution to enable the appellant company to ask for appointment of Managing Agents for a period of seven years on the basis of any such resolution. Firodia rightly protested against the absence of any resolution of the shareholders and also against the absence of any publication of proposal for appointment of Managing Agents for seven years. Firodia furthermore rightly cavilled against the total obscurity of his name or of any reference to his activities in relation to the affairs of the company and the contrary suggestion in the letter that the prosperity of the appellant company was on account of Kamalnayan Bajaj. This aspect is important to show that the allegations of Firodia were against the Managing Agents and further that Firodia was acting in the larger interest of the company whereas the Managing Agents were actuated by their personal motives of preservation and aggrandisement of their power. The letter written by the appellant to the Company Law Board was not circulated to the shareholders. Firodia came to know about the letter and that is why he informed the Company Law Board of the state of affairs.

28. On this evidence it is apparent that Firodia wrote to the Company Law Board in the larger interest of the company. Firodia's allegations were against the Managing Agents. Firodia was justified in opposing re-appointment of the Managing Agents without a specific resolution of the shareholders of the company and without a public notice to the shareholders to represent their views in the matter. The Bajaj group acted behind the back of Firodia and wanted to steal a march. The real motive of the Bajaj group was revealed first by imposing restrictions in the month of March, 1968 on the powers of Firodia as Chief Executive of the appellant company and secondly by the resolution in the month of May, 1968 to terminate the services of Firodia as Chief Executive.

The refusal to register the transfers was at the meetings of the Board held in the months of May and June, 1968.

29. The Directors had a hostile feeling against Firodia and they had the dominant desire to keep Firodia out of the company. The Directors did not act in the interest of the company and their discretion was tainted by unfair conduct and unjustifiable attitude against Firodia.

30. The second reason given by the appellant company was that the Firodia group acquired the shares with a design of acquiring interest in the company which was likely to result in a threat to the smooth functioning of the management of the company and to vote down the passing of the special resolution. There are well-recognised safeguards as to notice and content for passing special resolution. Special resolutions are for limited purposes and are not matters of daily occurrence or of daily routine administration. The mere apprehension that a special resolution will not be passed is not a legitimate reason. The shareholders will bestow their intention on matters forming the subject matter of resolution. Passing of special resolutions will depend upon the mandate of the shareholders. It is manifest that the reason given by the Directors was a camouflage to cover their collateral and corrupt motive of preserving the hegemony of the Bajaj group. The motive is corrupt because the Bajaj group acted for their personal interest and not in the bona fide general interest of the company.

31. The third reason given by the appellant company was that the shares were being acquired by the Firodia group not with a view of bona fide investment but with a mala fide purpose and evil design of obstructing the business of the appellant company. Acquisition or transfer of shares under the Articles in the present case does not suffer from any restrictive impediment like pre-emption or personal objections to the transferees. There is no evidence that the transferees belonged to a rival concern. Equally, there is no evidence that the Firodia group ever obstructed in the management of the company. On the contrary, the Firodia group advanced large sums of money.

Firodia was largely responsible for the gradual growth of the appellant company and for the prosperity of the company. It was therefore an abuse of the fiduciary power of the Directors to refuse to register transfer of shares.

32. The Bajaj group obtained transfer of 16230 shares in their favour in the month of March, 1968. The Bajaj group purchased shares in the market at a maximum value of Rs. 411 per share. The holding of the Bajaj group prior to the acquisition of the said 16230 shares was 28600 shares or according to the Bajaj group 31,500 shares. The Firodia group on the other hand prior to the proposed transfer had 23,400 shares or 21,735 shares according to the Bajaj group. The general public held 52,250 shares. This was the position in the month of February, 1968. The Bajaj group by the acquisition of 16230 shares would have a numerical strength of 44830 shares where as the Firodia group would be having 26863 shares if the proposed transfers were allowed by the Directors. The Bajaj group paid Rs. 411 per share. The Firodia group paid roughly about Rs. 200 per share. Firodia was not on the Board of Directors of the appellant company. The Bajaj group and their friends were the Directors. In the year 1967 the Firodia group lodged 4243 shares for transfer in their names and the transfers were registered. Again, in the month of February, 1968 when the Firodia group lodged 68 shares with the appellant company for transfer, the appellant company accepted the said transfer. It is therefore, revealed that after the appellant came to know that Firodia wrote to the Company Law Board in the month of March, 1968 that the Directors of the appellant company developed antipathy against Firodia. The refusal to register the shares was a sequel to the termination of the appointment of Firodia as Chief Executive and it is manifest that the Directors acted for collateral reasons and in their own interest.

33. Counsel on behalf of the appellant contended that of the seven Directors only Kamalnayan Bajaj belonged to the Bajaj family and each Director was an independent industrialist and could not be described to be of Bajaj group. Neither the status and wealth of the Directors nor their lack of relationship with the Bajaj family could be decisive as to whether they exercised their discretion on correct principle or without any corrupt motive. The Firodia group alleged that Kamalnayan Bajaj was an arbitrator in the family dispute of Ramnath A. Podar and that Shriyans Prasad Jain was a close associate of Kamalnayan Bajaj. Irrespective of these allegations, we have already indicated that the Directors failed to exercise their discretion properly by refusing to register transfer of shares on wrong principles and for corrupt and oblique motives.

34. The discretion of the Directors is to be tested as the opinion of fair and sensible men in the interest of the company. In the present case, the Directors did not act bona fide nor did they act in the general interest of the company. On the contrary, they acted upon a wrong principle and for the oblique motive of squeezing out Firodia. The inescapable conclusion is that the Directors acted arbitrarily and unjustifiably.

35. For these reasons we are of opinion that the appeals fail. They are dismissed with costs. The respondents will be allowed one set of hearing fees.

Appeals dismissed.

AIR 1971 SUPREME COURT 330
(V 58 C 77)

(From: Allahabad)

J. C. SHAH AND V. BHARGAVA, JJ.
Manni Lal, Appellant v. Parmai Lal and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal, No. 2632 of 1969, D/-13-8-1970.

(A) Representation of the People Act (1951), Section 8 (2) — "Disqualified from the date of such conviction" — Disqualification is wiped out and does not exist at all when an appellate order of High Court sets aside conviction — Appellate order of acquittal takes effect retrospectively and conviction and sentence are deemed to be set aside from date they were recorded. (Para 4)

(B) Representation of the People Act (1951), Sections 100 (1) (a) and 8(2) — Question whether returned candidate was disqualified on date of election — Opinion as to, is to be formed at the time of pronouncement of judgment in election petition.

Under Section 100 (1) (a) the opinion has to be formed as to whether the successful candidate was disqualified on the date of election; but this opinion is to be formed by the High Court at the time of pronouncing the judgment in the election petition. (Para 4)

Last date for filing nomination 9-1-69 — Returned candidate convicted on 11-1-69 and sentenced to 10 years R. I. — Appeal against conviction to High Court filed on 16-1-69 — Polling taking place on 9-2-69 and result declared on 11-2-69 — Conviction and sentence set aside in appeal on 30-9-69 — Judgment in election petition pronounced on 27-10-69 — Held, High Court was right in holding that the returned candidate was not disqualified and that his election was not void on that ground — High Court had before it order of acquittal which had taken effect retrospectively from 11-1-69 — Disqualification which existed on 9-2-69 and 11-2-1969 was wiped out when conviction was set aside. (Para 4)

(C) Conduct of Elections Rules (1961), Rule 56 (2) (b) — Rejection of ballot papers on ground that marks made on them were made otherwise than with instrument supplied for the purpose — Burden lies on person, who challenges decision of returning officer in his election petition, to establish that officer had wrongly rejected ballot papers — He can only succeed if he had proved that the marks made were with instrument supplied for the purpose — Finding of Court, that papers bore no recognizable seal impression that might be said to have been made with the instrument supplied for marking vote, amounts to holding that the marks made could not be identified with the seal which was supplied for marking. (Para 6)

BHARGAVA, J. — This is an appeal by Manni Lal who was one of the candidates for election to the U. P. Legislative Assembly from Ahirori (Scheduled Caste) Constituency of Hardoi District, and who was defeated at that election by respondent No. 1, Parmai Lal. The election was challenged on two principal grounds. One ground was that respondent No. 1 was disqualified under Section 8 (2) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act") for being chosen as a member of the Legislative Assembly, because he was convicted for offences under Sections 148 and 304 of the Indian Penal Code on 11th January, 1969, and was sentenced to imprisonment exceeding two years. The other ground was that a number of ballot papers cast in favour of the appellant had been wrongly rejected instead of being counted in favour of the appellant, that some ballot papers were wrongly counted for respondent No. 1 instead of being rejected, and that some ballot papers were wrongly counted in favour of respondent No. 1 instead of being counted in favour of the appellant or other candidates. The High Court of Allahabad framed three different issues in respect of this claim of wrong rejection or wrong counting of the ballot papers. In the written statement, respondent No. 1 pleaded that a number of ballot papers were wrongly counted in favour of the appellant instead of being counted in favour of the other candidates, that a number of ballot papers were wrongly rejected instead of being counted in favour of respondent No. 1, and, further, that a number of ballot papers were wrongly counted in favour of the appellant instead of being rejected. The learned Judge, who tried the election petition, framed three issues in respect of these pleadings also which were put forward in the written statement and not by way of a petition of recrimination. On the basis of examination of the ballot papers and the evidence before him, a finding was recorded that, after correcting the errors made in counting, the net result would be that the appellant will have a net gain of only 6 votes, while respondent No. 1 would have a net loss of 24 votes. It appears that respondent No. 1 had received 13,508 votes, while the appellant had received 13,271 votes. After taking into account the finding, the valid votes received by the appellant would total to 13,277, while respondent No. 1 would still have 13,484 valid votes, so that the election of respondent No. 1 could not be declared void. The appellant had claimed that, on a proper counting, it would be found that he had a majority of votes, and had prayed for a declaration that he is the successful candidate. On the finding recorded, both the prayers of the appellant failed. The High Court further held that respondent No. 1 was not disqualified under Section 8 (2) of the Act and, consequently, his election was valid. The petition having been dismissed by the High Court, the appellant has now come up in this appeal under Section 116-A of the Act.

2. On the issue relating to disqualification, the facts that need be noticed are that 9th January, 1969 was the last date for filing nominations in this constituency and respondent No. 1 was convicted two days later on 11th January, 1969 and sentenced, inter alia, to ten years' rigorous imprisonment under Sec. 304, I. P. C. On 16th January, 1969, he filed an appeal against this conviction in the High Court. Polling took place on 9th February, 1969 and the result was declared on 11th February, 1969. Respondent No. 1 was declared as the successful candidate having secured the largest majority of votes. On 30th September, 1969, his appeal was allowed by the High Court and his conviction and sentence were set aside. At this time, the election petition was still pending. In fact, the judgment in the election petition was delivered on 27th October, 1969.

3. On these facts, it is clear that, though the conviction of respondent No. 1 was recorded by the trial Court on 11th January, 1969, he was acquitted on 30th September, 1969 in appeal which acquittal had the effect of completely wiping out the conviction. The appeal having once been allowed, it has to be held that the conviction and sentence were vacated with effect from the date on which the conviction was recorded and the sentence awarded. In a criminal case, acquittal in appeal does not take effect merely from the date of the appellate order setting aside the conviction; it has the effect of retrospectively wiping out the conviction and the sentence awarded by the lower Court. The disqualification relied upon by the appellant was laid down under Section 8 (2) of the Act read with Article 102 (1) (e) of the Constitution. The provision is that a person convicted by a Court in India for any offence and sentenced to imprisonment for not less than two years shall be disqualified from the date of such conviction and shall continue to be disqualified for a further period of five years since his release. The argument on behalf of the appellant was that, though respondent No. 1 was not disqualified at the time of filing of nomination, he was, in fact, disqualified on 9th February, 1969, the date of polling, as well as on 11th February, 1969, when the result was declared, because his conviction had been recorded and he had been sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment on 11th January, 1969. It was further urged that, though the appeal had been filed, that appeal did not have the effect of wiping out this conviction. In these circumstances, it was urged that his election was void and should have been set aside on the ground of this disqualification.

4. This argument overlooks the fact that an appellate order of acquittal takes effect retrospectively and the conviction and sentence are deemed to be set aside with effect from the date they were recorded. Once an order of acquittal has been made, it has to be held that the conviction has been wiped out and did not exist at all. The disqualification, which existed on the 9th or 11th February, 1969 as a fact, was wiped out when the conviction recorded on 11th January, 1969 was set aside and that acquittal took effect from that very date. It is significant that the High Court under Section 100 (1) (a) of the Act, is to declare the election of a returned candidate to be void if the High Court is of opinion that, on the date of his election, a returned candidate was not qualified, or was disqualified, to be chosen to fill the seat under the Constitution or the Act. It is true that the opinion has to be formed as to whether the successful candidate was disqualified on the date of his election; but this opinion is to be formed by the High Court at the time of pronouncing the judgment in the election petition. In this case, the High Court proceeded to pronounce the judgment on 27th October, 1969. The High Court had before it the order of acquittal which had taken effect retrospectively from 11th January, 1969. It was, therefore, impossible for the High Court to arrive at the opinion that on 9th or 11th February, 1969, respondent No. 1 was disqualified. The conviction and sentence had been retrospectively wiped out, so that the opinion required to be formed by the High Court to declare the election void could not be formed. The situation is similar to one that could have come into existence if Parliament itself had chosen to repeal Section 8 (2) of the Act retrospectively with effect from 11th January, 1969. Learned counsel conceded that, if a law had been passed repealing Section 8 (2) of the Act and the law had been deemed to come into effect from 11th January, 1969, he could not have possibly urged thereafter, when the point came up before the High Court, that respondent No. 1 was disqualified on 9th or 11th February, 1969. The setting aside of the conviction and sentence in appeal has a similar effect of wiping out retrospectively the disqualification. The High Court was, therefore, right in holding that respondent No. 1 was not disqualified and that his election was not void on that ground.

5. On the second point, the main argument of counsel for the appellant was that the High Court committed the error of framing three issues on the basis of pleading in the written statement which challenged the correctness of the acceptance or rejection of ballot papers without any recrimination being filed by respondent No. 1 under Section 97 of the Act. Counsel wanted to argue this question of law in detail, but we consider that, in the present case, it is not necessary to go into this point at all. Even if the three issues framed on the basis of pleadings in the written statement are ignored, and account is taken only of findings recorded on the three issues framed on the basis of pleadings in the election petition, it would be found that respondent No. 1 still had a majority of valid votes, and the appellant could not claim that the election of respondent No. 1 be set aside and the appellant be declared as the successful candidate. The findings of fact recorded by the Judge are that, under Issue Nos. 5, 18 ballot papers mentioned in Schedules III and IV should be counted as valid votes for the appellant, while 24 ballot papers were wrongly counted in favour of respondent No. 1.

Under Issue No. 3, the finding is that the appellant is entitled to add 111 valid votes in his favour and, under Issue No. 4, the finding is that 74 votes would be lost by respondent No. 1. If these figures are accepted and taken into account, the appellant would receive 13,400 valid votes, being the total of 13,271 votes found in his favour at the time of declaration of the result and 129 votes which the appellant is entitled to add as a result of the findings on the three issues. So far as respondent No. 1 is concerned, he loses 98 votes as a result of the findings recorded by the High Court; and, on deducting these votes from 13,508 received by him, respondent No. 1 is left with 13,410 votes. Respondent No. 1, thus, has a majority of 10 votes, so that his election is valid.

6. Counsel, however, challenged one finding recorded by the High Court in respect of 64 ballot papers which, the appellant had claimed, had been wrongly rejected and should have been counted in his favour. These ballot papers have not been produced before us. The learned Judge held that they were invalid votes because "they bear no recognisable seal impression that might be said to have been made with the instrument supplied for marking the vote". The argument of counsel for the appellant is that, even on this finding recorded by the High Court, those votes should have been counted in his favour, because they cannot be held liable to rejection under Rule 56 (2) (b) of the Conduct of Elections Rules, 1961. That sub-rule runs as follows:—

"The returning officer shall reject a ballot paper if, to indicate the vote, it bears no mark at all or bears a mark made otherwise than with the instrument supplied for the purpose". The argument urged is that, according to the Judge, the impressions on these 64 ballot papers could not be identified with the seal supplied for marking the votes, which only leads to the inference that they may bear marks with that seal or may not. For rejection under Rule 56 (2) (b), there must be a definite finding that they bore marks made otherwise than with the seal supplied for the purpose. In this case, the Returning Officer rejected the ballot papers holding that the marks made on these ballot papers were made otherwise than with the instrument supplied for the purpose. The appellant challenged that decision of the Returning Officer in this election petition. The burden lay on him to establish that the Returning Officer had wrongly rejected these ballot papers. He could only succeed if he had proved that the marks made were with the instrument supplied for the purpose. This the appellant failed to do. In fact, the finding recorded by the learned Judge of the High Court amounts to holding that the marks made cannot be identified with the seal which was supplied for marking the votes and, consequently, an inference follows that they must have been made by some other means. On this finding, the learned Judge was quite correct in not upsetting the order of the Returning Officer rejecting these votes. If these 64 votes are not counted in favour of the appellant, the appellant's case fails, for the majority of votes still remains in favour of respondent No. 1.

7. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The following judgment of the Court was delivered by

GROVER, J.:— This is an appeal from an order of the Punjab and Haryana High Court dismissing a writ petition in limine.

2. The Municipal Committee of Kaithal consists of 17 elected members. Prior to the election held on March 10, 1968, the previous Committee functioned from 1962 to 1968. According to the appellants the majority of members constituting the Committee from 1962 to 1968 belonged to the Congress Party. On March 10, 1968 fresh elections were held. The new Committee which was elected was to remain in office for a period of three years. It has been alleged by the appellants that the majority of members constituting the new Committee belonged to the Jan Sangh Party. The members of the new Committee took oath of office on April 6, 1968. On February 27, 1969 a notice was served by the Secretary, Local Government Department, Haryana, on the President of the Committee inviting reference to the inspection note on the working of the Committee recorded by the Sub-Divisional Officer, Kaithal a copy of which was sent which contained serious complaints of irregularities committed by the Municipality. It was stated that the inspection note revealed that the civic administration had deteriorated, encroachments had not been removed, the income of the Committee was spent mostly on staff maintenance of civil amenities, no development work had been done, there were heavy arrears of taxes, there was nepotism and party faction and that the various registers were not being properly maintained etc. It was further stated that the inspection note clearly showed that the Municipal Committee was incompetent to perform and had persistently made defaults in the performance of duties entrusted to it. There was thus a prima facie case for superseding it under Section 238 of the Punjab Municipal Act, 1911, hereinafter called the "Act" but the Committee was being given an opportunity to show cause as to why it should not be superseded by the Government under the provisions of that section. The explanation was to be sent by the Committee within 21 days from the receipt of the communication and in case the Committee failed to send the explanation ex parte orders were to be made. The Vice-President sent a reply dated March 19, 1969 saying that the allegations contained in the memorandum sent to the Committee were baseless and without any foundation. It was stated that the allegations had been levelled merely as a cloak to serve extraneous ends of somehow superseding the Municipal Committee. In this reply it was mentioned that Shri P. N. Bhalla who had been working as an Executive Officer of the Committee had been removed for the reasons which had been mentioned in the show cause notice. The charges which were levelled against him contained various matters which were common to the items mentioned in the show cause notice sent to the Committee. Shri Bhalla had challenged his removal in a petition which was still pending. It was maintained that since the aforesaid matter was sub judice it was not proper and might amount to contempt of court to adjudicate upon the matters which were common to the show cause notice and the allegations against Bhalla. It was further pointed out in the reply that a detailed answer could not be given unless inspection was allowed of the various records and files relating to the allegations made. Inter alia, the most important document was the report made by Shri V. P. Dhir, Deputy Director, Urban Local Bodies, Haryana, who had inquired into the affairs of the Committee. It was essential to inspect the file containing his report before any reply could be given. It was requested that time be extended for giving reply to the allegations made in the show cause notice till the writ petition filed by Bhalla had been disposed of. No reply was apparently sent to this letter by the Government. An order was made on April 9, 1969 superseding the Committee under Section 238 of the Act and its powers were to be exercised by the S. D. O. Civil as Administrator. A schedule of the reasons was given in the notification which contained mostly the same allegations which were contained in the statement attached to the show cause notice.

3. The appellants filed a petition under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution in the Punjab & Hariana High Court challenging the aforesaid notification of supersession of the Committee. This came up before a Division Bench consisting of Mehr Singh, C. J. and Prem Chand Jain, J., on April 16, 1969. The petition was dismissed in limine although the learned judges recorded an order. It is somewhat unfortunate that a copy of the writ petition has not been produced in this Court. Presumably the allegations were on the same lines as made in the petition for special leave before us. But in the absence of a copy of the writ petition we need not refer in detail to the allegations made and the contentions raised by the appellants before the High Court. It is, however, apparent and is abundantly clear from the order of the High Court that allegations of mala fides had been made and it had been urged that the Government had not acted in a bona fide manner. The learned judges were largely influenced by the fact that the Committee had not sent any explanation or reply to the show cause notice. It was therefore considered that the charges and allegations made against it stood un rebutted. A constitution bench of this Court has observed in Ram Saran Dass v. State of Punjab, Civil Appeal No. 26 of 1963, D/- 16-9-1963 (SC), as follows:

"As we have briefly indicated, the petition filed by the appellant makes serious allegations in support of his case that the impugned order amounts to punishment and had been passed mala fide. It appears that the High Court was not impressed by these allegations, and so chose to dismiss the petition summarily. In our opinion, the High Court should not have adopted such a course in the present case. It may sound elementary to say so, but nevertheless, we ought never to forget that justice must not only be done fairly but must always appear to be so done. When a responsible public servant holding a judicial office moves the High Court under Article 226 and contends that the termination of his services, though ostensibly made in exercise of the power conferred under Rule 23 of the Rules, really amounts to his dismissal, or that its exercise is mala fide, the High Court should have called upon the respondent to make a return and then considered whether the allegations made by the appellant had been proved, and if they were, what would be the result of the said finding on his argument that the impugned order amounts to dismissal, or has been passed mala fide".

In the present case the appellants are responsible persons. Appellant No. 2 is the President and Appellant No. 3 is the Senior Vice-President of the Committee which has been superseded. The other appellants had been elected members of that Committee. In our judgment in a case of the present kind the writ petition ought not to have been dismissed in the manner in which it was done without obtaining any return from the respondents and considering the same.

4. Mr. M. C. Chagla for the appellants has pointed out that certain affidavits have been filed under the orders of this Court by the respondent and has urged that the legality and validity as also the mala fide nature of the impugned order could be examined in this appeal by this Court. We do not consider that that would be a proper course to follow. It is for the High Court to issue a rule and hear and dispose of the writ petition after returns have been filed by the respondents.

5. The appeal is therefore allowed and the matter is remanded to the High Court for disposal of the writ petition in accordance with law. Costs shall abide the event. We have no doubt that since the term of the Committee will expire in a few months, the writ petition will be disposed of with the utmost expedition.

Appeal allowed.

(V 58 C 79)

(From: Allahabad)

K. S. HEGDE AND I. D. DUA, JJ.

Munir Khan, Appellant v. State of U. P., Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 203 of 1967, D/- 17-8-1970.

(A) Penal Code (1860), Section 149 — Common object — In a mutual fight there is no common object —

IN/IN/D965/70/YPB/T

None of the accused can be convicted by having recourse to Section 149.

(Para 4)

(B) Penal Code (1860), Section 324 — Mutual fight between two parties — Death of one person of complainant's party — Conviction of accused under Sections 304, Part I/149, Ss. 307/149 and Ss. 323/149 — High Court acquitting accused under Ss. 304, Part I/149 on ground that in F. I. R. there was no reference to the accused's stabbing deceased, though it was clearly so mentioned — Absence of nature of injury caused by accused — Held, accused could be convicted only under Section 324 — His convictions under Sections 307/149 and 323/149 were unsustainable — Decision of Allahabad High Court, Reversed.

(Para 5)

HEGDE, J.:— This is an appeal by special leave. The appellant and two others were tried for various offences before the learned Sessions Judge, Rampur. The appellant was convicted under Sections 304 (I)/149, 307/149 and 323/149, I. P. C. We are not concerned with the convictions of the other accused. The sentences imposed on various counts were ordered to run concurrently. The maximum sentence imposed on the appellant is 10 years rigorous imprisonment under Section 304 (I). In appeal the appellant was acquitted under Section 304 (I), I. P. C. The sentence imposed on him under Ss. 307/149 was reduced from five years to two years rigorous imprisonment. His conviction under Section 323 was maintained for which a sentence of one year rigorous imprisonment had been awarded by the trial Court.

2. The incident giving rise to this prosecution took place on May 7, 1964 at about 10 p. m. The complainant as well as the appellant were having cycle stands near the exhibition ground, Rampur. The appellant and another had taken a cycle stand on contract from the municipal council. They were permitted to charge for each cycle 12 N. P. whereas the complainant was having a private cycle stand. It is said that he was charging only 5 N. P. per cycle. As a result of this, the prosecution case is that there was a trade rivalry between the appellant and his men on the one side and the complainant and his men on the other. It was further stated that on the date of the occurrence the appellant and several others went and attacked the complainant's party as a result of which several persons sustained injuries and one Anwarul Hasan died.

3. The defence admitted that there was trade rivalry between the appellant's party and the complainant's party. Their case was that it was the complainant's party who came suddenly and attacked the appellant's party as a result of which there was marpit in which both sides sustained injuries. The appellant's party pleaded self-defence. The trial Court after carefully examining the evidence came to the following conclusions:

(1) that the marpit was not pre-planned. It developed suddenly as a result of some abuses given by P. W. 1.

(2) that the marpit took place near the second gate of the accused and not in front of the cycle stand of the complainant.

4. In effect the learned trial judge accepted the defence version that it was the complainant's party which started abusing the appellant's party as a result of which a sudden fight developed in front of the second gate of the appellant's cycle stand. On the facts found by the trial Court, it follows clearly that there was a mutual fight between the parties. In that view, the trial Court was not justified in convicting any of the accused by having recourse to Section 149, I. P. C. In a mutual fight, there is no common object. But the trial Court arrived at the conclusion that the appellant was one of the persons who stabbed the deceased Anwarul Hasan. It did not give any finding as regards the nature of the injuries caused by the appellant.

5. In appeal the learned appellate judge on the erroneous basis that in the First Information Report, there is no reference to the appellant's stabbing Anwarul Hasan, acquitted the appellant under Section 304 (I), I. P. C., but sustained his conviction under Section 307/149 and Section 323/149, I. P. C. We have gone through the First Information Report. Therein it is clearly stated that the appellant was one of the persons who stabbed Anwarul Hasan; but there is no evidence as to the nature of the injury caused by him. We have earlier come to the conclusion that injuries to deceased were caused during the course of a mutual fight. Hence on the basis of the evidence on record, the appellant can be convicted only under Section 324, I. P. C. His convictions under Section 307/149, I. P. C. as well as under Section 323/149, I. P. C. are clearly unsustainable.

6. In the result we allow the appeal, set aside the conviction of the appellant under Sec. 307/149, I. P. C. as well as under Section 323/149, I. P. C. But he is convicted under Section 324, I. P. C. and for that offence we sentence him to suffer rigorous imprisonment for one year. The appellant is on bail. He shall forthwith surrender and serve out the remaining portion of his sentence, if any.

Appeal allowed.

I. D. DUA, J.

Anwar, Petitioner v. The State of J. and K., Respondent.

Writ Petn. No. 131 of 1970, D/-7-7-1970.

(A) Constitution of India, Articles 19, 20, 21, 22 — Non-citizen cannot claim fundamental right under Article 19 but can claim rights under Articles 20, 21 and 22. (Para 4)

(B) Foreigners Act (1946), S. 3 (2)

(c) — Deportation of foreigners — Notification under Art. 258 by President entrusting Government of J. & K. functions of Central Government under S. 3 (2) (c) — Government of J. & K. can validly order deportation of foreigner. (Para 5)

(C) Constitution of India, Art. 32 — Habeas corpus — Writ of — Nature — Foreigner entering India illegally — His detention for purpose of deportation is not illegal — Habeas corpus cannot be issued for his release.

Habeas corpus, though a writ of right, is not a writ of course. Its scope has grown to achieve its purpose of protecting individuals against erosion of the right to be free from wrongful restraint on their rightful liberty. But when, a person has no right to move about freely in the country without a proper legal sanction, the restraint exercised on him for expelling him from India cannot be construed as to amount to his custody being illegal so as to require that his immediate release be directed. The constitutional protection against illegal deprivation of personal liberty construed in a practical way cannot entitle non-citizens to remain in India contrary to the provisions of the law governing foreigners. Ajaib Singh

DUA, J.:— The petitioner, Anwar alias Raldu son of Basawa Batwal, resident of Nathu Pora, District Sialkot, (West Pakistan), forwarded to this Court his application dated March 11, 1970, from Central Jail, Jammu where he was being detained, praying for a writ in the nature of habeas corpus for his production in this Court to enable him to challenge his detention. In the application it was asserted, inter alia that the petitioner had been brought from Pakistan to the State of Jammu and Kashmir by his uncle Shri Dosa, son of Jumma, who was working for Indian Intelligence. The petitioner had crossed the cease-fire line and come to India for the purpose of taking to Pakistan the necessities of life. His uncle who was inimical towards him got him arrested after he had crossed the cease-fire line on the basis of the allegation that the petitioner was a smuggler and had opium on his person. The petitioner was thereafter convicted and sentenced. His sentence expired in January, 1970. After his release he was again arrested. His detention after his re-arrest was challenged in this application.

2. In the return it was sworn by Shri A. K. Hamdani, Under Secretary, Home Department, Jammu and Kashmir State that the petitioner had been detained on January 30, 1970 pursuant to an order dated January 27, 1970. The petitioner was duly informed of the grounds of his detention and also of his right to make a representation. He, however, made no representation. His case was referred to the Advisory Board and the opinion of the Board was being awaited. The petitioner, according to the return, had been detained earlier and on the expiry of two years of detention he was re-arrested with the object of making arrangements for his expulsion from the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

3. On June 9, 1970 this case was heard by the Vacation Judge (Ray J.) and time was granted to the petitioner upto June 23, 1970 for filing a rejoinder to the return. On June 15, 1970 the State filed an application stating that the order of the petitioner's detention had since been revoked and that the petitioner had been ordered on June 9, 1970 to leave India within ten days. This application came up for hearing on June 16, 1970 when the State took time for producing the orders, of revocation of the detention order and, of the petitioner's deportation. The case was accordingly adjourned to June 18, 1970 when by means of a short order the writ petition was dismissed and the petitioner was permitted to be sent out of India. I now proceed to give reasons for the order.

4. The petitioner is not a citizen of India. He is, therefore, a foreigner as defined in the Foreigners Act. Not being a citizen, he is clearly not entitled to any fundamental right guaranteed by Article 19 of the Constitution. He has thus no right to remain within the territories of India. His entry into this country was also without any right and indeed he himself does not claim to have entered into India in accordance with the provisions of the Foreigners Act and the Orders made thereunder. The only rights which he can claim in the present proceedings are those contained in Articles 20 to 22. The order dated January 27, 1970 reads as under:

"Whereas Anwar @ Raldu s/o Basawa Batwal r/o Nathupora District Sialkot presently in the State is a foreigner within the meaning of the Foreigners Act, 1946, and;

Whereas the Government is satisfied that with a view to making arrangements for his expulsion from the State, it is necessary to do so;

Now, therefore, in exercise of the powers conferred by Section 3 (1) (b) read with Section 5 of the Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act, 1964, the Government hereby direct that the said Anwar @ Raldu be detained in the Central Jail, Jammu subject to such conditions as to maintenance, discipline and punishment for breaches of discipline as have been specified in the Jammu and Kashmir Detenus (General) Order, 1968".

5. This order was made in exercise of the powers conferred by Section 3 (1) (b) read with Section 5 of the Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act, 1964. The Government felt satisfied that the petitioner who was a foreigner within the meaning of the Foreigners Act (Act 31 of 1946) should be expelled from the State of Jammu and Kashmir and it was with a view to making arrangements for his expulsion that it was considered necessary to detain him. It appears that in the opinion of the Authorities making the order it was necessary to give to the petitioner an opportunity of making a representation to the Government against the order of detention. In order to give this opportunity, on February 4, 1970 the grounds of detention were disclosed to the petitioner and he was further informed that if he so desired he could make a representation to the Government. It may be recalled that according to the return he was actually detained on January 30, 1970 though the order of detention had been made on the 27th of that month. The petitioner, without making any representation, apparently sent the present application to this Court through the jail authorities at Jammu. On April 9, 1970 this Court directed a rule nisi to issue in his case along with some other cases. Apparently, the State authorities did not consider it proper to take any further steps for implementing the orders of the petitioner's expulsion because this Court had been seized of the habeas corpus proceedings. According to the application dated June 15, 1970 the order of detention was revoked on June 9, 1970 with the result that the habeas corpus petition assailing that order must be considered to have become infructuous. The question naturally arose if this Court should order the petitioner's release forthwith on account of the revocation of the impugned order of detention or it should dismiss the writ petition as infructuous and send the petitioner back to Jammu to be released from the detention under the order dated January 27, 1970 and leave it to the Government to deal with the petitioner in accordance with law. The petitioner not being a citizen of India obviously had no right to remain in Delhi and according to the order of deportation he was bound to leave India by June 19, 1970. The order of deportation may at this stage be reproduced:

"In exercise of the powers conferred by Clause (c) of sub-section (2) of Section 3 of the Foreigners Act, 1946 (Act No. XXXI of 1946), read with Ministry of Home Affairs Notification issued under S. O. 590 dated 19th of April, 1958, the Government of Jammu and Kashmir hereby direct that the persons named below who are foreigners shall not remain in India and shall leave India within ten days from the date of this order:—

1. Anwar @ Raldu s/o Basawa Batwal r/o Nathpora District Sialkot.

This order has to be read with the Ministry of Home Affairs Notification issued under S. O. 590 dated April 19, 1958. That notification is in the following terms:

"In exercise of the powers conferred by Clause (1) of Article 258 of the Constitution and all other powers enabling him in this behalf and in supersession of all previous notifications on the subject in so far as they relate to the Act, rules and orders hereinafter mentioned, the President with the consent of the State Government concerned hereby entrusts to the Government of each of the State of A. P., Assam, Bihar, Bombay, J. and K., Kerala, M. P., Madras, Mysore, Orissa, Punjab, Rajasthan, U. P. and West Bengal the functions of the Central Government,

(1) under Section 5 of the Indian Passports Act, 1920 (34 of 1920),

(2) under Rules 2 and 4 of the Indian Passports Rules, 1950,

(3) under Rule 3 of the Registration of Foreigners Rules, 1939,

(4) in making orders of the nature specified in Clauses (c), (cc), (d) (e) and (f) of sub-section (2) of Section 3 of the Foreigners Act, 1946 (31 of 1946) and

(5) under the Foreigners Order, 1948 subject to the following conditions, namely,

(a) that in the exercise of that function, the said State Government shall comply with such general or special directions as the Central Government may from time to time issue, and

(b) that notwithstanding this entrustment the Central Government may itself exercise any of the said functions should it deem fit to do so in any case.

I have reproduced this notification because Shri H. K. Puri, the learned counsel appearing amicus curiae in support of the petitioner's application for habeas corpus, had raised the point that it was the Central Government alone which could make a lawful order of deportation under Section 3 (2) (c) of the Foreigners Act. This notification is a complete answer to this objection because the President has under Article 258 lawfully entrusted inter alia to the Government of Jammu and Kashmir the function of the Central Government under Section 3 (2) (c), (d), (e) and (f) of the Foreigners Act.

6. Reverting to the fundamental right claimable by the petitioner who is not a citizen of India it is clear that Article 20 of the Constitution is not attracted to this case. Article 21 merely lays down that no person shall be deprived of his life or personal liberty except according to procedure established by law. Article 22 deals with detention of persons in certain cases. In the case in hand in January, 1970 an order of detention was made under Section 3 (1) (b) of the J. and K. Preventive Detention Act which clearly empowers the Government to detain a foreigner within the meaning of the Foreigners Act with a view to inter alia making arrangements for his expulsion from the State. The petitioner not being a citizen of India is, as already stated, a foreigner and therefore liable to be so detained. The Government, it appears, considered it incumbent to comply with the provisions of Sections 8 to 11 of the Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act even when the petitioner was being detained for the purpose of expelling him from India. The period fixed for the Advisory Board to submit its report had not yet expired when the petitioner, without making any representation, applied to this Court on March 11, 1970 and initiated the present proceedings. After the present application for a writ of habeas corpus was entertained by this Court, the orders in respect of his custody were subject to the control and permission of this Court and the State authorities were naturally reluctant in taking any step towards implementation of the order of expulsion, without this Court's permission. As soon as the order of detention was revoked the State Government made an order under Section 3 (2) (c) of the Foreigners Act read with the Ministry of Home Affairs Notification issued under S. O. 590 dated April 19, 1958 directing the petitioner not to remain in India and to leave India within ten days from June 9, 1970, the date of the order. Soon thereafter the State Government filed an application in this Court stating all the relevant facts. The petitioner was informed of this order and Shri Puri the learned Counsel appearing as amicus curiae actually addressed this Court on its legality after consulting the petitioner. This order appears to be consistent with the order of detention dated January 27, 1970 which was also made with the object of expelling the petitioner from India. Since the order dated June 9, 1970 had to be complied with by June 19, one day earlier, as already noticed, on June 18 this Court permitted the State authorities to take suitable steps for deporting the petitioner from India.

7. The question arises if in these circumstances it can be said that after the revocation of the detention order the petitioner was deprived of his personal liberty illegally or without procedure established by law so as to require this Court to order his immediate release. In State of Punjab v. Ajaib Singh, 1953 SCR 254 = (AIR 1953 SC 10), this Court held that physical restraint put upon an abducted woman (abducted during the partition of the undivided Punjab in 1947) in the process of recovering and taking her into custody without any allegation or accusation of any actual or suspected or apprehended commission by her of any offence of a criminal or quasi-criminal nature or of any act prejudicial to the State or the public interest and handing her over to the custody of the officer-in-charge of the nearest camp under Section 4 of the Abducted Persons (Recovery and Restoration) Act, 55 of 1949 could not be regarded as arrest and detention within the meaning of Article 22 (1) and (2). In the State of U. P. v. Abdul Samad, AIR 1962 SC 1506, two persons (Mr. and Mrs. Abdul Samad) were in Pakistan in March, 1955. In September, 1955 they obtained a Pakistani pass-port and came to India after securing a visa for temporary stay till December 16, 1955. They secured repeated extensions of the period of stay. In 1957 they unsuccessfully applied for their registration as Indian citizens. Against refusal to register them as Indian citizens their application under Article 226 of the Constitution also failed in 1959. The State Government then directed them to leave India. They secured several extensions of time for complying with this order. Finally on July 7, 1960 they were required to leave India within 24 hours. On their failure to do so they were taken into custody on July 21, 1960 and sent by train to Amritsar for being deported to Pakistan. They were produced before a Magistrate at Amritsar who ordered that they be kept in the Civil Lines Thana till further orders. Meanwhile an application was filed before the Lucknow Bench of the Allahabad High Court under Section 491, I. P. C. on July 25, 1960. On being informed that the two persons concerned having been sent to Amritsar were no longer within its territorial jurisdiction, the High Court recorded an order that it had no jurisdiction in the matter and that the proceedings be consigned to records. In the meantime a spurious telegram and a spurious telephone message purporting to emanate from Saxena, Under Secretary, Home Department, U. P. were received by the police at Amritsar stating that the High Court had issued orders for Mr. and Mrs. Abdul Samad to be brought back to Lucknow to attend the case on July 25, 1960. Pursuant to this message Mr. and Mrs. Abdul Samad were taken to Lucknow and produced before the Deputy Registrar of the High Court, but after the Court had disposed of the habeas corpus petition.

They were produced before the Deputy Registrar who directed their production in the High Court on July 26, at 10.15 a. m. An application was thereupon filed on behalf of Mr. and Mrs. Abdul Samad on July 25, 1960 to revive their earlier habeas corpus petition. A fresh habeas corpus petition was also filed on July 26, 1960 praying for their release. On July 27, 1960 the High Court passed an interim order of their release on bail on the fresh habeas corpus petition that application was ultimately allowed and Mr. and Mrs. Abdul Samad were released on the ground that after their arrival in Lucknow at 1 p. m. on July 25, 1960 they had not been produced before a Magistrate within 24 hours and this was in breach of the mandatory provisions contained in Article 22 (2) of the Constitution. On appeal by the State, the Supreme Court set aside the order of the High Court and held that there was no violation of Article 22 (2). In this connection it was emphasised that Mr. and Mrs. Abdul Samad had actually been produced before the High Court on July 26, 1960 within 24 hours of their arrival at Lucknow on July, 25, 1960 and that they were again produced before the High Court on July 27, 1960. On both occasions they had full opportunity of representing their case. The view expressed in this decision would rule out the argument of non-compliance with Article 22 (2) on the facts and circumstances of the present case.

8. As observed earlier the petitioner had no right to enter and remain within the territories of India and indeed he was bound, under the order dated June 9, 1970, to leave India by June 19, 1970. According to Clause (3) of the Foreigners Order, 1948 no foreigner can enter into India:—

- “(a) otherwise than at such port or other place of entry on the border of India as a Registration Officer having jurisdiction at that port or place may appoint in this behalf; either for foreigners generally or for any specified class or description of foreigners; or
- (b) without the leave of the civil authority having jurisdiction at such port or place”.

Under Clause (5) of this Order no foreigner can leave India:

- “(a) otherwise than at such port or other recognised place of departure on the borders of India as the Registration Officer having jurisdiction at that port or place may appoint in this behalf either for foreigners generally or for any specified class or description of foreigners; or
- (b) without the leave of the civil authority having jurisdiction at such port or place”.

9. It would thus be seen that the petitioner who had illegally and clandestinely entered into India could not stay in any part of its territory. Indeed, he had to leave India by June 19, 1970 and this had to be done in accordance with the statutory regulations. The order of his release by this Court would, therefore, not only have resulted in his presence in a part of India in contravention of the statutory provisions but would in addition have rendered it somewhat difficult for the authorities to enforce compliance with the order of his expulsion. In those circumstances the restraint on his personal liberty for the purpose of taking him to the border in order to expel him from India in accordance with the statutory provisions could by no means be considered to be an illegal custody justifying an order of release by this Court. While dealing with cases like the present one cannot ignore the historical fact of Pakistan's extremely hostile attitude towards the State of Jammu and Kashmir and also the fact that from the borders of the State of Jammu and Kashmir adjoining those of West Pakistan infiltrators have constantly been surreptitiously entering that part of the Indian territory for unfriendly activities which endanger maintenance of public order and security of the State. The petitioner had on his own showing crossed the cease-fire line secretly with the object of taking out of India the necessities of life. Regulations governing the entry into and departure from India as also the presence in this country of Pakistani infiltrators from across the cease-fire line on the Jammu and Kashmir border demand strict enforcement and the claim to personal liberty made by unlawful infiltrators from Pakistan cannot be placed above the security of the country and maintenance of law and order. Habeas corpus, though a writ of right, is not a writ of course. Its scope has grown to achieve its purpose of protecting individuals against erosion of the right to be free from wrongful restraint on their rightful liberty. But when, as in the present case, the petitioner has no right to move about freely in this country without a proper legal sanction, the restraint exercised on him for expelling him from India by June 19, 1970 cannot be construed on the facts and circumstances of this case to amount to his custody being illegal so as to require this Court to direct his immediate release. The constitutional protection against illegal deprivation of personal liberty construed in a practical way cannot entitle non-citizens like the petitioner to remain in India contrary to the provisions of the law governing foreigners. It is accordingly difficult to hold that the petitioner is being illegally deprived of his right to personal liberty to stay and move about in India without restraint. The petition accordingly fails and is dismissed.

Petition dismissed.

HEGDE, J.: This is an appeal under Section 116A of the Representation of the People Act, 1951 (to be hereinafter referred to as the Act) from the judgment and order dated July 14, 1969 of the Patna High Court in Election Petition No. 1 of 1968.

2. A biennial election to the Rajya Sabha was held in March 1968. In that election, Bihar Legislative Assembly had to elect seven members to the Rajya Sabha. Twenty persons contested for those seven seats. The appellant is one of them. The appellant failed to get the required number of votes. By means of an election petition which has given rise to this appeal, he challenged the validity of the election of the 1st respondent on two grounds viz. (1) that the nomination of respondent No. 1 was improperly accepted inasmuch as he was not qualified to be enrolled as an elector in the electoral roll of West Patna Assembly constituency for the time being in force on the ground that he was then not ordinarily resident in the said constituency, but was on the other hand, ordinarily resident in Alipur constituency of the West Bengal Legislative Assembly and (2) that he was guilty of corrupt practice within the meaning of sub-section (1) of Section 123 of the Act, inasmuch as he had not only made offers but also payments of money to various electors as motive or reward for voting in his favour.

3. The election petition was resisted by the 1st respondent on various grounds. One of the contentions taken by him was that the petition was not in accordance with the provisions of Sections 81, 82 and 117 of the Act and therefore it was not maintainable. The High Court has accepted that contention. It has also rejected the other pleas taken by the appellant. As we are in agreement with the High Court that the election petition is liable to be dismissed under Section 86 of the Act, we do not think it necessary to go into the merits of the case.

Section 86 (1) of the Act provides: "The High Court shall dismiss an election petition which does not comply with the provisions of Section 31 or Section 82 or Section 117".

4. Section 81 (3) requires (i) that every election petition shall be accompanied by as many copies hereof as there are respondents mentioned in the petition and (ii) that every such copy shall be attested by the petitioner under his own signature to be a true copy of the petition. The contention of the 1st respondent is that the copy served on him which is marked Exh. 'O' in the trial Court is not the true copy of the election petition filed in Court. In the High Court it was contended that Exh. 'O' is not a genuine document but that contention was not pressed before us. Therefore, we have to proceed on the basis that Exh. 'O' is a copy served on the 1st respondent.

5. The discrepancies between the election petition filed in Court and Exh. 'O' are set out by the High Court in paragraph 15 of the its judgment. That paragraph to the extent material for our present purpose reads:

" x x x x

(a) In paragraph 12, as also in paragraph 13 of the original, it has been stated that the total number of elected members of the Bihar Legislative Assembly at the time of the impugned election was 316, whereas in Ext. 'O' this figure has been stated to be 317 in both these paragraphs.

(b) In paragraph 16 of the original it has been stated that respondents 2 and 3 had been set up as candidates in the election by the Samyukta Socialist Party, and as to respondents 6 and 5, it was stated that they had been set up by the Communist Party of India and the Jana Sangh respectively. But in Ext. 'O' it has been stated that the candidates who were set up by the Samyukta Socialist Party were respondents 2 and 6, while respondents 3 and 5 had been set up by the Communist Party of India and the Jana Sangh respectively.

(c) In paragraph 28 of the original the following passage occurs:

"Particulars of the gifts and gratifications in the form of bribe offered by respondent No. 8 and his election agent and his agent with the connivance and consent of the said respondent No. 8 and his election agent are set out in Annexure 'D' hereto annexed".

But the passage in Ext. 'O' reads:

"Particulars of the gifts and gratifications in the form of bribe offered by respondent No. 8 and his election agent and his agent with the connivance and consent of the said respondent No. 1 and his election agent are set out in Annexure 'D' hereto annexed".

(d) In paragraph 3 of the verification at page 25 of the original, it has been stated, inter alia, that the statements made in paragraph 3 of the election petition are true to the petitioner's information, but in Exh. 'O' no verification has been made with respect to the statements made in paragraph 3 of the election petition, and instead verification has been made twice with respect to the statements made in paragraph 2, once as true to the petitioner's knowledge and again as true to his information.

(e) In paragraph 3 of Annexure 'B' a list of 20 persons has been given, one of which is Shri Brindaban Swana, M. L. A., in the original and Shri Brindaban Swansi, M. L. A. in Ext. 'O'.

(f) In Annexure 'C' relating to the particulars of corrupt practice mentioned in paragraph 25 of the election petition, it has been stated in the original that Shri Munshi Hansda, M. L. A. had offered money and promised to pay money to Shri Jetha Kiski, M. L. A. for casting his first preference vote in favour of respondent No. 1 at the M. L. A. Flat on 19-3-1968, but in Ext. 'O' mention has been made of the name of Paul Hansda, M. L. A., as the alleged offerer of money to Shri Jethu Kisku, M. L. A.; and

(g) In Annexure 'C' again, the original reads that the offer of money and promise of payment of money was made to Shri Mahabir Paswan by respondent No. 1 and Shri Balwant Nath Singh, M. L. A. on 26-3-1968 but in Ext. 'O' this date has been stated as 28-3-1968".

6. Mr. M. C. Chagla, learned Counsel for the appellant contended that Section 81 (3) is merely directory and not mandatory. We do not think it necessary to go into that question, as in our opinion that provision has not even been substantially complied with. The requirements of Sec. 81 (3) have been laid down by this Court in Murarka Radhey Shyam Ram Kumar v. Roop Singh Rathore, (1964) 3 SCR 573 = (AIR 1964 SC 1545). In that case this Court ruled that the word 'copy' in Section 81 (3) of the Act did not mean an absolutely exact copy but a copy so true that nobody could by any possibility misunderstand it, and that the test whether a copy was a true one was whether any variation from the original was calculated to mislead an ordinary person. The same view was taken by this Court in Ch. Subbarao v. Member Election Tribunal, Hyderabad, (1964) 6 SCR 213 = (AIR 1964 SC 1027). In our opinion, it is not necessary to refer to the discrepancies between the original petition and the copy served excepting that referred to in Clause (f) of paragraph 15 of the trial Court's judgment. Admittedly Shri Munshi Hansda and Paul Hansda are members of the Patna Legislative Assembly. In the election petition it was stated that money was offered to Shri Jetha Kisku, M. L. A. by Munshi Hansda but in Exh. 'O' it was stated that money was offered to the said Jetha Kisku by Paul Hansda. This divergence was bound to mislead the contesting respondents and prejudice their defence. Pleadings in a case has great importance and that is more so in election petitions particularly when the returned candidate is charged with corrupt practice. He must know what the charge against him is so that he may prepare his defence. If relying on the allegations in the copy of the petition served on him that the money was paid to Jetha Kisku through Paul Hansda, the 1st respondent had collected evidence to show that that allegation is false then the entire basis of his defence would have fallen to the ground because at a later stage he had to meet a totally different case. The law requires that a true copy of the election petition should be served on the respondents. That requirement has not been either fully or substantially complied with. Therefore, we have no doubt in our mind that the election petition is liable to be dismissed under Section 86 of the Act.

Mr. Chagla tried to extricate his client from the difficult position in which he had placed himself by urging that two copies of the election petition had been served on the 1st respondent as required by the rules of the Patna High Court, one through the Court and another through registered post; the 1st respondent has produced only one of those copies; it is not known whether the other copy was also defective and therefore there is no ground to reject the election petition at the very threshold. We are unable to entertain this contention. If it was the case of the appellant that the 1st respondent was not prejudiced by the service of Exh. 'O', he should have got summoned the other copy said to have been served on him. No such attempt appears to have been made. No explanation was offered how several wrong statements came to be made in Exh. 'O'. There is hardly any doubt that the relevant papers filed in Court on behalf of the appellant were prepared in a callous manner.

7. For the reasons mentioned above we agree with the trial Court that the petition is liable to be dismissed under Section 86 of the Act. Hence, this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. Ltd., Appellant v. The Chief Commissioner, Delhi and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 1424 of 1966, D/- 11-9-1969.

(A) Factories Act (1948), S. 112 — Rules under — Delhi Factories Rules, 1950, Rule 7 — Rule 7 read with R. 5 and its Schedule — Imposition of fee under, for renewal of licence — Levy is in nature of fee and not tax.

A levy in the nature of a fee does not cease to be of that character

merely because there is an element of compulsion or coerciveness present in it, nor is it a postulate of a fee that it must have direct relation to the actual services rendered by the authority to individual who obtains the benefit of service. If with a view to provide a specific service, levy is imposed by law and expenses for maintaining the service are met out of the amounts collected there being a reasonable relation between the levy and the expenses incurred for rendering the service, the levy would be in the nature of a fee and not in the nature of a tax. (Para 6)

The levy of the licence fee for renewal of licence under the Delhi Factories Rules is not wholly unrelated to the expenditure incurred out of the total realisation. When it was never made out that the collections on account of the licence fee were merged in the general public revenue and were not appropriated in the manner laid down for the appropriation of expenses for the department concerned it could not be said that amount so paid was a tax and not fee. (Para 9)

(B) Factories Act (1948), S. 3 — Inspector appointed under Act — Duties of.

The Inspectors of factories appointed under the Factories Rules do not simply carry out the duties laid on them under the Act. In the course of discharge of their duties and obligations the Inspectors are expected to give proper advice and guidance so that there may be due compliance with the provisions of the Act. It can well be said that on certain occasions factory owners are bound to receive a good deal of benefit by being saved from the consequences of the working of dangerous machines or employment of such processes as involve danger to human life by being warned at the proper time as to the defective nature of the machinery or of the taking of precautions which are enjoined under the Act. It involves a good deal of technical advice. It is clear that the nature of the work of the Inspector is such that he is to render as much if not more service than a Commissioner would; in the matter of supervision, regulation and control over the way in which the management of the trustees of religious and charitable endowment was concerned. (Para 9)

GROVER, J.:— This is an appeal from a judgment of the Punjab High Court (Circuit Bench, Delhi) involving the question of the validity of Rule 7 read with Rule 5 and its Schedule of the Delhi Factories Rules 1950 made under Section 112 of the Factories Act, 1948, hereinafter called the Act. The impugned Rules relate to the grant of a licence for a factory and renewal thereof, the fees being prescribed by the Schedule to Rule 5.

2. The Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. Ltd., operates within the Delhi area a number of industrial establishments which are factories within the meaning of Section 2 (m) of the Act. The company has to pay a total sum of Rs. 12,775.00 as annual licence fee for all its factories in Delhi, the fees being calculated according to the horse power and the maximum number of workers to be employed on any day during the year as given in the Schedule. The Maximum fee that is payable is Rs. 2,000 for a factory. The factories can be run only after registration and under a licence granted under the Act and the Rules on payment of the prescribed fee. The licence is renewed every year under Rule 7 on payment of the same fee which is paid at the time of the granting of the licence. Every licence granted or renewed remains in force upto Dec. 31, of the year for which it is granted or renewed. In January 1963 the company filed a petition under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution in the High Court challenging the validity of the Rules under which the licence fee for renewal of the licence for each of its factories in Delhi was being levied and collected i.e., Rule 7 read with Rule 5 and its Schedule. This petition was dismissed by a Division Bench on February 11, 1965. The company then filed the present appeal by certificate.

3. The principal point which has been canvassed on behalf of the appellant company is that the payment made for renewal of the licence was and is only to endorse the licence as valid for the next year and the amount charged for the renewal thereof cannot and does not entail services which can reasonably be regarded to be commensurate with the amount so charged. In other words the element of quid-pro-quo which distinguishes a fee from a tax is absent and lacking. The Act, it is pointed out, contains specific provisions for rendering of benefit and service to the workmen by the owners of the factories. The Inspectors who are appointed under the Act to ensure that its provisions are complied with by the factory owners constitute a policy agency and it is not possible to say that the powers and duties of the Inspectors when exercised and carried out amount to services rendered for the benefit of the factory owners or the workmen.

4. Falshaw, C. J., who delivered the judgment of the Division Bench was of the view that the work carried out by the Inspectors under the Act of seeing that all its beneficent provisions for the health and welfare of the workers employed in the factories were fully implemented must definitely be regarded as services rendered in return for the fee levied for the annual renewal of the licence for the factory. It was further observed on an examination of the affidavit which had been placed before the Court that at least 60 per cent of the amount realised as licence fee was being utilised on running the department.

5. Mr. H. R. Gokhale for the appellant company has contended that the High Court failed to apply the principles which are settled by certain decisions of this Court for determining whether a fee for a licence or a renewal thereof in circumstances similar to the present case is in substance and effect a tax. He has relied largely on Corporation of Calcutta v. Liberty Cinema, (1965) 2 SCR 477 = (AIR 1965 SC 1107). In that case the licence fee had been raised from Rupees 400 to Rupees 6,000 per year. It was observed in the majority judgment that the provision under which the licence had to be taken out for a cinema did not refer to the rendering of any service by the Corporation of Calcutta. It was also not obligatory on the Corporation to make any bye-law under which services were to be rendered. If the bye-laws were not made there would be no service to render. It was further pointed out that inspection by the authorities concerned could not be regarded as a service to the licensee as it was meant only to make sure that the licensee carried out the conditions on which the licence had been granted to him. Some of the earlier decisions were considered as also the pronouncement in H. H. Sudhindra Thirtha Swamiar v. Commr. for Hindu Religious & Charitable Endowments, Mysore, 1963 Supp (2) SCR 302 = (AIR 1963 SC 966) and with regard to the latter case it was said that a service resulting in the control of the Mathadipathi conferred special benefit on the institution which alone paid the levy.

6. As far back as 1954 it was laid down in Sri Jagannath Ramanuj Das v. State of Orissa, 1954 SCR 1046 = (AIR 1954 SC 400) that the contributions levied for the expenses of the Commr. and his staff who were to exercise effective control over the trustees of the Maths and the temples was to be regarded as a fee and not a tax. Two reasons were given for this: (1) The payment was demanded only for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the Commissioner and his staff which is the machinery set up for due administration of the affairs of the religious institution. (2) The collections made were not merged in the general public revenue. Similarly in Ratilal

Panachand Gandhi v. State of Bombay, 1954 SCR 1055 = (AIR 1954 SC 588) the contributions imposed under the Bombay Public Trusts Act was held to be fee and not tax. It was stated that in the first place these contributions were to be created to the Public Trusts Administration Fund which was a special fund and were not to be merged in the general revenue. Secondly, it was not necessary that services should be rendered only at the request of particular people and it was enough that payments were demanded for rendering services which the State considered beneficial in the public interest and which the people had to accept whether they were willing or not. The following observations in H. H. Sudhindra Thirtha Swamiar, 1963 Supp (2) SCR 302 = (AIR 1963 SC 966) may be referred to with advantage:

"A levy in the nature of a fee does not cease to be of that character merely because there is an element of compulsion or coerciveness present in it, nor is it a postulate of a fee that it must have direct relation to the actual services rendered by the authority to individual who obtains the benefit of service. If with a view to provide a specific service, levy is imposed by law and expenses for maintaining the service are met out of the amounts collected there being a reasonable relation between the levy and the expenses incurred for rendering the service, the levy would be in the nature of a fee and not in the nature of a tax". According to Mr. H. R. Gokhale the present case is of the type which would fall squarely within the decision in Liberty Cinema case, (1965) 2 SCR 477 = (AIR 1965 SC 1107). It is difficult to agree. In each case where the question arises whether the levy is in the nature of a fee the entire scheme of the statutory provisions, the duties and obligations imposed on the inspecting staff and the nature of work done by them will have to be examined for the purpose of determining the rendering of the services which would make the levy a fee. It is quite apparent that in the Liberty Cinema case it was found that no service of any kind was being or could be rendered and for that reason the levy was held to be a tax and not a fee. In our judgment the present case falls within the other class of cases to which reference has been made in which contributions for the purpose of maintaining an authority and the staff for supervising and controlling public institutions like Maths etc., were held to be fee and not tax.

7. We may now look at the provisions of the Act. Chapter II provides for the inspecting staff. Section 9 gives the powers of the Inspectors. They can enter any factory and inter alia make examination of the premises, plant and machinery. Under Section 10 qualified medical practitioners can be appointed to be certifying surgeons for the purpose of the Act. The certifying surgeon has to carry out such duties as may be prescribed in connection with the examination and certification of young persons under the Act, the examination of persons engaged in factories in dangerous occupation or process as also the exercising of medical supervision. Chapter III deals with health. Section 11 contains detailed provisions about cleanliness. Sections 12 to 14 relate to disposal of waste and effluents, ventilation and temperature and dust and fume. Sections 17 to 20 concern lighting, drinking water, latrines and urinals, and spittoons. Chapter IV contains the provisions relating to safety. Section 21 deals with fencing of machinery. Section 22 with work on or near machinery in motion and Section 23 with employment of young persons on dangerous machines. The other sections which may be noticed in this Chapter are Section 27 containing the prohibition of employment of women and children near cottonopeners; Section 35 in the matter of protection of eyes, Section 36 dealing with precautions against dangerous fumes, Section 37 relating to explosive or inflammable dust, gas etc., and Section 38 relating to precautions in case of fire. Under Section 39 if it appears to the Inspector that any building or part of a building or any part of the ways, machinery or plant in a factory is in such a condition that it may be dangerous to human life and safety he may serve on the manager of the factory an order in writing requiring him to furnish the particulars for determining whether the building, machinery, plant etc., can be used with safety or to carry out such tests as may be specified and convey the result thereof to the Inspector. Under Section 40 if it appears to the Inspector that any building or part of a building is in such a condition that it is dangerous to human life or safety he can serve an order on the manager of the factory specifying the measures which should be adopted and requiring him to carry out the same before a specified date. Similarly if it appears to him that the use of any building or machinery or plant involves imminent danger to human life or safety he can serve an order prohibiting its use until it has been properly repaired or altered. Chapter V deals with welfare and provisions are made therein for such amenities as washing facilities for storing and drying clothing, for sitting, first aid appliances, canteens and creches and every factory is required under Section 49 wherein 500 or more workers are ordinarily employed to have such number of welfare officers as may be prescribed. The Rules also contain various provisions where the Inspector has to be consulted and his approval obtained for doing certain things. For instance Rule 65 (3) says that the manager of a factory shall submit for the approval of the Chief Inspector plans of the building to be constructed or adapted for use as a canteen. It is unnecessary to refer to several other provisions contained in the Act and the Rules which show that the Chief Inspector and his staff play a very important role in the working of the factory.

8. In the return which was filed in the High Court to the writ petition it was stated in paragraph 8 that the fees were being charged for the running of the whole establishment including the Factory Inspectorate which in its turn "provides free inspection and expert technical advice etc., to factory owners in matters connected with safety, health, welfare and the allied matters in respect of compliance with the provisions of the Factories Act". It has further been stated that in our country matters relating to health, safety, welfare and employment have to be looked after and the desired results have been sought to be achieved by the legislature by providing statutory inspection service.

9. According to Mr. Gokhale the Inspectors only carry out the duties laid on them under the Act and all that they have to do is to ensure that the statutory provisions and the rules are carried out properly and launch prosecutions against factory owners under the provisions of Chapter X of the Act in case of any breach or default on the part of the factory owners. We do not consider that the functions and duties of the Inspectorate are confined only to the limited task which has been suggested on behalf of the appellant company. A large number of provisions to which reference has been made, particularly in the Chapter dealing with safety, involve a good deal of technical knowledge and in the course of discharge of their duties and obligations the Inspectors are expected to give proper advice and guidance so that there may be due compliance with the provisions of the Act. It can well be said that on certain occasions factory owners are bound to receive a good deal of benefit by being saved from the consequences of the working of dangerous machines or employment of such processes as involve danger to human life by being warned at the proper time as to the defective nature of the machinery or of the taking of precautions which are enjoined under the Act. Similarly if a building or a machinery or a plant is in such a condition that it is dangerous to human life or safety the Inspector by serving a timely notice on the manager saves the factory owner from all the consequences of proper repairs not being done in time to the building or the machinery. Indeed it seems to us that the nature of the work of the Inspector is such that he is to render as much, if not more service than a Commissioner would, in the matter of supervision, regulation and control over the way in which the management of the trustees of religious and charitable endowment was concerned. The High Court further found, which finding being of fact, must be considered as final that 60 per cent of the amount of licence fees which were being realized was actually spent on services rendered to the factory owners. It can, therefore, hardly be contended that the levy of the licence fee was wholly unrelated to the expenditure incurred out of the total realisation. Before the High Court the appellant company never made out any case that the collections on account of the licence fee were merged in the general public revenue and were not appropriated in the manner laid down for the appropriation of expenses for the department concerned.

10. There can be no manner of doubt that the amount which the appellant company has to pay as licence fee is not in the nature of a tax but is a fee which could be properly levied.

11. The appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

J. C. SHAH AND A. N. GROVER, JJ.
Union of India, Appellant v. West Coast Paper Mills Ltd., Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 1742 of 1966,
D/- 14-10-1970.

(A) Railways Act (1890), Ss. 41, 28 42, 29 (3) — Railway Rates Tribunal — Jurisdiction — Declaration that rates between two stations are unreasonable — Within Tribunal's Jurisdiction.

Where the Railway Rates Tribunal constituted under Section 34 of the Railways Act (1890) declares without giving any consequential relief that the charge made by the railway administration under the order of the Railway Board levying tariff at the standard rates but on the footing that for each kilometer the goods are transported the charge will be levied at three times the standard rate is unreasonable and discriminatory, the Tribunal does not exceed its jurisdiction. The Tribunal is invested with the authority subject to the limitations contained in Section 29 (3) and Section 42 to entertain a complaint and to give relief in respect of rates which are found to be unreasonable between two stations. There is also nothing in the Rules under Goods Tariff No. 38 (as in force from 1-8-

KN/LN/E918/70/DVT/G

1950) which even indirectly affects the jurisdiction of the Tribunal to determine whether the rates for carriage of certain specified commodities between two stations are unreasonable. (Paras 11, 12, 13)

(B) Constitution of India, Article 136—Appeal with special leave—Finding by Railway Rates Tribunal that rates are unreasonable and discriminatory — Cannot be challenged — Railways Act (1890), S. 41. (Para 11)

Mr. Jagadish Swarup, Solicitor-General of India, (M/s. A. S. Nambiar and S. P. Nayar, Advocates with him), for Appellant; M/s. H. R. Gokhale and M. K. Ramamurthi, Senior Advocates, (Mrs. Shyamla Pappu and Mr. B. D. Sharma, Advocates, with them), for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHAH, J.:— This is an appeal with special leave against the order of the Railway Rates Tribunal constituted under Section 34 of the Indian Railways Act 9 of 1890.

2. The West Coast Paper Mills Ltd. — hereinafter called 'the Company' — is a manufacturer of paper and paper products. It has set up a factory at Bengurnagar in Dandeli at the terminus of Alnawar-Dandeli branch line of the Southern Railway. This branch line 32 Kilometers in length was a "light railway" constructed and opened for traffic by the Government of Bombay in 1919, principally for the purpose of transporting forest produce collected in the surrounding region. With the reorganisation of the States under the States Reorganization Act the ownership of the Railway passed to the Mysore Government. The Railway was finally taken over by the Government of India with effect from October 1, 1962, and now forms part of the Indian Railways.

3. The Company used the branch line for transporting coal, limestone etc., required for its manufacturing activities, and also for transporting its manufactured products. Initially the Railways were levying freight over this branch line at "common rates" for all commodities on "a weight basis". On representations made by the users of this branch line, the Indian Railways substituted, with effect from February 1, 1964, the "standard telescopic class rates". In charging the goods freight, however, the actual distance of the branch line was multiplied by three.

4. The Company filed a complaint before the Railway Rates Tribunal and challenged as "unjust, unreasonable and discriminatory" the method of levy of freight on goods traffic. The Company claimed that the levy of rates offended the provisions of Section 28 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, and that the existing rates were per se unreasonable. The Company claimed a declaration that the rate between the stations specified in the complaint were unreasonable and a direction to the Railway to levy with effect from the date of the complaint standard rates and charges for the traffic on the branch line without "inflating the distance".

5. The Union of India as representing the Southern Railway defended the complaint. They contended that the introduction of "standard rates and fares" over the section "on a continuous distance basis with three times inflation of the chargeable distance" for goods was made on the authority of the Central Government under its directive and the Railway Rates Tribunal is precluded from questioning its legality or propriety. They also contended that in any event the levy is not unjust, unreasonable or discriminatory; that the increased rate on the basis of "inflated distance" was in vogue in different sections of the Indian Railways; that such inflation was adopted either because of the higher cost of operation of the particular section or because of unusually heavy capital costs involved on a particular system of Railway and for similar reasons; that the reason for inflation on the branch line was due to large capital investment for the rehabilitation of this branch line by the Central Government after it was taken over from the previous owners; that before the branch line was purchased it was working at a loss for a number of years and for effectively working the branch line it had become necessary to undertake extensive repairs and renewal work including complete relaying of the track, construction of crossing stations, etc., that the total costs of such repairs and renewal was Rs. 28.99 lakhs, and that even after the introduction of higher rates and fares with 'three times inflation' in distance, the users of branch line will be paying less than what they were paying before the introduction of the new rates. The Union denied the charge of discrimination and undue preference and contended that the Tribunal had no jurisdiction to hear the complaint merely because the Company had selected certain commodities and certain sets of stations in support of its grievance under Section 41 (1) (b) of the Indian Railways Act, 1890.

6. On the pleadings before the Tribunal, six issues were settled, four of which are material:

"(1) Is the complaint not maintainable against the respondent (Union of India) under Section 41 (1) (b) of the Indian Railways Act, 1890 (Act 9 of 1890)?

(2) Whether rates for the carriage of complainant's traffic have become unreasonable as a result of inflating the chargeable distance over the Alnavar-Dandeli Section?

(3) Whether the impugned method of charging on inflated distance (at three times the actual distance over the Alnavar-Dandeli Section to arrive at the distance for charge) is governed by any order of the Central Government, and if so, whether the complaint is not maintainable for the same reason?

(4) Whether the respondent (Union of India) in charging the complainant's traffic over the Alnavar-Dandeli Section at tariff rate on continuous distance basis, but with three times the inflation in the chargeable distance over the Section, is subjecting the complainant's traffic to the undue prejudice in contravention of Sec. 28 of the Indian Railways Act?"

The Tribunal decided the case against the Railway Administration. In the view of the Chairman and Mr. Munshi (one of the members of the Tribunal), on issue No. (1) the complaint was maintainable against the Union of India under Section 41 (1) (b) of the Indian Railways Act. They observed that though a class rate between two stations for a commodity would fall outside the scope of Section 41 (1) (b), it was still open to the Company to make a grievance in respect of the selected few items for the purpose of attack. On Issue No. (2) they held that the Railway had not made out any "justification for inflating the chargeable distance over the Alnawar-Dandeli Section". On Issue No. (3) they held that the jurisdiction of the Tribunal to examine the validity of the impugned method of charging the distance by a multiple of three of the actual distance over the section to arrive at the distance for determining freight, though governed by the order of the Central Government, was not excluded. On Issue No. (4) the Chairman observed:

"There is x x x no doubt that the order in question (Ext. R-4) is one issued under Section 29 (1) of the Act. If the Tribunal were to give "any relief which might have even indirectly the effect of cancelling the said order, it would amount to changing the maxima and minima rates and the level of class rates applicable to Alnawar-Dandeli Section which would not be within its power or jurisdiction. However, if it declared only certain rates for specific commodities between specific pairs of stations to be unreasonable and fixed new rates in lieu thereof, the level of class rates as such would not be affected. If such rates are based on the actual distance they would also fall within the maxima and minima under the inflated distance sanctioned by Ext. R-4. I, therefore, find that though the method of charging on inflated distance over the Alnawar-Dandeli Section is governed by the order of the Central Government (Ext. R-4) this Tribunal does not lose jurisdiction to decide on the unreasonableness of rates arrived thereby and the complaint cannot be said to be not maintainable for that reason".

Mr. Munshi agreed with that view. In his view charging the company's traffic over the branch line at tariff rates on continuous distance basis but at three times the chargeable distance over the branch line was "unwarranted, unjustified and therefore unreasonable".

7. Mr. V. K. Rangaswami the third member of the Tribunal agreed with the Chairman and Mr. Munshi on the issue of unreasonableness of the rate charged by multiplying the distance by three. He also agreed that the jurisdiction of the Tribunal to entertain a complaint relating to levy of unreasonable charge between specific stations was not excluded. But he differed with the other members on the competence of the Tribunal to declare invalid the method of levy of freight and to fix new rates in lieu of rates declared unreasonable. In the opinion of the majority it was competent to the Tribunal to do so. Mr. Rangaswami held that it was for the Railway Administration to consider the matter and to take action to cancel the inflated distance over the branch line generally, and to fix new rates.

8. The Tribunal by a unanimous order made the following directions:

"..... that the class rate with inflated distance applicable to the Alnawar-Dandeli Branch, subject the complainant to an undue disadvantage in contravention of Section 28 of the Indian Railways Act, and also render unreasonable per se the rates for the complainant's traffic to and from Dandeli".

Against that order, this appeal has been filed with special leave.

9. The relevant provisions of the Indian Railways Act 9 of 1890 may be briefly set out:

S. 28 — "A railway administration shall not make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to, or in favour of, any particular person or railway administration, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever, or subject any particular person or railway administration or any particular description of traffic to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever".

S. 29 — "(1) The Central Government may by general or special order fix maximum and minimum rates for the whole or any part of a railway, and prescribe the conditions in which such rates will apply.

(2) x x x x x

(3) Any complaint that a railway administration is contravening any order issued by the Central Government under sub-section (1) shall be determined by the Central Government".

S. 41 — "(1) Any complaint that a railway administration—

(a) is contravening the provisions of Section 28, or

(b) is charging for the carriage of any commodity between two stations a rate which is unreasonable, or

(c) x x x
may be made to the Tribunal, and the Tribunal shall hear and decide any such complaint in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter.

x x x x".
S. 42 — "The Central Government alone shall have power—

(a) to classify or reclassify any commodity;

(b) to increase or reduce the level of class rates and other charges".

10. The jurisdiction conferred upon the Tribunal by Section 41 and relating to matters set out in clauses (a) to (c) thereof is restricted by the terms of Section 29 (3) and Sec. 42. Section 28 prohibits a railway administration from making undue preference or subjecting any particular person or railway administration or any particular description of traffic to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage. But even in a dispute relating to the matters set out in Section 41 (1) (a), (b) and (c), where the Central Government has fixed by general or special order maximum and minimum range of rates for the whole or any part of a railway the complaint that the railway administration has contravened any order issued by the Central Government may be determined by the Central Government and not by the Tribunal. Similarly, the Central Government has and the Tribunal has not the power to classify or reclassify any commodity and to increase or reduce the level of class rates and other charges. Subject to these restrictions, the Tribunal has the power to determine whether the Railway Administration has acted in contravention of the provisions of Section 28, i. e., it has granted any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to, or in favour of any particular person, or shown any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage to any person or railway administration or any particular description of traffic, and was charging for the carriage of any commodity between two stations a rate which was unreasonable or was levying any other charge which was unreasonable.

11. In the present case the maximum and minimum range of rates have been fixed by the Central Government. A complaint that the railway administration has acted in contravention of the order issued by the Central Government may be determined by the Central Government and not by the Tribunal. Again the Central Government alone has the power to classify or reclassify any commodity or to increase or reduce the level of class rates and other charges. The Tribunal accepted these limitations upon the exercise of its powers. The Tribunal however found that the charge made by the railway administration under the order of the Railway Board levying tariff at the standard rates but on the footing that for each kilometer the goods are transported the charge will be levied at three times the standard rate is unreasonable and discriminatory. The finding proceeds upon appreciation of evidence which has been examined in great detail. The finding of the Tribunal cannot be challenged in this appeal with special leave under Art. 136 of the Constitution, and no attempt has been made to challenge before us that finding.

12. On behalf of the Union it was urged by the Solicitor-General that the impugned rates were station to station rates "and relying upon certain rules framed by the Railway Board, counsel contended that in respect of station-to-station rates the Tribunal had no jurisdiction to give relief. Rule 63 of Goods Tariff No. 28 in force from August 1, 1950, provided for the station-to-station rates as one of the types of rates chargeable. Cl. (7) provided that a "station-to-station rate" is a special rate for the total distance between two specific points (stations only): and cl. (8) provided that:

(i) those between two stations on the same Railway, that is, local station-to-station rates;

(ii) those between a station on one railway and a station on another railway."

Similarly in Rule 67 of Goods Tariff No. 29 in force from June 1, 1954, similar definition of station-to-station rates was given. In Rule 67 of Goods Tariff No. 29 effective from October 1, 1958, rates were divided into two types — (i) Class rates; and (ii) station-to-station rates. By cl. (3) it was provided:

"(i) 'Station-to-station rate' means a special reduced rate applicable to a specific commodity booked from one specified station to another specified station.

(ii) Station-to-station rates may be quoted from and to stations on the same railway or from a station on one railway to a station on another railway."

These rules have, in our judgment, no relevance in determining the matter in dispute in this appeal, for in S. 41 (1) (b) the expression used is not "station-to-station rates", but a rate between two stations which is unreasonable. There is nothing in the rules which even indirectly affects the jurisdiction of the Tribunal to determine whether the rates for carriage of certain specified commodities between two stations are unreasonable. The Tribunal has expressly observed that the relief granted to the Company must be within the range of rates prescribed by the Central Government. The Tribunal has expressly observed that it is incompetent to grant relief which might even indirectly cancel the order of the Central Government under Section 10 (1), for, it would amount to changing the range and level of class rates applicable to the branch line. But if the Tribunal declared that only certain rates for specific commodities, between specified pairs of stations, are unreasonable, the level of class rates is not affected. The Tribunal is invested with the authority subject to the limitations contained in S. 29 (3) and S. 42 to entertain a complaint and to give relief in respect of rates which are found to be unreasonable between two stations. The complaint made by the Company did not seek intervention of the Tribunal in matters which may be raised only for decision to the Central Government by S. 29 and S. 42 of the Act, and the Tribunal has not given any relief in contravention of those provisions. The Tribunal has merely declared that the chargeable rate of freight determined by multiplying by three the distance over which the goods are transported for specific commodities is in contravention of S. 28 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890.

13. We do not see force in the opinion expressed by Mr. V. R. Ranganaswami and even if the Tribunal holds that the rates between two stations in respect of a specific commodity are unreasonable, it cannot make a declaration to that effect. Such a view would deprive the Tribunal of its power to give formal shape to its view. We are not called upon to decide whether the Tribunal has power to fix rates in substitution of rates declared unreasonable in exercise of the jurisdiction under S. 41 (1) (b), because no such rates are fixed by order of the Tribunal.

14. The relief granted by the Tribunal is, in our judgment, within its jurisdiction.

15. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

There is no distinction between buildings the fair rent of which has actually been fixed by the Rent Controller and those in respect of which no such rent has been fixed. When the controller has not fixed the fair rent, the municipal authorities will have to arrive at their own figure of fair rent in accordance with the principles laid down in the Rent Control Act. The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

GROVER, J.: These appeals have been brought by special leave from a judgment of the Andhra Pradesh High Court.

2. Three suits, namely, O. S. Nos. 222, 223 and 466 of 1960 were filed in the Guntur court in which the relief claimed was for a declaration that the general revision of the rental values of the houses and buildings effected by the Guntur Municipality in the year 1960 for the purpose of assessment of tax was ultra vires and illegal and for a consequential relief of a permanent injunction restraining the municipality from acting on the special notices issued to the tax payers.

3. Section 81 of the Madras District Municipalities Act 1920, hereinafter called the "Municipalities Act" gives the description and classes of property tax and other taxes leviable by the municipality. Section 82 gives the method of assessment. It is provided by sub-s. (2) of that section that the annual value of lands and buildings shall be deemed to be the gross annual rent at which they may reasonably be expected to let from month to month or from year to year less certain deductions. The District Munsif by a common judgment delivered in the three suits held that the annual value had to be computed in the context of the rent that was payable under the Rent Control legislation. The suits were decreed and a declaration was granted that the general revision made by the Guntur Municipality in 1960 by increasing the rental value of houses to more than the rental value which prevailed on the dates provided in the Rent Control Acts in force prior to 1960 was ultra vires and illegal and a permanent injunctions were granted restraining the municipality from acting upon the special demand notices issued to the rate-payers and from collecting the enhanced tax. Appeals were filed and the first appellate court substantially upheld the judgment of the trial court though certain modifications were made in the decrees passed by that court. Appeals were taken to the High Court but the same were dismissed.

4. The only point which we are called upon to decide is whether before the fixation of a fair rent of any premises the municipality was bound to make assessment in the light of the provisions contained in the Rent Acts. A subsidiary question has also arisen whether the courts below were justified in referring to and passing the decrees keeping in view the Rent Acts which were in force prior to the enactment of the Andhra Pradesh Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act, 1960, hereinafter called the "Act". Now S. 82 (2) of the Municipalities Act, as stated before, makes provision for the fixation of annual value according to the rent at which lands and buildings may reasonably be expected to be let from month to month or from year to year less the specified deduction. The test essentially is what rent the premises can lawfully fetch if let out to a hypothetical tenant. The municipality is thus not free to assess any arbitrary annual value and has to look to and is bound by the fair or the standard rent which would be payable for a particular premises under the Rent Act in force during the year of assessment. In Corporation of Calcutta v. Smt. Padma Debi, (1962) 3 SCR 49 = (AIR 1962 SC 151), it was held that on a fair reading of the express provisions of S. 127 (a) of the Calcutta Municipal Act 1923 the annual rent could not be fixed higher than the standard rent under the Rent Control Act. There the Rent Control Act of 1950 came into force before the assessment was finally determined and it was observed that the corporation had no power to fix the annual valuation of the premises higher than the standard rent under that Act. The learned counsel for the appellant has not made any attempt nor indeed he could do so to contest the above view. What has been stressed by him is that S. 7 of the Act makes it clear that it is only after the fixation of the fair rent of a building that the landlord is debarred from claiming or receiving the payment of any amount in excess of such fair rent. It is urged that so long as the fair rent of a building or premises is not fixed the assessment of valuation by a municipality need not be limited or governed by the measure provided by the provisions of the Act for determination of fair rent. Logically such buildings or premises as are not let out to a tenant and are in the self occupation of the landlords would also fall within the same principle if no fair rent has even been fixed in respect of them.

5. We are unable to agree that on the language of S. 82 (2) of the Municipalities Act any distinction can be made between buildings the fair rent of which has been actually fixed by the Controller and those in respect of which no such rent has been fixed. It is perfectly clear that the landlord cannot lawfully expect to get more rent than the fair rent which is payable in accordance with the principles laid down in the Act. The assessment of valuation must take into account the measure of fair rent as determinable under the Act. It may be that where the Controller has not fixed the fair rent the municipal authorities will have to arrive at their own figure of fair rent but that can be done without any difficulty by keeping in view the principles laid down in S. 4 of the Act for determination of fair rent. This would of course be with regard to the assessment of valuation for the period subsequent to the coming into force of the Act. For the prior period it would be the rent Act in force during the year of assessment in the light of the provisions of which the figure of the fair rent would have to be determined and assessment made accordingly.

6. There is a good deal of confusion in the judgments of the trial court and the first appellate court with regard to the Rent Acts the provisions of which would have to be kept in view for the assessment of valuation for the purpose of S. 82 (2) of the Municipalities Act. The decrees which have been granted suffer from the same infirmity. It has been pointed out by the learned counsel for the respondents that according to the rules contained in the fourth schedule to the Municipalities Act the assessment book have to be revised once in every five years and the quinquennial assessment thus made enures for that period. But it appears from the rules that a procedure has been prescribed for changing the assessment whenever a case is made out for doing so. We are not concerned with the procedural difficulties which may be experienced; we have to declare what the law is and as appears to be well settled the assessment of valuation for the purpose of tax must be made in accordance with and in the light of the provisions of the Rent Act which would be in force during the period of assessment.

7. In the result the decrees which have been granted are hereby modified by declaring that the general revision made by the Guntur Municipality by increasing the rental valuation of houses and buildings beyond the fair rent determinable under the Rent Act in force for the period of assessment shall be illegal and ultra vires and a permanent injunction shall issue restraining the municipality from realizing any amount in excess of such tax which may be found due on the valuation fixed according to the principles laid down in our judgment. In view of the entire circumstances the parties are left to bear their own costs in this court.

Ordered accordingly.

dent.The following Judgment of the Court was delivered byBHARGAVA, J.:— Hira Lal appellant was tried by the Special Judge of Rohtak for an offence punishable under S. 165A of the Indian Penal Code on the charge that he offered to pay a sum of Rs. 1100/- to Kundan Lal Sahwney, Station House Officer, Police Station City Rohtak for allowing him and his associates to carry on Satta gambling. The prosecution case was that, on 9th July, 1967, at 9.45 a. m., the appellant approached Sub-Inspector Kundan Lal at the Police Station, told him that he was carrying on khaiwali Satta in association withMangtu, Omi and Jaggu and offered to pay him a sum of Rs. 1100/- per men-sem as illegal gratification, provided Kundan Lal promised to shield him and his associates in those gambling activities. Kundan Lal kept quiet and the appellant left promising to come to the police station at 3 p.m. to give the sum of Rs. 1100/-. According to Kundan Lal, he made an entry of this incident in the daily diary of the police station and also took into confidence the Superintendent of Police, Rohtak. Thereafter, he organised a trap party which included three persons, Amir Singh, Chaudhary Ram and Ram Rang. These members of the party sat in an adjoining room at about 2.45 p.m., while Kundan Lal
appellant came at 3 p.m. The appellant again told Kundan Lal that he would continue to pay Rs. 1100/- on the first of every month, while he and his associates should be allowed to indulge in Khaiwali Satta. Thereafter, the appellant took out a bundle of currency notes from his pocket and offered them to Kundan Lal. As this money was being passed on, the three persons associated in the trap, viz.,
Amir Singh, Chaudhary Ram and Ram Rang entered the office. In their presence, Kundan Lal counted the currency notes which were found to contain nine currency notes of the denomination of Rs. 100/- each and twenty currency notes of Rs. 10/- each, making up a total of Rs. 1100/-. Kundan Lal took the currency notes into possession and recorded a recovery report.
He detained Hiralal, while he recorded a First Information Report of this incident. Thereafter, Harinder Singh, Deputy Supdt. of Police, Rohtak, came to the police station on a telephone call at about 3.30 p.m. He then investigated the case which was sent to Court after investigation. The Special Judge accepted this case of the prosecution, convicted Hira Lal appellant for the offence under section 165A of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one year. He also ordered confiscation of the sum of Rs. 1100/- which, according to the prosecution, was given by him as bribe to Kundan Lal. On appeal, the High Court of Punjab and Haryana upheld the conviction, but reduced the substantive sentence of*(Cri. Appeal No. 198 of 1968, D/- 13-12-1968 — Punj. & Har.)

rigorous imprisonment from a period of one year to six months. The appellant then applied for a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution. The High Court granted the certificate on two grounds. One ground was that the appeal in this Court would involve consideration of the question whether Kundan Lal, Amir Singh and Ram Rang, who were the only witnesses examined, were accomplices and required corroboration by independent witnesses before their evidence could be believed. The second ground related to the question whether Kundan Lal, in taking the steps, after he was approached in the morning by the appellant, of laying the trap, carried on investigation which he was not authorised to do under section 5A of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, which required that the investigation must be by an officer of a rank not below that of a Deputy Superintendent of Police unless there was an order of the Magistrate of the First Class authorising him to investigate; and there was no such order of the Magistrate in this case. This appeal has thus been brought up to this Court on the basis of the certificate granted under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution. In this appeal, we had passed orders on November 17, 1970 allowing the appeal and acquitting the appellant after stating that the reasons will be given later. We now proceed to give the reasons.

2. In this case, the main point of law that was argued before us was that Kundan Lal, in taking the step of laying the trap in the afternoon, after he had been approached earlier in the morning and had been offered a bribe, did carry on investigation of the offence of offer of bribe which had been committed earlier in the morning. It was urged that this illegality in the investigation would totally vitiate the trial for that offence. It appears to us that it is not necessary in this case to go into this question of law which has been contested on behalf of the State Government on the ground that Kundan Lal was himself the person to whom the bribe was offered and, if he made arrangements merely to ensure that some persons were present when the bribe was given to him, this step taken by him cannot be said to be a part of the investigation. In our opinion, the circumstance that Kundan Lal, who was merely a junior officer of the status of a Sub-Inspector of Police, himself laid the trap itself makes the evidence of Kundan Lal and the witnesses procured by him unreliable.

3. Kundan Lal, according to his own version, was approached by the appellant in his office who came and immediately made the offer of bribe at 9.45 a.m. on the 9th July, 1967. It appears to us that no person like the appellant could have dared to approach Kundan Lal in this manner at the Police Station itself, unless he had some belief that Kundan Lal was a person who would be amenable to such an offer. In case he had any doubt that Kundan Lal would refuse the offer, he would not have taken the courage to go to the Police Station itself for this purpose. Then, it is significant that, according to Kundan Lal, when the offer was made to him, he neither accepted nor refused it and the appellant left the office promising to come at 3 p.m. with the money. When Kundan Lal gave no reply at all to him, the appellant could not be expected to come again and try to thrust the money on Kundan Lal, because even a person with some common-sense would be afraid that subsequent offer may be witnessed by other persons and he might thus render himself liable to prosecution. It might have been different if Kundan Lal had accepted the offer in the morning. When Kundan Lal remained silent, it seems to us highly improbable that the appellant would go and actually offer money in the office at the Police Station with all the attendant risks.

4. Kundan Lal was himself a participant in the offence as the offer was made to him and he accepted the offer though, according to him, it was with the object of working out a case against the appellant of offering a bribe. He was, therefore, an interested witness. The other two witnesses examined are Amir Singh and Ram Rang. Amir Singh, on his own admission, has appeared as a prosecution witness four or five times in police cases pertaining to this police station. The evidence of such a witness can hardly carry any value in Court. The other witness Ram Rang, no doubt, was a Municipal Commissioner; but it is significant that, while Amir Singh, according to his evidence, became a witness as he happened to come to the police station for a purpose of his own, Ram Rang was specially sent for by Kundan Lal. The fact that Kundan Lal particularly chose Ram Rang as the person to be called to be a witness itself makes the evidence of Ram Rang of doubtful value.

5. It is further to be noted in this connection that, according to the defence, the appellant, who had earlier been convicted for carrying on gambling activities, was stopped by a constable when he had gone to catch a bus in the company of one Bale Ram carrying a sum of Rs. 1510/- with him. He was told that he was wanted by the Station House Officer. When he came to the Police Station accompanied by Bale Ram, Kundan Lal, Station House Officer, was standing in the verandah, and the appellant's associates Omi and Jaggu were also there. Kundan Lal told him that he was indulging in Khaiwali Satta and, when the appellant repelled the assertion, Kundan Lal searched his person and recovered the entire sum of Rs. 1510/-. The appellant was then made to sit at the Police Station and, later on, this case was foisted on him by Kundan Lal. It is obvious that, according to the appellant's version, Kundan Lal stood to gain considerably if he could secure the conviction of the appellant for the offence of offering a bribe. Kundan Lal would not only get the credit for working out such a case, but, if the defence version is true, he could also pocket a sum of Rs. 410/-, while producing Rs. 1100/- out of the money recovered from the appellant's possession as representing the amount of bribe offered to him. It is true that the evidence of defence witnesses, who came to prove this version, has been concurrently disbelieved by the Special Judge and the High Court; but the appellant got an opportunity to put forward such a version, even if it is untrue, merely because Kundan Lal took the extraordinary step of laying the trap himself, instead of the trap being arranged by some senior officers.

6. According to Kundan Lal, he took the Superintendent of Police into confidence before the trap was actually laid and after he had been approached by the appellant in the morning. The Supdt. of Police has not been examined to prove that such information was conveyed to him before 3 p.m. On the other hand, there appear to be circumstances which indicate that no such information could have been conveyed to the Supdt. of Police. According to Kundan Lal, the Deputy Supdt. of Police, Harinder Singh, was informed by telephone after the money had been recovered by him at 3 p.m. and, thereafter, he came to the Police Station to investigate the case at 3.20 p.m. On the other hand, according to Harinder Singh himself, he came to the Police Station under the instructions of the Superintendent of Police. He does not bear out the statement of Kundan Lal that he came on information given by Kundan Lal on the telephone. His statement that he came under the instructions of the Supdt. of Police clearly leads to the inference that the Supdt. of Police must also have received information after 3 p.m. and that is why instructions were issued at that time and not earlier. No explanation is forthcoming why the Supdt. of Police did not send the Deputy Supdt. of Police or some other senior officer for the trap in case he did receive information after the morning offer and before the money was actually paid at 3 p.m. This circumstance throws very considerable doubt on the evidence of Kundan Lal and the witnesses procured by him.

7. In these circumstances, we consider that no conviction could be safely based on the evidence of Kundan Lal and his witnesses, Amir Singh and Ram Rang. That is why we allowed the appeal acquitting the appellant.

Appeal allowed.

AIR 1971 SUPREME COURT 359
(V 58 C 86)

(From: Assam and Nagaland)*

J. M. SHELAT, C. A. VAIDIALINGAM AND P. JAGANMOHAN REDDY, JJ.

Paresh Chandra Nandi, Appellant v. Controller of Stores, N. F. Railway, Pandu and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 191 of 1967, D/- 7-12-1970.

Civil Services — Railway Fundamental Rules, Rules 2011, 2007 and 2010 — Transfer of permanent employee and consequent transfer of his lien cannot be challenged when transfer is to a permanent post in the same cadre not carrying less pay, even if such transfer materially affects chances for promotion. (Paras 11 & 12)

Mr. A. K. Nag, Advocate, for Appellant; Dr. V. A. Seyid Muhammad, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. B. K. P. Sinha, Advocate, with him), for Respondents Nos. 1 to 3 and 9.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by SHELAT, J.: This appeal is founded on a certificate granted by the High Court of Assam and Nagaland against its order of dismissal of the writ petition filed by the appellant.

2. The appellant joined service in the North-East Frontier Railway as a Depot clerk in 1942 and was confirmed and made permanent in that post on August 15, 1947. He was promoted to the post of a Ward Keeper on June 4, 1949 in the Depot Wing of the Controller of Stores.

3. During the last World War, the said Railway organised temporarily a Food Supply Organisation wherein a number of persons, including respondents 4 to 8, were appointed. Respondent 4 was appointed as a salesman in the said organisation in 1944 and was confirmed with effect from August 15, 1947 under the Deputy Traffic Superintendent, Lumding. Respondent 5 was appointed a clerk in 1943 and was confirmed in the Head Office Wing of the Controller of Stores Department in 1944. Respondent 6 was appointed in 1943 and was confirmed in his post under the Deputy Traffic Superintendent, Lumding with effect from August 15, 1947. Respondent 7 was appointed first as a salesman in 1943, and then as a clerk in 1944 in that organisation and was confirmed with effect from August 15, 1947. Respondent 8 was appointed a Ward Keeper in 1943 and was confirmed as ticket-collector under the Deputy Traffic Superintendent, Lumding with effect from August 15, 1947. Thus, both the appellant and respondents 4 to 8 were confirmed in their respective posts on the same day, i.e., August 15, 1947.

4. On termination of the War, the Food Supply Organisation was wound up. The Railway Board, thereupon, decided that the temporary staff employed in that organisation should be absorbed in the other departments and should be confirmed in the same manner as the temporary staff initially recruited in the other departments. With a view to implement this policy directions were issued to keep unfilled 10 per cent of the vacancies in permanent posts and accommodate in such vacancies the staff of the said organisation. Accordingly, the members of the staff of the said organisation were gradually absorbed in the various departments. In January 1951, the then Chief Administrative Officer issued a list showing the absorption of the staff of the said organisation against the 10 per cent reservation in the permanent posts in the different departments and their confirmation in such posts. Respondents 4 to 7 were shown in the said list in the category and scale of TYC/55-130 and respondent 8 as ticket collector with effect from August 15, 1947 and were allotted to the office of the Deputy Traffic Superintendent, Lumding. They, therefore, acquired their lien on the respective posts assigned to them and declared against their names in the said list.

5. The Controller of Stores, by a Memorandum dated May 26, 1960, transferred the lien of respondents 4 to 8 to the Stores Department wherein the appellant, as aforesaid, was a permanent time-keeper, from the respective posts to which they were assigned with effect from August 15, 1947 against the posts of Depot Clerks. The Memorandum also declared that the seniority of respondents 4 to 8 should be given effect to as from August 15, 1947 in the Stores Department.

6. The grievance of the appellant was that by bringing in respondents 4 to 8 in the Stores Department and transferring their lien in the Stores Department and calculating their seniority with effect from August 15, 1947, his chances for promotion were materially affected. His case was that the two wings, namely, the Depot Wing and the Head Office Wing, being separate and having separate cadres, and respondents 4 to 7 having been absorbed as permanent employees in the Head Office Wing with effect from August 15, 1947, their liens could not be validly transferred. This was particularly so, as, according to him, there were no permanent vacancies in the Stores Department over which their liens could be transferred. According to him, therefore, the transfer effected under the said memorandum was invalid and inoperative.

7. Having unsuccessfully exhausted his departmental remedies through representations, the appellant filed the writ petition in the High Court challenging the validity of the said memorandum and, as aforesaid, the High Court dismissed the writ petition. Hence this appeal.

8. In our view, the High Court rightly rejected the appellant's challenge to the validity of the said memorandum as he was not able to show that the said memorandum was in any manner contrary to the statutory rules governing the employment of the railway employees.

9. Rule 2003 of the Railway Fundamental Rules defines in cls. 3 and 14 the terms 'cadre' and 'lien'. 'Lien', as defined in cl. 14 means the title of a railway employee to hold substantively a permanent post to which he has been permanently appointed. According to this definition, therefore, the appellant and respondents 4 to 8 were entitled to, with effect from August 15, 1947 (when all of them were made permanent), a lien on the respective posts to which, as from that day, they were confirmed and made permanent. So far as respondents 4 to 8 were concerned, this was done, as explained earlier, as a result of the closure of the Food Supply Organisation which necessitated the absorption of those employed therein during the War period in the different departments of the railways in Assam. Accordingly, the authorities had published the said list in 1951 showing how and where the absorbed staff was fixed up in accordance with the reservation of 10 per cent vacancies in the various departments.

10. The question is, could the railway authorities, under the rules, transfer or not any one or more of the said staff so absorbed from the posts where they were allotted to any other department or departments where such transfer or transfers became administratively necessary. We may note that the transfer of lien enjoyed by respondents 4 to 8 in the Head Office was not a mere paper transfer, for, respondents 4 to 8 were actually transferred from the Head Office Wing to the Stores Department. Since they were permanent employees, enjoying liens in their respective posts to which they were confirmed since August 15, 1947, ordinarily their conditions of service, e.g., salary and seniority, could not be affected to their prejudice as a result of their transfer to any other department or wing. Once, therefore, they were transferred from one permanent post to another permanent post they would be entitled to hold substantively the permanent posts to which they were transferred bringing along with them the seniority which they had in the posts from which they were transferred. If that were not so, the result of a transfer from one post to another would mean that a transferred employee would have to start de novo, from a scratch and would consequently stand last in the department to which he is transferred. In actual practice, therefore, no transfer can be effected from one department to another without materially affecting the chances of promotion of such an employee. As we shall presently show, the rules do not contemplate such a position.

11. Rule 2007 provides that unless the lien of a permanent employee is suspended under R. 2008 or transferred under R. 2010, a railway servant holding substantively a permanent post retains a lien on that post while performing the duties of that post, or while on foreign service or holding a temporary post or officiating in another post, or during joining time or transfer to another post, or while on leave, or lastly, while under suspension. Under R. 2010, the power to transfer lien is confined to any other permanent post in the same cadre. But R. 2010 is subject to the provisions of R. 2011 which confers power to transfer a railway servant from one post to another post. Rule 2011 reads as follows:

"Transfer of Railway servant:

(a) A competent authority may transfer a railway servant from one post to another; provided that, except —

(1) on account of inefficiency or misbehaviour; or

(2) on his written request, a railway servant shall not be transferred substantively to, or, except in a case covered by Rule 2038, appointed to officiate in a post carrying less pay than the pay of the permanent post on which he holds a lien and his lien has not been suspended under Rule 2003." Thus, the only limitation to the power conferred on the competent authority to transfer a railway servant from one post to another is that such transfer cannot be to a post carrying less pay than the pay of the post on which the transferred employee had a lien.

12. Two things are thus clear, (1) that the competent authority has the power to transfer a railway employee even though he holds a permanent post from one such post to another under R. 2011, and (2) that once such an employee is transferred from one permanent post to another permanent post, he is entitled to a lien in respect of that another post to which he is permanently posted as a result of the transfer. This is the effect of R. 2007. That being so, the appellant could not possibly contend that the transfers of respondents 4 to 8 to the Stores Department were contrary to the Fundamental Rules or that the transfer of their liens from the posts to which they were posted in 1947 to the posts in the Stores Department was in any manner contrary to the rules.

13. The other point raised by the appellant was also without substance as he failed to show before the High Court that these transfers were made without there being vacancies in the respective posts to which respondents 4 to 8 were transferred. That being the position, the High Court was right in dismissing the appellant's writ petition.

14. The appeal must consequently fail and is dismissed, but in the circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mohammad Mustafa, Appellant
v. Sri Abu Bakar and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 2301 of 1966, D/-

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), Order 20
Rule 4 — Contents of judgment —

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), Order 6
Rule 17 — Application for amendment by defendant appellant in appeal arising

— On appeal to Supreme Court application

— Constitution of India, Article 136.

In appeal before High Court arising from suit for partition in a Muslim family, the defendant appellant sought amendment of written statement by addition of plea that certain items of properties of his deceased father were joint properties of parties to suit. His written statement did contain the plea that the suit was bad for partial partition but no issue was framed by trial court. High Court rejected the application for amendment. While dismissing the appeal, the High Court arrived at specific conclusion that the items of properties as mentioned in application for amendment belonged to father of defendant. Though these properties could be considered as joint properties, the High Court refused to grant relief in absence of plea thereof. High Court rejected the plea of suit being bad for partial partition as there was no issue about that plea. On appeal to Supreme Court by special leave:

Held (1) that the High Court took a highly technical view of the matter. On facts and circumstances of the case, it should have allowed the application for amendment. (Para 7)

And (2) that in the interests of justice the Supreme Court allowed the application for amendment and remanded the case to trial court.

(Para 7)

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

HEGDE, J.:— This is a defendant's appeal by special leave from a suit for partition in a Muslim family. The appellant was the first defendant in that suit. The first respondent brought the suit for partition claiming 14/88 share in the properties detailed in the plaint schedules. The parties to the suit are the heirs of one Sanaullah. The family genealogy is given in the plaint. The correctness of that genealogy is not disputed. It was alleged in the plaint that the properties detailed in the plaint schedules are the joint properties of the parties to the suit. The appellant contested the suit. He contended that his father Sanaullah had three pharmacies; sometime before his death he gifted to each one of his three sons one pharmacy. The pharmacy which was originally known as Darul Adviya was gifted to him; therefore he is the exclusive owner of that pharmacy. He further contended that some of the other items shown in the plaint schedules are his self-acquisitions and hence they are not partible. But it may be noted that the appellant did not take the alternative plea that in the event the court holding that the gift pleaded by him is not true, the other two pharmacies should be considered as joint properties. But he did take a bald plea that the suit was bad for partial partition. On the basis of the pleadings the trial court framed several issues. The only issue that is relevant for our present purpose is issue No. 1 namely:

"Whether the concern known as Hind C. C. Works (formerly known as Darul Adviya) was the joint property of the parties? If so, what is the plaintiff's share?"

2. No issue was struck in respect of the appellant's plea that the suit was bad for being one for partial partition.

3. The trial court came to the conclusion that the properties shown in List A-1, A-2 and B are joint properties and hence liable to be partitioned. It gave the plaintiff 14/88 share in the same. It held that the properties mentioned in C-1, C-2, D-1 and F are individual properties of the appellant.

4. Both the parties appealed to the High Court as against the decree of the trial court. During the pendency of the appeal, the appellant applied to the High Court on April 1, 1966 to permit him to amend his written statement and take the plea that the two pharmacies alleged to have been gifted to the other sons of Sanaullah should also be considered as joint properties. The High Court rejected that application by its order dated April 5, 1966.

5. The High Court by its judgment dated April 7, 1966 dismissed the appeal of the appellant, 1st defendant, but partly allowed the cross-appeal of the respondent. It held that the properties mentioned in List C-1, C-2, D-1 and F are also joint properties. In the course of its judgment it observed:

"The true position appears to be this: Sanaullah had three pharmacies. He was getting old. He placed the three pharmacies in charge of his three sons for purposes of management. There was no gift as alleged by the appellant. Management of three pharmacies by the three sons separately continued after Sanaullah's death. As each brother was in charge of one pharmacy, profits were not distributed. This arrangement continued upto the date of the suit." This finding having been reached without proper pleadings and necessary issues the same cannot bind any of the parties to the suit though it does indicate the serious injustice that is likely to happen to the appellant because of his defective pleadings.

6. Dealing with the contention of the appellant that the suit was bad for being one for partial partition, the court rejected that contention on the ground that the trial court did not strike any issue in respect of that plea though that plea was taken both in the written statement as well as in the appeal memo. As Mst. Rukaia Bibi, wife of Sanaullah (Respondent No. 3 in the appeal) had died during the pendency of the appeal, the High Court enhanced the share of the plaintiff to 16-1/5 share.

7. Both the trial court as well as the High Court have come to the conclusion that the gift pleaded by the appellant is not true. In fact the High Court has specifically come to the conclusion that all the three Pharmacies referred to in the appellant's written statement belonged to Sanaullah. If that conclusion is correct those pharmacies should also be considered as joint properties of the parties to the suit. But the High Court refused to grant any relief in respect of those items of properties on the sole ground that the appellant did not take the plea that those items of properties are joint properties of the parties to the suit. As seen earlier it rejected the appellant's contention that the suit is bad for partial partition on the ground that no issue had been framed as regards that plea. In our opinion the High Court took a highly technical view of the matter. On the facts and circumstances of this case, the High Court should have allowed the amendment application moved by the appellant on April 1, 1963. We think that in the interest of justice, we should now allow that application and permit the appellant to amend his written statement. We order accordingly. As a result of this decision of ours it is now necessary to set aside the judgment and decree of the High Court as well as of the trial court and remand the case to the trial court. We direct the trial court to permit the defendant to carry out the necessary amendments in his written statement, permit the respondents to file their rejoinders, raise proper issues on the new pleadings, give parties an opportunity to adduce evidence on the newly raised issues and decide the case on merits. But the decision of the trial court as modified by the High Court regarding the items of property already held to be joint property of the parties is not to be reopened. That decision is final. The further trial will be confined to the new issues that may be raised on the basis of the pleas put forward in the amendment application. The case is remanded only for that purpose. The trial court shall now proceed to hear the case expeditiously and pass a fresh preliminary decree.

8. So far as the costs are concerned, under the circumstances of the case we direct that the appellant do bear his own costs up till this stage in all the courts. The costs of the plaintiff-1st respondent in all the courts up till this stage shall come out of the estate. The other respondents shall bear their own costs throughout.

9. Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 1881 of 1970 is dismissed — no costs.

Order accordingly.

Evidence Act (1872), Section 9 — Absence of test identification is not fatal in all cases — In case of doubt however identification parade should be held.

Failure to hold test identification of accused is not fatal in all cases. If the accused is well known to prosecution witnesses it would be waste of time to put him up for identification. If, however, there is any doubt in the matter the prosecution should hold identification parade. Where during the course of investigation of a murder case the accused files an application for holding an identification parade on allegation that the accused is not known to eye-witnesses and that application is rejected on the ground that charge-sheet against accused has been filed and the accused has been named by eye-witnesses, but during the course of the trial the allegation of the accused is found to be true, then the rejection of the application on aforesaid ground is not valid and unless there is some other evidence

*(Criminal Appeal 1037 of 1969 and Referred No. 82 of 1969, D/- 26-9-1969—All.)

the trial will be liable to be vitiated. The fact that there is no provision in Criminal P. C. enabling accused to insist on identification parade is not material. (On facts held that trial is not vitiated by denial of test identification to accused). (Paras 18, 20, 22)

SIKRI, J.:— This appeal by special leave is directed against the judgment of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad confirming conviction of the two appellants by the Sessions Judge Mainpuri, under Section 302/34 of the Indian Penal Code. Appellant Jadunath Singh was sentenced to death by the Sessions Judge and appellant Girand Singh was sentenced to undergo imprisonment for life.

2. In order to appreciate the points raised before us by the learned counsel for the appellant it is necessary to state a few facts. It is alleged against the appellants that on February 26, 1968 at about 7.30 a. m., in furtherance of their common intention, they murdered one Ram Swarup Pandey by repeatedly stabbing him to death, when he was passing on the Grand Trunk Road in the town of Bewar to catch a truck. As many as 34 injuries were found on the deceased at the post-mortem conducted on his body on the same day at about 3 p. m.

3. The prosecution case in brief is as follows. It is common ground that there was great enmity between the deceased and Laturi Ahir and his sons, the two appellants. The deceased apprehended danger to his life from them, and on November 23, 1967, he sent an application to the Superintendent of Police, Mainpuri, alleging that Laturi and his son, Jadunath, Brahma, Panna Lal and Anokhey, etc. were terrorising the weaker and poorer sections of the village community and declaring openly that they would kill the deceased to silence his opposition forever. He prayed that an enquiry may be made and suitable action taken against them. On February 25, 1968 the deceased came to Bewar in the evening to meet the A. D. O. in connection with an enquiry on a complaint made against Munshi Lal Pradhan of the village. He could not meet the A. D. O. as he was out of Station. He stayed during the night with Prem Narain, P. W. 1 who happened to be a brother-in-law of his cousin Gulati Ram. According to Prem Narain, both of them got up in the morning at 6.45 a. m. and since it was Shivaratri that day the deceased did not take any food and they left for the bus-stand at Bewar. When they reached the bus-stand at about 7.10 a.m. they found that the bus for Etah via Sultanganj had already left. The next bus was due to go at 9.30 a. m. but, as the deceased thought that he could get a seat in some truck near the Prem Hotel and the Octroi Barrier, they left the bus-stand for the Octroi Barrier. When they reached the house of Kotwal Singh on the way, both the accused attacked the deceased with chhuri and knife, respectively; Jadunath had the chhuri and Girand Singh had the knife. Both the deceased and Prem Narain were unarmed. On hearing the cries of the deceased Prem Narain asked the appellants why they were attacking the deceased. Then Girand Singh, appellant, advanced towards him and gave a knife cut at his right wrist. On the deceased falling down both accused persons attacked him with their respective weapons. On his raising the alarm Mahesh Chandra and Dwarka Prasad who were coming along the same road came and they shouted at the appellants. On hearing their shouts the accused ran away. The deceased died on the spot.

4. The First Information Report was lodged at 8 a. m., the Police Station being only two furlongs from the scene of occurrence. In the First Information Report, in the second column, under the heading "Name and residence of accused", it was stated as follows:

"1. Jadu Nath Singh, father's name not known and

2. Girand Singh father's name not known. Ahirs by caste residents of Garhia Kishunpur P. S. Bewar, Distt. Mainpuri."

The accused surrendered on March 12, 1968, and it appears that an application was filed by the advocate on their behalf that they be kept ba pardah as they might claim identification. Another application was put in on March 25, 1968, in which it was stated that the witnesses other than Prem Narain were strangers and they applied that there should be an identification parade. On April 19, 1968 the then public prosecutor submitted a report to the Additional District Magistrate as under:

"Accused Jadu Nath Singh and Girand Singh in case Cr. No. 24 under Section 302, I. P. C. P. S. Bewar have applied for identification, vide application herewith attached. It may be submitted that they are named in the F. I. R. and charge-sheet against them has also been received. The applications are moved to delay this case. Submitted for n. a."

The Additional District Magistrate (Judicial) passed the following order on the application, on April 20, 1968:

"As charge-sheet has already been received and the accused have been named by P. Ws. there appears to be no justification for ordering test identification. Accused be informed accordingly. The jail authorities be informed not to keep them ba Pardah."

5. We have set out these facts in detail because as will presently appear, one of the points raised by the learned counsel is that failure to put up the accused for identification either vitiated the trial or, in any case, rendered the evidence of P. W. 2, Mahesh Chandra, and P. W. 3, Dwarka Prasad, useless.

6. We may here notice that portion of the evidence of Dr. N. K. Mital, who conducted the post-mortem examination and on which one other point is sought to be founded. He found that the stomach was empty and the small intestines were half full and the large intestines were also half full. In cross-examination he stated that "since the stomach was empty, the deceased should have taken his last meal about 4 to 6 hours before the infliction of the injuries." He was asked: "The evidence is that the deceased took puries and vegetable at 8 p.m. on 25-2-68; and according to the case for the prosecution his murder took place at 7.30 a. m. on 26-2-68. At the time of post mortem the stomach was found empty and both the small and large intestines were found half full. Does it not indicate that in all likelihood the man was murdered between 3 and 4 a.m.?" To this question Dr. Mital answered:

"No. It is not an indication of this fact. After finishing his meal at about 8 or 8.30 p. m. on 25-2-68 the stomach could have got empty by 2 or 2.30 a.m. The digested food material should have come in the small intestine by about 2 or 2.30 a.m. Complete digestion takes place in the small intestine. . . And if he had answered the call of nature the preceding evening fully and completely, even then the small and large intestines might be half full and stomach empty if he had taken puries with vegetable at 8 p.m. on 25-2-68."

7. The learned Sessions Judge believed the evidence of Prem Narain, corroborated as it was by the injuries sustained by him in the course of the occurrence at the hands of one of the assailants, namely, Girand Singh. He also believed the evidence of Mahesh Chandra, P.W. 2, and Dwarka Prasad, P.W. 3. He relied on the fact that the appellants had absconded immediately after the crime and had only appeared before the Court as late as March 12, 1968, after proceedings under Sections 87 and 88 of the Code of Criminal Procedure had been taken against them. Regarding the claim of the appellants for identification the learned Sessions Judge observed that during the course of investigation both Mahesh Chandra and Dwarka Prasad had named the accused persons, and it would indeed have been surprising if the Additional District Magistrate (Judicial) had directed the accused to be paraded at a test identification parade in the jail. He observed that the evidence indicated that the accused persons were not strangers even to Mahesh Chandra and Dwarka Prasad at the time of the occurrence. Mahesh Chandra had stated in his evidence that he had known the accused persons for about 4 years and that they were living at village Garhiya lying at a distance of three furlongs from Bewar, and that Girand Singh was reading at the Amar Shaheed Inter College, Bewar. Dwarka Prasad had stated that he had seen Girand visiting Bewar before that day. He had also seen Jadu Nath Singh at Bewar but only once or twice before that. For all these reasons the learned Sessions Judge held that the applications claiming identification were not bona fide and were intended to protract the proceedings, and accordingly he was unable to draw any adverse inference against the prosecution for the omission to parade the accused persons at a test identification parade in the jail.

8. The High Court believed the three eye-witnesses, Prem Narain, Mahesh Chandra and Dwarka Prasad. The High Court held that "Mahesh and Dwarka Prasad are wholly independent witnesses having no affinity with the deceased and entertaining no animosity towards the appellants." The High Court observed that these witnesses had claimed to have known the appellants for the last six or seven years as they had been frequently visiting the town of Bewar, and the appellant, Girand Singh, was a student in a college at Bewar.

9. The learned counsel for the appellants raised two principal points before us:

(1) Since the accused were denied identification the trial was vitiated;

(2) The medical evidence is in conflict with the prosecution case about the time of the assault.

10. The learned counsel further urged that the number and nature of injuries belie the prosecution story, and that the application by the deceased to the Superintendent of Police was nothing but a neshbandhi. He urged that the eye-witnesses were not reliable and the courts below had missed the points that the appellants could not have anticipated that the deceased would be at this particular spot at that time.

11. The learned counsel relied on the following observations of the Lahore High Court in Sajjan Singh v. Emperor, AIR 1945 Lah 48 at p. 50.

"If an accused person is already well known to the witnesses, an identification parade would of course, be only a waste of time. If however, the witnesses claim to have known the accused previously, while the accused himself denies this, it is difficult to see how the claim made by the witnesses can be used as a reason for refusing to allow their claim to be put to the only practical test. Even if the denial of the accused is false, no harm is done, and the value of the evidence given by the witnesses may be increased. It is true that it is by no means uncommon for persons who have been absconding for a long time to claim an identification parade in the hope that their appearance may have changed sufficiently for them to escape recognition. Even so, this is not in itself a good ground for refusing to allow any sort of test to be carried out. It may be that the witnesses may not be able to identify a person whom they know by sight owing to some change of appearance or even to weakness of memory, but this is only one of the facts along with many others, such as the length of time that has elapsed, which will have to be taken into consideration in determining whether the witnesses are telling the truth or not."

12. State of U. P. v. Jagnoo, AIR 1968 All 333, refers to AIR 1945 Lah 48 with approval.

13. In re Sangiah, AIR 1948 Mad 113 the decision of the Lahore High Court in AIR 1945 Lah 48 was dissented from. Rajamannar, J., observed:

"I am unable to find any provision in the Code which entitles an accused to demand that an identification parade should be held at or before the enquiry or the trial. An identification parade belongs to the stage of investigation by the Police. The question whether a witness has or has not identified the accused during the investigation is not one which is in itself relevant at the trial. The actual evidence regarding identification is that which is given by the witness in Court. The fact that a particular witness has been able to identify the accused at an identification parade is only a circumstance corroborative of the identification in Court. If a witness has not identified the accused at a parade or otherwise during the investigation the fact may be relied on by the accused, but I find nothing in the provisions of the Code which confers a right on the accused to demand that the investigation should be conducted in a particular way."

14. In Parkash Chand Scgani v. State of Rajasthan, an unreported decision of this Court Criminal Appeal No. 92 of 1956, D/- 15-1-1957 (SC) in connection with the point regarding identification it was observed:

"Much is sought to be made out of the fact that no identification parade was held at the earliest opportunity in order to find out whether P.W. 7 Shiv Lal could have identified the appellant as the person who was at the wheel of the car and drove it and reliance is placed upon Awadh Singh v. State, AIR 1954 Pat 483, Pravash Kumar Bose v. The King, AIR 1951 Cal 475 and also Phipson on the Law of Evidence, 9th Ed., p. 415 to justify the contention that in criminal cases it is not sufficient to identify the prisoner in the dock but the police should have held an identification parade at the earliest possible opportunity to show that the accused person had been connected with the crime. It is also the defence case that Shiv Lal did not know the appellant. But on a reading of the evidence of P.W. 7 it seems to us clear that Shiv Lal knew the appellant by sight. Though he made a mistake about his name by referring to him as Kailash Chandra, it was within the knowledge of Shiv Lal that the appellant was a brother of Manak Chand and he identified him as such. These circumstances are quite enough to show that the absence of the identification parade would not vitiate the evidence. A person, who is well known by sight as the brother of Manak Chand, even before the commission of the occurrence, need not be put before an identification parade in order to be marked out. We do not think that there is any justification for the contention that the absence of the identification parade or a mistake made as to his name, would be necessarily fatal to the prosecution case in the circumstances."

15. In AIR 1954 Pat 483 it was held that the accused person may or may not have legal right to claim for test identification and the holding of test identification may or may not be a rule of law, but it is a rule of prudence. Test identification parade should be held especially when the accused persons definitely assert that they were unknown to the prosecution witnesses either by name or by face and they requested the authorities concerned to have the test identification parade held."

16. In AIR 1951 Cal 475, a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court (Harries C. J. & Das Gupta, J.) held:

"The fact that the witnesses have identified in Court the accused is of very little consequence in a prosecution under S. 384, Penal Code, when none of the witnesses knew the accused from before. . . the corroborative evidence which one is entitled to expect in cases of this nature is the evidence of the witnesses having pointed the accused whom they identified in Court from the midst of other persons with whom they were mixed up at a test identification parade. The evidence of their having identified such persons at a test identification parade has no substantive value, but is very important corroboration of their evidence in Court."

17. In Kanta Prasad v. Delhi Administration, 1958 SCR 1218 at p. 1221 = (AIR 1958 SC 350 at p. 351), a point was made regarding non-holding of test identification parade by the police and this Court observed:

"As for the test identification parade, it is true that no test identification parade was held. The appellants were known to the police officials who had deposed against the appellants and the only persons who did not know them before were the persons who gave evidence of association, to which the High Court did not attach much importance. It would no doubt have been prudent to hold a test identification parade with respect to witnesses who did not know the accused before the occurrence, but failure to hold such a parade would not make inadmissible the evidence of identification in court. The weight to be attached to such identification would be a matter for the courts of fact and it is not for this court to reassess the evidence unless exceptional grounds were established necessitating such a course."

18. It seems to us that it has been clearly laid down by this Court in Criminal Appeal No. 92 of 1956, D/-15-1-1957 (SC) that the absence of test identification in all cases is not fatal and if the accused person is well-known by sight it would be waste of time to put him up for identification. Of course if the prosecution fails to hold an identification on the plea that the witnesses already knew the accused well and it transpires in the course of the trial that the witnesses did not know the accused previously, the prosecution would run the risk of losing its case. It seems to us that if there is any doubt in the matter the prosecution should hold an identification parade specially if an accused says that the alleged eye-witnesses did not know him previously. It may be that there is no express provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure enabling an accused to insist on an identification parade but if the accused does make an application and that application is turned down and it transpires during the course of the trial that the witnesses did not know the accused previously, as pointed out above the prosecution will, unless there is some other evidence, run the risk of losing the case on this point.

19. In the present case, however, it is clear that P.W. Mahesh Chandra knew the accused persons for about four years for he said:

"I know the accused persons, Jadunath Singh and Girand Singh for about 4 years. They live at village Garhiya lying at a distance of three furlongs from Bewar. Girand Singh is reading at the Amar Shaheed Inter College, Bewar."

No cross-examination was directed on this point. P.W. 3, Dwarika Prasad, stated:

"I had seen Girand visiting Bewar before that but I had seen Jadunath at Bewar only once or twice before that day. Identifies both the accused persons in the dock. Lays hand correctly on Jadunath; and also lays hands correctly on Girand in the dock."

In cross-examination he stated:

"I had seen Jadunath accused at Bewar at the shop of one Chhaku once or twice before the occurrence. I had seen him two or 2½ years back."

20. It seems to us that the reason given by the Public Prosecutor in the report and the reason given by the Additional District Magistrate (Judicial) in the order directing that identification requested for be not held were not valid. The fact that a charge-sheet had been received and the accused had been named by P.Ws. was no justification for not having ordered the test identification. But on the facts of this case it is clear that P.W. 2 at least knew the accused from before. As regards P.W. 3, although he claims to have known the accused, it is clear that his knowledge of the accused was very scant and if it had not been for the evidence of P.W. 2 we would not have placed reliance on the evidence of P.W. 3 in view of the fact that the police did not ask him to identify the appellant.

21. It is stated in Phipson on the Law of Evidence, 9th Ed., p. 415, as follows:

"In criminal cases it is improper to identify the accused only when in the dock; the police should place him, beforehand, with others, and ask the witness to pick him out. Nor should the witness be guided in any way, nor asked 'Is that the man?'". We consider that the same is the law in India, if the identity is in doubt.

22. Accordingly on the facts of this case we are of the opinion that the trial was not vitiated because the accused persons were denied identification.

23. Regarding the second point, we have already extracted the evidence of the doctor, and it is quite clear to us that the evidence is not in conflict with the prosecution case. If the occurrence took place at about 7.30 a.m. and the deceased had not taken any food in the morning, his stomach would still be empty at 7.30 a.m. If anything the medical evidence destroys the case of the defence that the murder took place at about 3 in the morning. We are unable to think that the deceased would leave with Prem Narain at 3 a.m. to catch a bus which was supposed to leave at about 7 a.m.

24. This appeal is by special leave and this court does not re-appreciate the evidence. The other points raised by the learned counsel are of that nature and at any rate there is no substance in those points.

25. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

(A) Punjab Pre-emption Act (1 of 1913), Section 15 (1) (a) Fourthly (as amended by Act 10 of 1960) — Right of pre-emption of tenant — Right of tenancy must be subsisting at time of institution of suit for pre-emption as also at time of passing of decree by trial Court. A pre-emptor in order to succeed must have a right to pre-empt not only at the time of sale of the lands by the landlord but also at the time of the institution of the suit for pre-emption and also at the time of passing of the decree in the suit by the trial Court. In other words his tenancy must remain intact and he must hold the land in his capacity as a tenant till the date of the decree. (1970) 72 Pun LR 325 and 1967-69 Pun LR 414, Overruled; R. S. A. his status of a tenant. He then does not satisfy the first requirement of Section 15 (1) (a) Fourthly, that he is a tenant who holds the land. In that situation he cannot succeed in a pre-emption suit if the decree for eviction has been passed after the sale but before the institution of the suit or during its pendency and before the date of decree. The Judgment of the Court was delivered by GROVER, J. — This is an appeal by special leave from a judgment of the Punjab and Haryana High Court.

2. In December 1966 Labhu Ram who was the owner of the land in dispute sold the same in two lots to Bhagwan Das (deceased) now represented by his legal representatives and others. The lands mentioned in cls. (a) and (b) of the title of the plaint in the suit out of which the present appeal has arisen were sold for Rs. 20,000 and Rs. 1,000/- respectively. The respondent Chet Ram was a tenant-at will of the lands covered by the sales. Bhagwan Das and others filed a suit against Chet Ram in the revenue Court for ejectment under Section 14-A (i) read with Section 9 (1) of the Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act 1953 which was decreed on July 31, 1967. On August 31, 1968, Bhagwan Das and others entered into possession of the aforesaid lands after evicting Chet Ram by virtue of the decree for eviction obtained against him.

3. After his eviction Chet Ram the present respondent filed a suit for possession of the lands which were the subject matter of sale by pre-emption under Section 15 (1) (a) Fourthly of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1913, (Punjab Act 1 of 1913), hereinafter called the 'Act'. By that provision the right of pre-emption has been declared to vest in the tenant who holds under tenancy of the vendor the land or property sold or a part thereof. It was admitted before the trial Court that the respondent was a tenant before July 31, 1967 and that before the institution of the pre-emption suit his tenancy had been determined. The trial Court dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned Additional District Judge, in view of certain decisions of the Punjab High Court, allowed the appeal and decreed the suit. The Judgment was upheld in second appeal by the High Court.

4. The sole question for determination is whether a person who has ceased to hold the land sold as a tenant can succeed in a suit for possession by pre-emption under Section 15 (1) (a) Fourthly. The Punjab Haryana High Court in Kashmiri Lal v. Chuhan Ram, Letters Patent Appeal No. 71 of 1965, D/- 19-11-1969 = (1970) 72 Pun LR 325 had expressed the view that in a suit based on a right under the aforesaid clause the plaintiff was required to prove only that he was a tenant under the vendors on the date of the sale and not at any time thereafter as he could not remain a tenant under the vendors after they had sold the property. In certain other judgments delivered by learned single Judges of the Punjab High Court it had been recognised that the rule was firmly established in the law relating to pre-emption that a pre-emptor in order to succeed must have a right to pre-empt not only at the time of sale but also at the institution of the suit and the passing of the decree by the trial Court. In other words, the pre-emptor's right should subsist up to the date of the passing of the decree and if he lost that right at any time before the decree was granted his suit must fail. These learned Judges of the High Court, however, considered that the language of Section 15 (1) (a) Fourthly showed that the legislature intended to depart from the well-settled principle mentioned before and all that has to be seen is whether the plaintiff was a tenant of the vendor on the date of sale (see Sohan Singh v. Udho Ram, 1967-69 Pun LR 414).

5. In Hans Nath v. Ragho Prasad Singh, 59 Ind App 138 = (AIR 1932 PC 57), it was laid down by the Privy Council that the decisive date as regards the right of a pre-emptor to pre-empt the sale was the date of the decree. A Full Bench of the Lahore High Court in Thakur Madho Singh v. Lt. James R. R. Skinner, ILR (1942) 23 Lah 155 = (AIR 1941 Lah 433 (FB)), while considering the relevant provisions of the Act applied this rule to a case where a vendee had improved his status during the pendency of the pre-emption suit and held that a vendee could defeat the right of a pre-emptor by improving his status at any time before the passing of the decree. The right of pre-emption is a weak one and is liable to be defeated by all legitimate means at the instance of a vendee against whose contract an inroad is being attempted by the pre-emptor. The vendee is on the defensive and is entitled to arm himself with a shield in order to protect his right. The pre-emptor is an aggressor and as he wishes to dislocate the vendee he must show that the superior right of pre-emption which he had at the date of the sale continued to remain superior at all relevant times: vide Faiz Mohammad v. Fajar Ali Khan, ILR (1944) 25 Lah 473 = (AIR 1944 Lah 172 (FB)). In the latest Full Bench decision of the Punjab High Court in Ramji Lal v. The State of Punjab, 68 Pun LR 345 = (AIR 1966 Punj 374 (FB)) the rule that a pre-emptor must maintain his qualification to pre-empt upto the date of the decree was recognised as well settled.

6. In the presence of the above principle which is firmly entrenched in the law of pre-emption it is difficult to conceive that the legislature intended to depart from it in Section 15 (1) (a) Fourthly nor has any reason been suggested for doing so. The language employed is not very happy but the clear requirement is that the tenant must hold the land as such. If his tenancy has come to an end and he has been dispossessed it can never be said that he is holding the land under tenancy of any one. The legislature can hardly be attributed the intention of giving the right to a tenant, who has been dispossessed and whose tenancy has been determined either before or during the pendency of the suit, to obtain a decree for possession by pre-emption. This is particularly so as the statutory right of pre-emption is one which attaches to the land and is not a mere personal right. There could be no basis for the legislature giving an indefeasible right to a person who happens to be in possession of the land sold as a tenant of the vendor. His right is neither better nor worse than any other person who has been conferred that right by the provisions of Section 15 of the Act. For instance, a co-sharer has been given a right to pre-empt the sale of a share out of joint land by Clause (b) Fourthly of Section 15 (1). If a co-sharer must retain his right upto the date of the decree, which he must, (See Surjit Singh v. Gurnam Singh, 1964-66 Pun LR 1063), there is no intelligible ground for treating a tenant differently. The tenant must show his right at all material times before he can succeed in a suit for pre-emption. In other words his tenancy must remain intact and he must hold the land in his capacity as a tenant till the date of the decree.

7. It must be remembered that sale alone does not and cannot divest the tenant of his right to hold the land of which he is in possession by virtue of his tenancy under the vendor. But if his tenancy is determined by a decree for eviction he loses his status of a tenant. He then does not satisfy the first requirement of Section 15 (1) (a) Fourthly that he is a tenant who holds the land. In that situation he cannot succeed in a pre-emption suit if the decree for eviction has been passed after the sale but before the institution of the suit or during its pendency and before the date of the decree. This would be so by applying the well-established rule which, as stated earlier, has become a part of the law relating to pre-emption.

8. In the present case not only a decree for eviction was passed against the respondent but he was also actually dispossessed from the land in his tenancy pursuant to the decree before he filed the pre-emption suit. We are altogether unable to see how he could be granted a decree in such a suit.

9. An attempt was made by means of C. M. P. No. 4634 of 1970 on behalf of the respondents to reopen the question of the area in respect of which the decree for eviction had been passed on July 31, 1967. It was maintained that it related only to certain Khasra Numbers which were covered by the first sale shown as clause (a) in the heading of the plaint and that there was no order relating to eviction from the land covered by the second sale mentioned in clause (b) therein. This question was never raised in the courts below and as it involves an investigation into matters of fact it was not possible to allow the same to be reopened at this stage.

10. The appeal is allowed and the suit of the respondent is dismissed. In view of the nature of the points involved the parties are left to bear their own costs in this court.

Appeal allowed.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

GROVER, J.: This is an appeal under S. 116-A of the Representation of the People Act 1951, hereinafter called the "Act" from a judgment of the Allahabad High Court dismissing an election petition filed by the appellant challenging the election of respondent No. 1 to the U. P. Legislative Assembly from Constituency No. 84 Sandila (District Hardoi) held in February 1969 on the ground that one of the candidates had not been made a party to the petition.

2. The date for filing the nomination papers of the candidates for the mid-term election in the State of U. P. was January 9, 1969. On that date nine candidates filed their nomination papers. Aizaz Rasul, who had the title of Nawab and who is the husband of respondent No. 1, had been nominated as a candidate and his nomination papers were held to be in order by the Returning Officer on January 9, 1969. After the nomination papers had been accepted Aizaz Rasul and one other candidate withdrew from the contest and seven candidates were left in the field. The polling took place on February 7, 1969. Respondent No. 1 was declared elected on February 10, 1969. It is unnecessary to mention the votes polled by all the candidates. It would be sufficient to mention that respondent No. 1 secured 32,031 and the appellant 31,955 votes. On March 27, 1969 the appellant filed an election petition in the High Court of Allahabad. Respondent No. 1 and other six candidates who had contested the election were duly impleaded as parties but Aizaz Rasul who had withdrawn from the contest was not made a party. The petition was dismissed in accordance with the terms of S. 86 (1) of the Act on the ground that the allegations of commission of corrupt practices had been made against Aizaz Rasul and therefore it was incumbent on the election petitioner to have impleaded him as a respondent.

3. It is not disputed on behalf of the appellant that Aizaz Rasul was a necessary party and the failure to implead him would entail dismissal of the election petition if there was a candidate against whom allegations of corrupt practice had been made in the petition. Section 82 (b) of the Act lays down in mandatory terms that such a candidate must be impleaded as a party. The allegations relevant for the purpose of disposal of this appeal which need be noticed from the election petition are contained in clauses (b) and (c) of para 20 and para 21. These are in the following terms:

(b) "That respondent No. 1 herself and through her consent, her agents obtained or procured and attempted to obtain or procure the services of Sri Madan Gopal Misra, Sanitary Inspector Kachauna Block Sandila, a person in the service of the U. P. Government who resides in the kothi of respondent No. 1 at Sandila for the furtherance of the prospects of her election. A complaint regarding her working at the aforesaid election was made by Bishamber Dayal Gupta of Jan Sangh party to the District Magistrate, District Medical Officer of Health and District Election Officer, Hardoi on 3-

* (Ele. Petn. No. 2 of 1969, D/- 16-12-1969 — All—Luck. Bench.)

2-1969, particulars of this corrupt practice as far as possible are being given in schedule VIII annexed to this petition.

(c) "That the said Madan Gopal Misra, Sanitary Inspector (mentioned in foregoing paragraph) committed corrupt practice of undue influence defined in S. 123 (2) of the Representation of the People Act with the consent of respondent No. 1 her election agent by interfering with the free exercise of electoral rights of electors taking advantage of his official position and telling them that they will have to suffer from his hands in case they will not support the candidature of respondent No. 1 and vote for her. The name, date and place of commission of such corrupt practice are the same as

are given in Schedule VIII to the election petition.

That in case it is not proved that the corrupt practices mentioned in paragraph 20 (and in its sub-paragraphs) were committed by respondent No. 1 and her election agent or by her agents with her consent they were committed by the persons named in respective Schedules viz. Schedules VIIA and VIII in the interest of the respondent No. 1 and the same has materially affected the result of the election as the respondent No. 1 who has succeeded by a margin of 76 votes she secured more than 1000 votes due to the corrupt practices committed in her interest". Schedule VIII of the petition which is a part of para 20 (c) may also be reproduced to the extent necessary:

"SCHEDULE VIII

Name of the person committed corrupt practice.	Date	Place	Remarks
Nawab Ezaz Rasool husband and Election Agent of respondent No. 1.	2.2.1969	Village Malaiya	He went with Nawab Ezaz Rasool in a Jeep and canvassed support for her in that village along with him.
Respondent No. 1.	3.2.1969	Village Raison	He accompanied respondent No. 1 in her jeep and canvassed support for her in the village along with her.
"	"	Village Samodha	"
Nawab Ezaz Rasool.	4.2.1969	Kachauna	He accompanied the Nawab and canvassed support for respondent No. 1 in the said village."

4. An attempt was made long after the period of limitation for filing the election petition had expired to amend column I of the heading of Schedule VIII by the insertion of words "in whose company Madan Gopal Misra" between the words persons and committed in column I of that Schedule. That was rightly disallowed by the learned trial judge as a defective petition could not be allowed to be rectified after the period of limitation for filing it had expired.

5. It has been pointed out by the learned counsel for the appellant that so far as the allegation contained in para 20 (b) is concerned it has been found by the High Court that the officer mentioned therein does not fall within the category of officers specified in Section 123 (7) of the Act. It has, therefore, to be decided whether the allegations in para 20 (c) read with Schedule VIII relate to the commission of a corrupt practice by respondent No. 1's husband and election agent Aizaz Rasul within the meaning of Section 123 (2) of the Act. A great deal of stress has been laid on the contents of para 20 (c) and it has been emphasised that the allegation of commission of a corrupt practice of undue influence was made against Madan Gopal Misra Sanitary Inspector, although it was stated that the alleged corrupt practice had been committed with the consent of respondent No. 1 and her election agent. Reliance has been placed on S. B. Adityan v. S. Kandaswami, 1959 SCR 868 = (AIR 1958 SC 857) where it was observed at page 876 that a corrupt practice committed with the consent of a candidate was not in itself a new kind of corrupt practice. The consent by a candidate to the commission of a corrupt practice by someone else, whatever its consequences might be, was not itself a corrupt practice. Therefore to say that a candidate consented to corrupt practice being committed by accepting a gift made to him to induce him to withdraw his candidature was not to say that he himself committed the corrupt practice. The decision in that case is clearly distinguishable on facts.

6. Now S. 123 (2) defines "undue influence" as meaning any direct or indirect interference or attempt to interfere on the part of the candidate or his agent or of any other person with the consent of the candidate or his election agent with the free exercise of any electoral right. According to proviso (a) (i) any such person referred to above who threatens any candidate or any elector, inter alia, with injury of any kind shall be deemed to interfere with the free exercise of the electoral right of such candidate or elector. The meaning of corrupt practice in cl. (b) of S. 82 of the Act has to be determined with reference to S. 123 (2). It has thus to be seen whether any allegations of corrupt practice were made against Aizaz Rasul who was admittedly a candidate within the meaning of S. 79 (b) of the Act.

7. In our judgment the High Court was right in reading the contents of Schedule VIII in the context of the allegations made in paragraphs 20 (b) and 20 (c) of the petition. The election agent of respondent No. 1 Aizaz Rasul is alleged to have availed of the services of Misra the Sanitary Inspector who is stated to be living in his kothi at Sandila to exercise undue influence on the voters with his assistance and he is actually alleged to have exercised the said influence by carrying Misra in his jeep to Malaiya and Kachauna villages where along with him the voters were asked by Misra to vote for respondent No. 1 on pain of their suffering injury at his hands if they did not do so. The fact that corrupt practices were alleged in the aforesaid sub-paragraphs of Para 20 as having been committed by respondent No. 1 and her election agent is proved from what is stated in the first part of para 21 as well. We are unable to accept that whatever allegations of corrupt practices were made they were confined only to Misra the Sanitary Inspector. The High Court was, therefore, justified in dismissing the petition under S. 86 (1) of the Act.

8. The appeal fails and it is dismissed. But in the circumstances we make no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

v. M/s. Golcha Properties Private Ltd., (In Liquidation), Respondent.

16-12-1970.

Companies Act (1956), Sections 483, 446, 457 — Order by Company Judge to sale by auction lease-hold rights of Company under liquidation — Notice of either sale or of proceedings culminating in order of sale not given to landlord either by Official Liquidator or by Court — Right of landlord to file appeal under Section 483 is not deprived by Rule 139 of the Companies (Court) Rules (1959) — No necessity of filing separate suit under Sec. 446 — Both Official Liquidator and Company Judge are bound by rules of natural justice to issue notice to landlord — Civil Spl. Where on report of the Official Liquidator under Section 457 the Company Judge orders sale of lease-hold rights of a Company under liquidation, but no notice of the proceedings is given to landlord either by the Official Liquidator or by the Court, the landlord is entitled to appeal under Section 483 against the order of sale. The Official Liquidator as well as the Company Judge are bound by the rules of natural justice to issue a notice to the landlord before ordering the sale. The provisions of Rule 103 of the Companies (Court) Rules (1959) also expressly provide issue of notice before exercising power under Section 457 (1) (c). In absence of such notice the landlord cannot be deprived of his right to file appeal under Section 483 on ground that he failed to appear before Court as required by Rule 139 of the Companies (Court)

GROVER, J.:— This is an appeal from a judgment of the Rajasthan High Court holding that the appellant was not entitled to file an appeal against the order of the Company Judge directing sale of lease hold rights of the Golcha Properties (P) Ltd. (in liquidation) in the land belonging to the appellant.

2. The facts briefly are that on November 5, 1960, an agreement was entered into between the appellant the respondent Company allowing Golcha Properties (P) Ltd. to construct a cinema theatre within three years from the issue of the 'No-Objection Certificate' on land measuring 42,900 sq. feet at Bhagvandas Road, Jaipur belonging to the appellant. The Company deposited a sum of Rs. 5 lakhs by way of security. In October 1963 no objection certificate is stated to have been issued for construction of a cinema theatre. In 1966 a petition for winding up of the company was filed in the Rajasthan High Court. On May 10, 1968 an order for winding up of the Company was made and a liquidator was appointed. On July 11, 1969 the Official Liquidator made a report to the Company Judge for sale of the lease-hold rights of the Company in the land belonging to the appellant and the structures standing on it. It appears that the Official Liquidator made a report under Sec. 457 of the Indian Companies Act 1956 to obtain the necessary orders for sale. On July 21, 1969 the Company Judge without hearing any one or issuing notice to the appellant ordered that the lease-hold rights and the structures be auctioned as proposed by the Official Liquidator. On October 3, 1969 the appellant's attorney sent a letter to the Official Liquidator stating that the licence granted to the Company under an agreement dated November 5, 1960 stood revoked and called upon him to deliver possession of the land and also pay compensation amounting to Rs. 10 lakhs. On February 9, 1970 the Official Liquidator sent a reply claiming that the company was entitled to a lease for 20 years under the agreement. On March 14, 1970 a notice was issued in a newspaper (Times of India) in respect of the proposed auction sale of lease-hold rights which was to take place on April 14, 1970. According to the appellant she enquired from the Official Liquidator under whose authority the property was being sold to which no reply was sent by the Official Liquidator. On April 3, 1970 the appellant applied for a certified copy of the order dated July 21, 1969 after taking inspection of the record in the High Court. The certified copy was sent on April 24, 1970. On the same date the appellant filed an appeal before the High Court. The High Court rejected that application summarily but recorded a short order.

3. In the order of the High Court reference has been made to Rule 139 of the Companies (Court) Rules 1959 and it has been pointed out that since the appellant had not appeared before the Company Judge she was not entitled to maintain the appeal. It was conceded that no notice had ever been sent to her either by the Official Liquidator or the Company Judge before the order appealed against relating to appellant's property was made. The High Court was of the view that the only remedy of the appellant was by way of a suit after obtaining leave of the Company Judge under Section 446 of the Act. Now an appeal lies under Section 483 of the Act from any order made or decision given in the matter of winding up of a company by the Court and it lies to the same Court to which, in the same manner in which and subject to the same conditions under which, appeals lie from any order or decision of the Court in cases within its ordinary jurisdiction. There can be no manner of doubt that an appeal was competent against the order made by the Company Judge on July 21, 1969 in view of the terms of Section 483. The only question is whether because the official liquidator failed to discharge his duties properly by having a notice issued to the appellant, whose rights were directly affected by the order proposed to be made, the appellant was debarred from filing the appeal. In our opinion apart from Rule 139 to which reference has been made by the High Court the Official Liquidator as well as the learned Company Judge were bound by the rules of natural justice to issue a notice to the appellant and hear her before making the order appealed against. If there was default on their part in not following the correct procedure it is wholly incomprehensible how the appellant could be deprived of her right to get her grievance redressed by filing an appeal against the order which had been made in her absence and without her knowledge. It would be a travesty of justice if a party is driven to file a suit which would involve long and cumbersome procedure when an order has been made directly affecting that party and redress can be had by filing an appeal which is permitted by law. It is well settled that a person who is not a party to the suit may prefer an appeal with the leave of the appellate Court and such leave should be granted if he would be prejudicially affected by the judgment.

4. Rule 103 of the Company's (Court) Rules provides for taking out summons for directions not only with reference to the settlement of the list of contributories and the list of creditors but also the exercise by the official liquidator of all or any of the powers under Section 457 (1) and any other matter requiring directions of the Court. The exercise of the power under Section 457 (1) (c) of the Act to sell the immoveable and moveable property of the Company by public auction or private contract would certainly fall within the ambit of the Rule. That Rule expressly provides for issuing of a notice of the summons to the petitioner on whose petition the order for winding up was made. It is implicit that if the directions which have to be given by the Court would affect any person prejudicially he must be served with a notice of the summons under the general rule of natural justice and that no order should be made affecting the rights of a party without affording a proper opportunity to it to represent its case. The High Court was thus clearly in error in not entertaining and deciding the appeal preferred by the appellant who was the owner of the land in which lease hold rights said to have been created by her in favour of the Company in liquidation were sought to be sold.

5. The appeal is allowed and the order of the High Court is set aside. The case is remanded to the High Court for disposing of the appeal in accordance with law. Costs shall abide the event.

Appeal allowed.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

HEGDE, J.:— This is an appeal by certificate. The defendant No. 1 is the appellant in this appeal. Respondent No. 1 is the plaintiff in the suit. The material facts of the case are as follows:

2. Respondent No. 1 purchased Touzi No. 6 in Mahal Roynagar in a sale under Act XI of 1859 on January 6, 1936.

*(A. F. O. D. No. 243 of 1954, D/- 7-6-1965 — Cal.)

AO/AO/G173/70/MLD/T

That sale took effect from September 29, 1935. He took delivery of possession of the property purchased by him through the Collector of 24, Parganas on June 4, 1936. Thereafter he got his name registered under the Land Registration Act in substitution of the name of the previous recorded proprietor. According to Respondent No. 1 he had a share in the suit property, but as his claim was denied by the appellant, he instituted a title suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Alipore against the appellant and others for declaration of his title and for joint possession to an undivided 1 anna 3 gondas share in 74 Bighas 4 Cottahs of land in premises No. 2, Judge's Court Road, Alipore, Calcutta which comprised former premises Nos. 5, 5/1 and 6, Alipore Lane and Nos. 13 and 14 of Bainabpara Lane and mesne profits. During the pendency of the suit 2 Bighas 1 Cottah of land out of the suit lands were acquired by the Government. Thereupon Respondent No. 1 got his plaint amended and confined the relief asked for to 72 Bighas and 3 Cottahs but he claimed a decree against the appellant for a proportionate share i.e., Rs. 17,609-6-0 from out of the compensation amount paid for the lands acquired. The suit lands are in Mouja Alipore. According to the respondent they are joint lands of Toujis Nos. 1 to 6, 8 to 16, 33, 51, 53 and 91 of the 24 Parganas District excepting 2 Blocks of separately demarcated lands which are in Touji No. 1070.

3. The appellant denied the plaintiff's claim that the suit lands or any portion thereof were parts of Touji No. 6. According to him they were of his exclusive ownership and the plaintiff had no right, title or interest therein. In the alternative he pleaded that he had acquired permanent rights in those lands by being in exclusive possession thereof for a long time and further that Toujis Nos. 33 and 53 were divided. The other pleas taken by him and pressed in this Court will be considered at the appropriate stage.

4. The trial Court came to the conclusion that 51 Bighas, 17 Cottahs 1 Chittak in Mouja Alipore were joint lands of Toujis 1 to 6, 8 to 16, 33, 51, 53 and 91 and respondent No. 1 had title to an undivided 1 anna, 3 gondas share therein as owner of Touji No. 6. Consequently it gave to respondent No. 1 a decree for joint possession with the appellant of his undivided 1 anna 3 gondas share and mesne profits. Further it decreed the 1st respondent's claim for his share in the compensation amount. The Court rejected the defendant No. 1's plea that Toujis 33 and 53 were divided.

5. Defendant No. 1 appealed to the High Court of Calcutta against the judgment and decree of the trial Court. The High Court agreeing with the trial Court held that the division pleaded by the defendant No. 1 is not true. It also came to the conclusion that Mouja Alipore were the joint lands of Toujis 1 to 6, 8 to 16, 33, 51, 53 and 91. But on an examination of the oral and documentary evidence, it held that the extent of joint lands was only 25 Bighas 5 Cottahs 1 Chittak and 45 Sq. Feet. Accordingly it gave the plaintiff a decree for joint possession in respect of 1 anna 3 gondas share in respect of those lands. It also decreed mesne profits but the amount of mesne profits was left to be determined by separate proceedings. It confirmed the decree of the trial Court as regards respondent No. 1's share in the compensation amount.

6. Both the trial Court and the High Court have concurrently come to the conclusion that 25 Bighas 2 Cottahs 1 Chittak and 45 Sq. Feet in Mouja Alipore are joint lands pertaining to Toujis 1 to 6, 8 to 16, 33, 51, 53 and 91. This Court does not ordinarily interfere with the concurrent findings of fact reached by the Courts below unless it is shown that any important piece of evidence has been ignored or any irrelevant consideration had entered into the decision of the Courts below. The Counsel for the appellant contended that in arriving at their conclusions both the trial Court and the High Court have overlooked Section 27 of Regulation VIII of 1793. This Regulation does not appear to have been relied on by any of the parties to the proceedings either in the trial Court or in the appellate court, nor do we think that that Regulation has any bearing on the issues arising for decision in this case. That Regulation says:

"When a portion of land stands in the joint names of several proprietors or of one for many, but each proprietor has his separate share in his own possession and management or in that of an agent for him, the settlement is to be made for each share with the person in possession and his land is to be held exclusively responsible for the revenue assessed upon it."

7. In the present case it is not the case of respondent No. 1 that each proprietor in the joint estate had a separate share in his own possession and management or that of an agent for him; nor do we think S. 23 (sic) of that Regulation which was repealed as far back as 1805 has any relevance for our present purpose.

8. So far as the question of division pleaded by the appellant in respect of some of the Toujis is concerned, the concurrent finding of the Courts below is not liable to be reopened.

9. It was urged on behalf of the appellant that the lands in possession of the appellant are not in excess of his share in the joint property; hence the plaintiff cannot get any relief in the present suit. No such plea was put forward in the trial Court or in the High Court. The plea raised raises a question of fact. Hence that question cannot be gone into in this appeal.

10. In view of the finding of the High Court that 25 Bighas 2 Cottahs and 1 Chittak 45 Sq. Feet in Mouja Alipore are joint lands pertaining to Toujis 1 to 6, 8 to 16, 33, 51, 53 and 91, it must be held that respondent No. 1 has a share in those lands.

11. We are unable to appreciate the contention of the appellant that he had acquired a permanent right in the suit lands in view of the fact that he was in exclusive possession of the same for a long time. The appellant had not put forward a plea of adverse possession. Once it is held that he is a co-owner of the lands in question, his possession however long it might be unless it is adverse to the other co-owners cannot confer on him any right.

12. It was next contended by the appellant that no decree for a share in the compensation amount could have been granted as the acquisition proceedings proceeded on the basis that the appellant was the owner of the acquired lands. This is an untenable contention. The acquisition proceedings could not have conferred any title on the appellant. The compensation amount paid to the appellant represents the value of the lands acquired. The appellant is liable to make over to respondent No. 1 his share therein.

13. At one stage the learned Counsel for the appellant contended that the decree for mesne profits cannot be sustained as his possession cannot be held to be unlawful but at a later stage he gave up that contention because a decree for accounts might turn out to be more harmful to his client.

14. In the result this appeal fails and the same is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

M/s. Baidyanath Ayurved Bhawan (Pvt.) Ltd., Jhansi, Appellant v. The Excise Commissioner, U. P. and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 1924 of 1970, D/- 14-10-1970.

(A) Medicinal and Toilet Preparations (Excise Duties) Act (1955), Sch. I, Item 1, Ss. 3 (1), 4 — Excise Duty on medicinal preparations — Preparation by adding tincture of which alcohol is component — Preparation is liable to excise duty.

In order to attract duty all that is required is that a medicinal preparation should contain alcohol. Alcohol may be a part of the preparation either because it is directly added to the solution or it came to be included in it because one of the components of that preparation contained alcohol.

(Para 8)

Where tincture is added to medicinal preparation as its component alcohol being a component of tincture and it not having undergone any chemical change into some other substance but being present in the liquid form in the preparations duty under Section 3 (1) is attracted though alcohol is not directly added. Special Appeal No. 368 of 1970, D/- 28-4-1970 (All.), Affirmed.

(Para 3, 8)

Even if imposition of excise duty under Section 3 (1) on preparations in which alcohol is indirectly introduced attracts multipoint taxation that by itself does not render the duty illegal. The provisions for rebate of duty on alcohol contained in Section 4 show that multipoint tax on medicinal preparations containing alcohol was within the contemplation of the legislature otherwise there was no purpose in incorporating Section 4 into the Act. (B) Interpretation of Statutes — Taxing provision — Rule of interpretation.

*(Special Appeal No. 368 of 1970, D/- 28-4-1970, — All.)

KN/KN/E920/70/YPB/T

In interpreting a taxing provision, the Courts should not ordinarily concern themselves with the policy behind the provision or even with its impact. In a taxing statute one has to look at what is clearly said. There is no room for any intendment. There is no equity about a tax. There is no presumption as to a tax. Nothing is to be read in, nothing is to be implied. One can only look fairly at the language used. (1921) 1 K.B. 64, Rel. on. (Para 8)

Mr. S. V. Gupte, Senior Advocate,
(Mr. Sobhagmal Jain, Advocate, with him), for Appellant; M/s. O. P. Rana and R. Bana, Advocates, for Respondents.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

HEGDE, J.: In this appeal by special leave the true ambit of item 1 in the Schedule to the Medicinal and Toilet Preparations (Excise Duties) Act, 1955 (to be hereinafter referred to as the Act) read with S. 3 (1) of that Act comes up for consideration.

2. The appellant is a manufacturer of certain medicines with the aid of substances like tincture, spirit etc.
The tincture and spirit in their turn contain alcohol. The Superintendent of Excise called upon the appellant to pay duty under the Act on the medicinal preparations on the ground that they contain alcohol. The appellant resisted the demand on the ground that the medicines in question were not prepared by adding pure alcohol; the fact that the tincture which is a com-(Cont. on Col. 2)

ponent of that preparation contains alcohol does not make it a preparation containing alcohol. That contention was rejected by the Superintendent of Excise as well as by the High Court in the Writ petition brought by the appellant.

3. It is admitted that alcohol though it was not directly added, is a component of the medicinal preparations in question. That alcohol has not undergone any chemical change into some other substance. It is present in a liquid form in those preparations.
The question for decision is whether the preparations in question do not attract duty because alcohol was not directly added to the solution. The contention of the appellant is that unless alcohol is added into the preparation in its free condition, a medicinal preparation does not become dutiable.
For deciding this question we may now read the relevant provisions of the Act.

4. Section 3 (1) of the Act says:

"There shall be levied duties of excise, at the rates specified in the Schedule, on all dutiable goods manufactured in India."

5. "Dutiable goods" is defined in S. 2 (c) as meaning the medicinal and toilet preparations specified in the Schedule as being subject to the duties of excise levied under this Act. "Medicinal Preparation" is defined in S. 2
(g) in these words:

" 'medicinal preparation' includes all drugs which are a remedy or prescription prepared for internal or external use of human beings, or animals and all substances intended to be used for or in the treatment, mitigation or prevention of disease in human beings or animals."

6. Item 1 of the Schedule, the only item with which we are concerned in this case reads as follows:

Item No.	Description of dutiable goods.	Rate of duty.
	Medicinal preparations.
1.	Medicinal preparations, being patent or proprietary medicines, containing alcohol and which are not capable of being consumed as ordinary alcoholic beverages.	Ten per cent ad valorem.

7. The only other provision which we need consider is S. 4 of the Act. That section reads thus:

"Where alcohol, opium, Indian hemp or other narcotic drug or narcotic had been supplied to a manufacturer of any dutiable goods for use as an ingredient of such goods by, or under the authority of, the collecting Government and a duty of excise on the goods so supplied had already been recovered by such Government under any law for the time being in force, the collecting Government shall, on an application being made to it in this behalf, grant in respect of the duty of excise leviable under this Act, a rebate to such manufacturer of the excess, if any, of the duty so recovered over the duty leviable under this Act."

8. It was conceded that the preparations with which we are concerned in this case are medicinal preparations. They are proprietary medicines and that they are not capable of being consumed as ordinary alcohol i.e. beverages. The only question that has to be decided is whether those preparations contain alcohol. It is admitted that tincture is a component of that preparation and alcohol is a component of tincture. Therefore we fail to see how it can be urged that those preparations do not contain alcohol. In order to attract duty all that is required is that a medicinal preparation should contain alcohol. Alcohol may be a part of the preparation either because it is directly added to the solution or it came to be included in that medicinal preparation because of one of the components of that preparation contained alcohol. According to the plain language of the provision all that is required is that the preparation should contain alcohol. In interpreting a taxing provision, the courts should not ordinarily concern themselves with the policy behind the provision or even with its impact. As observed by Rowlatt J. in Cape Brandy Syndicate v. Commrs. of Inland Revenue, (1921) 1 KB 64 that in a taxing Act one has to look at what is clearly said. There is no room for any intendment. There is no equity about a tax. There is no presumption as to a tax. Nothing is to be read in, nothing is to be implied. One can only look fairly at the language used. It was urged on behalf of the appellant that if we hold that even indirect introduction of alcohol into a medicinal preparation brings that preparation within the scope of S. 3 (1) of the Act, it would mean multipoint taxation. Coming to the medicinal preparations with which we are concerned in this case, it was urged that if the view taken by the High Court is correct then, first the tincture used became dutiable and thereafter the medicinal preparations in which tincture was used became dutiable. It was said that that could not be the intention of the Parliament. We are unable to appreciate this contention. Multipoint taxation is not unknown to us.

9. Our attention was invited to S. 4 of the Act in support of the contention that the legislature did not intend to levy multi-point tax. Section 4 provides for rebate of duty on alcohol supplied to the manufacturer of dutiable goods for use as an ingredient of such goods by or under the authority of the collecting government and a duty of excise on goods so supplied had already been recovered by such government under any law for the time being in force. In our opinion this provision instead of supporting the appellant goes to show that multi-point tax on medicinal preparations containing alcohol was within the contemplation of the legislature otherwise there was no purpose in incorporating Section 4 into the Act. If Section 3 did not impose any levy on medicinal preparations of which pure alcohol is not a component, there was no need for Section 4. There can be no question of any rebate if there was no levy at all. Every rebate presupposes an imposition of tax or duty. But the rebate under Section 4 is confined only to those goods which directly come within the scope of S. 4 and not to others. That was the will of the Parliament. If the Parliament desired to give rebate only in certain cases not to others, it cannot be said that as regards the other medicinal preparations there can be no levy. In our judgment the language of the provision imposing the levy is plain and unambiguous. It imposes duty on all medicinal preparations containing alcohol. At the hearing our attention was invited to the decision of the Madras High Court in M/s. Pharm Products Ltd. Thanjavur v. Dist. Rev. Officer, Thanjavur, AIR 1969 Mad 448. The conclusion reached by that High Court accords with our conclusion.

10. In the result this appeal fails and the same is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

AIR 1971 SUPREME COURT 381
(V 58 C 94)

(From: Bombay)

K. S. HEGDE AND I. D. DUA, JJ.State of Maharashtra, Appellant
v. Nasimkhan Ahmad Khan Mali Khan etc. Respondents.Criminal Appeals Nos. 181 and 182 of 1967, D/- 17-8-1970.Bombay Probation of Offenders Act (19 of 1938), S. 5 (1) (a) — Release of accused on probation — Held, order was not based on proper considerations.

Accused, workmen on strike, convicted of offences of arson and assault of serious character — Release of accused on probation — Order passed on the ground that they did not belong to any regular class of criminals but were honest men who had acted in heat and anger on mistaken notions about the manner in which they could better their conditions of lives and that no useful social purpose would be served by an immediate sentence of imprisonment — Age or physical or mental conditions of accused not considered — Order is not based on proper considerations — Character could be considered only in the context of their act and the offence showed that they were desperate characters.

(Para: 6, 9)

HEGDE, J.: In these appeals by special leave, we are only concerned with the question of sentence. The respondents in Criminal Appeal No. 182 of 1967 are not represented though they were served with the notice of the appeal.

2. The question of sentence in this case has assumed considerable importance. In order to assess that question, it is necessary to refer to the incidents that led up to the prosecution of the respondents. The respondents in both the appeals were prosecuted in case No. 254 of 1964 in the court of Sessions for Greater Bombay. They were charged with various offences. These respondents were members of a Union known as B.E.S.T. Union. In about the middle of August of 1963, that Union declared a strike. B.E.S.T. is running bus services in the city of Bombay. As a result of the declaration of the strike several workers struck work. It appears that some of the workers disregarded the call for strike and continued to work. On the third day of the strike when a single decker bus No. BMR 3561 was proceeding on the road, the respondents and others stopped the bus and the respondent in Criminal Appeal No. 181 of 1967 threw burning petrol on the conductor, Abdul Kadar as a result of which Abdul Kadar sustained several severe injuries. His face was partially burnt up. At the time of the occurrence one of the respondents caused grievous hurt to the driver, Kamalashankar Mishra. During the course of the incident, injuries were also caused to police constable Namdeo Arjun Kharat who was on bandobast duty in the bus. Injuries sustained by the conductor and the driver were quite serious. The conductor sustained burns on the face, left ear and in the arms and he had to be in the hospital for over 20 days. The driver's left ear was cut and the flap of the ear was hanging. Further there was a fracture of cartilage.

3. The learned trial judge summarised the prosecution case thus:

"The miscreants had invaded the bus from both the sides: some came from the front side and some from the rear near the entrance. They were not bona fide passengers. Though they rushed near the entrance they did not enter the bus but engaged the conductor in talking. Accused No. 2 was one of the persons invading the bus from the front. He tampered with the machine which stopped and the bus could not start. Some of them had assaulted the driver and accused No. 1 had thrown the container with the burning petrol into the bus which clearly shows that the common object of the offenders was to break down the bus service, run and operated by the loyal servants and to intimidate them by acts of violence and causing damage and destruction by fire to the vehicle. It is clear that on the rear side there were accused Nos. 1, 3, 5 and 6 and others. On the front side there were accused No. 2 and two others, who had assaulted the driver"

4. From this summary of the facts found, it is quite clear that the offence committed by the respondents was a serious one. It did not only result in serious damage to the bus it also caused serious injuries to the conductor and the driver.

5. After taking all the facts into consideration, the learned trial judge convicted the respondents under various charges. The sentences imposed on various charges were made to run concurrently and the maximum sentence imposed on Accused No. 1 (respondent in Cr. Appeal No. 181 of 1967) is two years and on the rest one year. The sentences imposed by the learned trial judge cannot be considered by any standard as having been excessive.

6. The accused took up the matter in appeal to the High Court of Bombay and the same was heard by Paranjape J. At the hearing Counsel for the accused did not challenge the conclusion reached by the trial court or the conviction of the respondents. They merely prayed for alteration of the sentences. The learned Judge, in our opinion, erroneously acceded to this request. He thought that on the facts and circumstances proved in this case, it is sufficient to take action against the respondents under S. 5 (1) (a) of the Bombay Probation of Offenders Act, 1938. This is what the learned judge observed:

"It is clear that these offences were committed by the accused who entertained wrong notions as to the manner in which they could make the strike successful. Obviously the persons who had sponsored the strike were the leaders of the Union of which the accused were members and no doubt the leaders of the Union could have observed greater restraint and could have controlled the members in a better manner. But the fact still remains that the accused have acted on a sudden impulse and on account of the heat and anger that was generated, they have committed these acts of violence. The accused do not belong to the regular class of criminals. They were honest workers and if on account of their wrong notions about the manner in which they could better the conditions of their lives they have committed these offences, I do not see how any useful purpose will be served by asking them to undergo a sentence of imprisonment immediately. I think a better social and useful purpose will be served if I direct each of these accused to enter into a bond under S. 5 (1) (a) of the Bombay Probation of Offenders Act, 1938, instead of sentencing them at once to undergo imprisonment. . . "

7. Some of the findings reached by the learned judge are factually incorrect. His notions about the social purpose behind S. 5 (1) (a) of the Bombay Probation of Offenders Act, 1938 may endanger law and order. It may encourage violence. The learned judge seriously erred in thinking that the respondents acted on a sudden impulse and on account of the heat and anger that was generated. It is clear from the facts established in the case that the acts complained of were done after premeditation. It was a concerted and a well-planned attack. No one but a mad man commits a crime without some motive or some real or imaginary grievance. If perverted notions are considered as mitigating circumstances then there will be chaos in society. We do not know what the learned Judge meant by saying that the accused did not belong to a regular class of criminals. Most accused who come up before courts are not old offenders nor do they belong to any criminal tribe. That does not mean that the offence committed by them should not be dealt with in accordance with law.

8. Section 5 (1) of the Bombay Probation of Offenders Act, 1938 reads: "Notwithstanding anything contained in any enactment for the time being in force, when—

(a) any male person is convicted of an offence not punishable with death or transportation for life, or

(b) any woman is convicted of an offence of any kind,

if it appears to the court by which the offender is convicted, that regard being had to the age, character, antecedents or physical or mental condition of the offender, or to the circumstances in which the offence was committed, it is expedient that the offender should be released on probation of good conduct, the Court, may for reasons to be recorded in writing instead of sentencing him at once to any punishment, direct that he be released on his entering into a bond, with or without sureties, to appear and receive sentence when called upon during such period not being less than one year and not exceeding three years as the Court may direct, and in the meantime to keep the peace and be of good behaviour."

9. In this case, the learned appellate Judge did not take into consideration the age or the physical or mental conditions of the offenders. So far as the character of the accused is concerned, he could have considered it only in the context of what they did on the day of the occurrence. There was no other material before him. The offences committed by them show that they are desperate characters. The only thing that the learned appellate Judge can be said to have considered is the circumstances in which the offences were committed. The fact that there was a call for strike is no ground for arson and assault of a grievous character. No section of the society can be permitted to take law into its own hand. There are ways to remedy social injustices. No individual can take upon himself the right to remedy any wrong done to him. It is impossible to have an orderly society, if we take to the ways of the jungle. There may be a genuine desire to change the present social order but that must and can be done through the instrumentalities of the State. In the final analysis, it is the people of this country through their representatives that must decide the social goals. If social wrongs are sought to be remedied in the streets then there can be neither peace nor progress. Without progress the attainment of social justice is impossible. Under our Constitution the rule of law has been made our way of life. It is a fallacy to think that rule of law and the law of the jungle can co-exist.

10. After having expressed our views on the question presented for our determination and thereby corrected the error of law committed by the High Court, we feel there is no need at present to send the respondents to jail by having recourse to our power under Art. 136 of the Constitution. The offence in this case was committed as far back as in August, 1963. The respondents are all workers. We are told that as a result of this incident they have been dismissed from service. Most of them have not even put in their appearance in these appeals. The judgment of the High Court was delivered on 5-11-1966 nearly four years back. The suspended sentence imposed by the High Court has now been fully undergone by the respondents. We take it that the State filed these appeals primarily to get an authoritative interpretation of S. 5 (1) of the Bombay Probation of Offenders Act, 1938. That purpose is now achieved. Hence we dismiss these appeals subject to the observations made above.

Appeals dismissed.

AIR 1971 SUPREME COURT 383
(V 58 C 95)

(From: Madhya Pradesh)

J. C. SHAH AND K. S. HEGDE, JJ.

Commissioner of Income Tax, Madhya Pradesh, Appellant v. Hukumchand Mannalal and Co., Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 1774 of 1969, D/-20-7-1970.

Income-Tax Act (1922), S. 26A — Registration of firms — Joint Hindu family — Two or more coparceners entering into partnership — Firm can be granted registration. (Contract Act (1872), S. 11) — (Partnership Act (1932), S. 4.)

One or more members of a Hindu undivided family may enter into a contractual relation in the nature of a partnership with a stranger and they qua the stranger become partners. The Contract Act imposes no disability upon them in the matter of entering into a contract inter se or with a stranger. If the relation as is referred to in S 4 Partnership Act exists, partnership will not be invalid merely because two or more of the persons who have so agreed to share the profits of the business are members of a Hindu undivided family. Consequently, a firm can be granted registration under Section 26A of the Act. The Income Tax Officer is not concerned to determine in whom the beneficial interest in the share in the partnership vests. Decision of Madh. Pra. High Court Affirmed. tiar v. Chokalingam Pillai 4

delivered by

SHAH, J.: A firm styled Sir Hu-kumchand Mannalal & Company was formed under a deed dated July 16, 1948 to carry on the business of "managing and selling agents" of Hukumchand Mills Ltd. Sir Hukum-chand and his son Rajkumar Singh were two of the five partners of the firm. They represented the interest of the Hindu undivided family of Sir Hukumchand and his sons. On March 31, 1950 the property of the Hindu undivided family was partitioned and the interest of the family in the partnership was taken over by a private limited company styled Sir Sarupchand Hukumchand Ltd.

2. For the assessment years 1950-51, 1951-52, 1952-53 and 1953-54 the Income-tax Officer granted registration of the firm under S. 26A of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. In 1954-55 the Income-tax Officer declined to grant registration. In appeal the Appellate Assistant Commissioner confirmed the order on the ground that two coparceners could not represent the interest of the Hindu undivided family in a partnership. The Tribunal reversed the order. They held that Sir Hukumchand and his son Rajkumar Singh were partners in the firm on behalf of the Hindu undivided family and there was nothing in law which prevented two or more coparceners of a Hindu undivided family representing the family from entering into a partnership with a stranger or strangers.

3. At the instance of the Commissioner of Income-tax the following question was referred by the Tribunal:

"Whether in the facts and circumstances of the case the firm Hukum-chand and Mannalal Company could be granted registration under S. 26A of the Act?"

The High Court answered the question in the affirmative. The Commissioner of Income-tax has appealed to this Court with certificate granted by the High Court.

4. In Ram Laxman Sugar Mills
v. Commr. of Income-tax, U. P., (1967)
66 ITR 613 (SC) this Court observed:

"A Hindu undivided family is a "person" within the meaning of the Indian Income-tax Act: it is however not a juristic person for all purposes, and cannot enter into an agreement of partnership with either another undivided family or individual. It is open to the manager of a joint Hindu family as representing the family to agree to become a partner with another person. The partnership agreement in that case is between the manager and the other person, and by the partnership agreement no member of the family except the manager acquires a right or interest in the partnership.
The junior members of the family may make a claim against the manager for treating the income or profits received from the partnership as a joint family asset, but they cannot claim to exercise the rights of partners nor be liable as partners."

This position in law was not disputed on behalf of the Commissioner. But it was urged that since two members of a coparcenary represented in the firm the same beneficial interest of a Hindu undivided family, and since they were incompetent to enter into a contract inter se, the partnership agreement could not be registered. There is no substance in that contention. In Pich-appa Chettiar v. Chokalingam Pillai, AIR 1934 PC 192 the Judicial Committee observed approving the observations made in Mayne's Hindu Law (9th Edn.) at p. 398 to the following effect:

"Where a managing member of a joint family enters into a partnership with a stranger the other members of the family do not ipso facto become partners in the business so as to clothe them with all the rights and obligations of a partner as defined by the Indian Contract Act, in such a case the family as a unit does not become a partner, but only such of its members as in fact enter into a contractual relationship with the stranger: the partnership will be governed by the Act."

It is clearly enunciated that one or more members of a Hindu undivided family may enter into a contractual relationship in the nature of a partnership with a stranger and they qua the stranger become partners. The view expressed by the Judicial Committee was approved by this Court in Charandas Haridas v. Commr. of Income-tax, Bombay North, Kutch and Saurashtra, Ahmedabad, 39 ITR 202 = (AIR 1960 SC 910).

5. The Indian Contract Act imposes no disability upon members of a Hindu undivided family in the matter of entering into a contract inter se or with a stranger. A member of a Hindu undivided family has the same liberty of contract as any other individual: it is restricted only in the manner and to the extent provided by the Indian Contract Act. Partnership is under Section 4 of the Partnership Act the relation between persons who have agreed to share the profits of a business carried on by all or any of them acting for all: if such a relation exists, it will not be invalid merely because two or more of the persons who have so agreed are members of a Hindu undivided family. It is now settled law that in considering an application for registration of a firm, the Income-tax Officer is not concerned to determine in whom the beneficial interest in the share in the partnership vests, Commr. of Income-tax v. A. Abdul Rahim & Co., 55 ITR 651 = (AIR 1965 SC 1703); Commr. of Income-tax, Madras v. Bagyalakashmi & Co., 55 ITR 660 = (AIR 1965 SC 1708).

6. In our judgment, the High Court was right in answering the question in the affirmative.

7. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Adi Pherozshah Gandhi, Appellant v. H. M. Seervai, Advocate General of Maharashtra, Bombay, Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 2259 of 1969, D/-21-8-1970.

(A) Advocates Act (1961), Sec. 37 (1) — "Person aggrieved" — Advocate General appearing in pursuance of notice under Section 35 (2) is not a person aggrieved — (Decision of Bar Council of India, Reversed) — (Per majority; Vaidialingam and Ray JJ. contra).

(Per majority; Vaidialingam and Ray, JJ. Contra). The Advocate-General of a State who appears before the disciplinary committee of a State Bar Council in pursuance of a notice given to him under Section 35 (2) is not a "person aggrieved" within the meaning of the words used in Section 37 because the State Bar Council takes the view, whatever be its reasoning, that an advocate on its roll has not been guilty of any misconduct. The entertaining of complaints, the inquiry into them and the punishment to be meted out to the advocate are all concerns of the Bar Council. The Advocate-General no doubt is entitled to a hearing if the complaint is not rejected summarily. It is only when he feels that a case requires a careful investigation and proper elucidation of the facts or the exposition of the law on the subject that he is called upon to render all assistance in the proceedings. When he chooses to do so, he does his duty by appearing at the hearing and putting before the disciplinary committee the facts in their proper perspective and advancing the proper inference to be drawn therefrom. Once he does so there is an end of the matter so far as he is concerned. Neither is he interested in prosecuting the matter further if he takes the view that the punishment meted is not commensurate with the misconduct of the advocate. A decision by the disciplinary committee cannot necessarily be said to raise a point of public interest merely because the Advocate-General feels that it is erroneous or that he himself would have arrived at a different conclusion. An Advocate-General in India is not the guardian angel of the Bar, nor is he champion of public interest in any matter save as specified in a statute. Case law discussed.

Decision of Bar Council of India, Reversed. Observations in AIR 1955 SC 223 that in an appeal arising out of proceedings under the Bar Councils Act the Advocate-General is the appropriate party held not correct.

HIDAYATULLAH, C. J.: I agree with the judgment delivered by my brother Mitter but in view of the importance of the question and the difference between my brethren I have chosen to express myself separately.

2. We heard this appeal on a preliminary point raised by the appellant that the appeal of the Advocate-General of Maharashtra filed before the Bar Council of India was incompetent as the Advocate-General did not fall within the expression a 'person aggrieved' to whom alone is given the right of appeal under Section 37 of the Advocates Act of 1961, against the orders of the Disciplinary Committee of the Bar Council of the State.

3. The facts necessary to bring out the controversy may be briefly stated. The appellant is an advocate from Maharashtra. The Bar Council of the State of Maharashtra had called upon him suo motu to show cause why he should not be held guilty of misconduct. It appears that the appellant was convicted before a Summary Court in London on a charge of pilfering some articles from departmental stores and sentenced to a fine. The record of the proceedings in London was not before the Bar Council of the State and action was taken on the basis of a brief report of the incident in a newspaper. The appellant explained before the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of the State that he was the victim of a misunderstanding but as he had no means of defending himself effectively he was found guilty and received a light sentence of fine. He explained how he had fallen into this unfortunate predicament and did not know how to extricate himself. The order of the Summary Court was not a speaking order and the proceedings were summary. The disciplinary committee were satisfied that there was no reason to hold him guilty of professional or other misconduct. They, therefore, ordered that proceedings be filed.

4. The Advocate-General of the State, who was sent a notice of the proceedings, as is required by the second sub-section of Section 35, and had appeared before the committee, purporting to act under Section 37 of the Act filed an appeal before the Bar Council of India. It was heard by the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of India. The advocate objected that the Advocate-General had no locus standi to file the appeal. The objection was overruled and the appeal was accepted. The advocate was held guilty of misconduct and suspended for a year from practice. The advocate now appeals under Section 33 of the Act to this Court. His appeal raises questions of merit but he contends at the threshold that the Advocate-General was not competent to file the appeal under Section 37 of the Act.

5. The point in controversy before the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of India and now before us, is a short one. It is: whether the Advocate-General can be said to be a 'person aggrieved' by the order of the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of the State? Having heard this point in detail we took time to consider. I am of the opinion that it must be held in favour of the advocate and the order of the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of India, now under appeal before us, must be set aside on this short ground without going into the merits of the case.

6. Section 37 of the Advocates Act, 1961 reads:

"37. Appeal to the Bar Council of India. (1) Any person aggrieved by an order of the disciplinary committee of a State Bar Council made under Section 35 may, within sixty days of the date of the communication of the order to him, prefer an appeal to the Bar Council of India.

(2) Every such appeal shall be heard by the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of India which may pass such order thereon as it deems fit".

7. The expression a 'person aggrieved' is not new, nor has it occurred for the first time in the Advocates' Act. In fact it occurs in several Indian Acts and in British Statutes for more than a hundred years. In the latter a right of appeal to a 'person aggrieved' is conferred in diverse contexts. It occurs in the Ale House Act, the Bankruptcy Acts, Copyright Act, Highway Act, Licensing Acts, Milk and Dairies (Amendment) Act, Rating and Valuation Act, Summary Jurisdiction Act, Union Committee Act, Local Acts, in certiorari proceedings and the Defence of Realm Regulations to mention only a few. The list of Indian Acts is equally long.

8. As a result of the frequent use of this rather vague phrase, which practice, as Lord Parker pointed out in Ealing Corporation v. Jones, 1959-1 QB 384 has not been avoided, in spite of the confusion it causes, selections from the observations of Judges expounding the phrase in the context of these varied statutes were cited before us for our acceptance. The observations often conflict since they were made in different contexts and involved the special standing of the party claiming the right of appeal. Yet these definitions are not entirely without value for they disclose a certain unanimity on the essential features of this phrase, even in the diversity of the contexts. The font and origo of the discussion is the well-known de-definition of the phrase by James L. J. in In Re Sidebotham Ex p. Sidebotham, (1880) 14 Ch D 458. It was observed that the words 'person aggrieved' in Section 71 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869 meant:

"not really a person who is disappointed of a benefit which he might have received if some order had been made. A 'person aggrieved' must be a man who had suffered a legal grievance, a man against whom a decision has been pronounced which had wrongfully deprived him of something, or wrongfully refused him something or wrongfully affected his title to something".

The important words in this definition are "a benefit which he might have received" and "a legal grievance" against the decision which "wrongfully deprives him of something" or affects "his title to something".

9. The definition was held in later cases to be not exhaustive and several other features of the phrase were pointed out. Thus under the Bankruptcy Acts, where the Board of Trade summoned to support the validity of the appointment of a trustee, went before the Judge, and failed, it was considered a person aggrieved on the principle that a person who is brought before the Court to submit to its decision, but not a person who is heard in a dispute between others must be treated as a person aggrieved (see In Re Lamb, Ex p. Board of Trade, (1894) 2 QB 805 at p. 812 per Lord Esher). Here again the words to notice are 'brought before the Court to submit to its decision', that is to say, a person who is in the nature of a party as contradistinguished from a person who is next described as 'a person who is heard in a dispute between others.' To distinguish between these two positions I may refer to a few more decisions. In In Re Kitson; Ex p. Sugden (Thomas) and Sons Ltd., (1911) 2 KB 109 at pp. 112-114, it was further explained that "the mere fact that an order is wrongly made does not of itself give a grievance to a person not otherwise aggrieved". (per Philimore, J.) It was added that a person deprived of the fruits of litigation which he had instituted in the hope for them, is a person aggrieved. Similarly, a creditor who did not wish an adjudication order to be made was held not to be a 'person aggrieved' — See In Re Baron Ex p. Debtor v. Official Receiver, 1943 Ch 177. The utmost that this series of cases goes is to be found in the observations of James, L. J. in Ellis Ex p. Ellis, (1876) 2 Ch 797 that even a person not bound by the order of adjudication must be treated as a 'person aggrieved' if the order embarrasses him. In a later case In Re Woods; Ex p. Ditton, (1879) 40 LT 297 Cotton L. J. held that even so the person must be aggrieved by the very order and not by any of the consequences that ensue. This was clarified in R. v. London County Keepers of the Peace and Justices, (1890) 25 QBD 357 at p. 361 by Lord Coleridge, C. J. while dealing with the Highway Act, denying the right of appeal in these words:

"Is a person who cannot succeed in getting a conviction against another a 'person aggrieved'? He may be annoyed at finding that what he thought was a breach of the law is not a breach of law; but is he aggrieved because some one is held not to have done wrong? It is difficult to see that the section meant anything of the kind. The section does not give an appeal to anybody but a person who is by the direct act of the Magistrate 'aggrieved' — that is who has had something done or determined against him by the Magistrate".

These observations again show that the person must himself suffer a grievance, or must be aggrieved by the very order because it affects him.

10. Two cases which may usefully be seen in the same context may next be mentioned. In Jennings v. Kelly, (1940) AC 206 in relation to the Government of Ireland Act, 1920, Lord Wright did say that if a person was treated in certiorari proceedings as a competent party and notice was served on him as being a proper party he would be a person aggrieved. The point to bear in mind is that the person must be treated as a party. However the force of the observation was considerably weakened because the party there was ordered to pay costs and the right of appeal was held to be available on that limited ground. Further qualification is to be found in In Re Riviere's Trade Mark, (1884)

26 Ch D 48 where Lord Selborne observed:

"..... it must be a legal grievance it must not be a stet pro ratione voluntas; the applicant must not come merely saying 'I do not like this thing to be done', it must be shown that it tends to his injury, or to his damage, in the legal sense of the word".

The locus standi of the person aggrieved must be found from his position in the first proceeding and his grievance must arise from that standing taken with the effect of the order on him.

11. These cases are of course far removed from the one before me and as Bramwell L. J. observed in Robinson v. Currey, (1881) 7 QBD 465 at p. 470, the expression is nowhere defined and, therefore, must be construed by reference to the context of the enactment in which it appears and all the circumstances. He pointed out that 'the words are ordinary English words, which are to have the ordinary meaning put upon them'.

12. From these cases it is apparent that any person who feels disappointed with the result of the case is not a 'person aggrieved'. He must be disappointed of a benefit which he would have received if the order had gone the other way. The order must cause him a legal grievance by wrongfully depriving him of something. It is no doubt a legal grievance and not a grievance about material matters but his legal grievance must be a tendency to injure him. That the order is wrong or that it acquits some one who he thinks ought to be convicted does not by itself give rise to a legal grievance. These principles are gathered from the cases cited and do not, as I shall show later, do violence to the context in which the phrase occurs in the Advocates' Act. Although I am aware that in Seven Oaks Urban District Council v. Twynam, 1929-2 KB 440 at p. 443, Lord Hewart C. J. uttered words of caution, again emphasised by Lord Parker C. J. in 1959-1 QB 384 (supra), in applying too readily the definitions given in relation to other statutes but I do not think I am going beyond what Lord Hewart, C. J. said and what Lord Parker C. J. did in the case. Lord Parker observed:

"..... As Lord Hewart C. J. pointed out in 1929-2 KB 440: 'But as has been said again and again there is often little utility in seeking to interpret particular expressions in one statute by reference to decisions given upon similar expressions in different statutes which have been enacted alio intuitu. The problem with which we are concerned is not, what is the meaning of the expression 'aggrieved' in any one of a dozen other statutes, but what is its meaning in this part of this statute?' Accordingly, I only look at the cases to which we have been referred to see if there are general principles which can be extracted which will guide the Court in approaching the question as to what the words "person aggrieved" mean in any particular statute".

If I may say respectfully I fully endorse this approach. I am now in a position to examine the Advocates' Act but before I do so I must refer to a case near in point to this case, than any case considered before.

13. The case is reported in Attorney General of the Gambia v. Pierre Saar N'Jie, 1961 AC 617. A legal practitioner was held guilty of professional misconduct but was acquitted on appeal and an appeal was taken to the Judicial Committee against the decision of the West African Court of Appeal. This involved consideration of whether the Attorney General could be said to be a 'person aggrieved'. The facts need to be stated a little fully as both sides rely upon the observations of Lord Denning and they need to be explained carefully.

14. A barrister (a member of the English Bar) and also a Solicitor (the two professions appear to be united in the Gambia) practising in the Supreme Court of the Gambia was charged with professional misconduct and an order was made, September 22, 1958, by the Deputy Judge (Abbot J) striking off his name from the roll of that Court, and directing that the matter be reported to the Masters of the Bench of his Inn. On June 5, 1959 the West African Court of Appeal (Bairamian, Ag. P. Hurley Ag. J. A. and Ames Ag. J. A.) set aside the order on the ground that the Deputy Judge had no jurisdiction. The Attorney General of the Gambia thereupon sought leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council but this was refused. Then a petition was made for special leave. Special leave was granted subject to the preliminary objection by the respondent that no appeal lay at the instance of the Attorney General. The preliminary objection was rejected.

15. Section 31 of the West African (Appeal to Privy Council) Order in Council 1949 under which special leave was asked reads:

"Nothing in this order contained shall be deemed to interfere with the right of His Majesty upon the humble petition of any person aggrieved by any judgment of the Court, to admit his appeal therefrom upon such conditions as His Majesty in Council shall think fit to impose".

In the Gambia disciplinary jurisdiction over barristers and solicitors is embodied in Rules of the Supreme Court, 1928. Under those rules the 'Supreme Court' Judge (and there is only one) admits and enrolls barristers and solicitors of the Court, and Sch. I, Order 9, Rule 7 says that:—

"The Judge shall have power, for reasonable cause, to suspend any barrister or solicitor from practising within the jurisdiction of the Court for any specified period, or order his name to be struck off the roll of Court".

Then there is the West African Court of Appeal and it hears appeals from the 'Supreme Court' in civil and criminal matters. In an earlier case in which a certain Mr. Macauley was struck off the roll of the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone and Mr. Macauley sought to appeal to the Full Court of West Africa it was ruled by the Full Court that the decision of the Chief Justice was not a decision of the 'Supreme Court' and was, therefore, not appealable and that the only remedy was to obtain special leave to appeal to the Privy Council (see Macauley v. Judges of the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone, 1928 AC 344). The legislature then added Section 14 which provided:

"An appeal shall lie to the Court of Appeal from any order of the Judge suspending a barrister or solicitor of the Supreme Court from practice or striking his name off the roll, and for the purposes of any such appeal any such order shall be deemed to be an order of the Supreme Court".

The words of the section show that the legislature did not regard a decision in disciplinary matters as a judgment of a Court but only deemed it to be so.

16. The Full Court on the appeal of N'Jie from the order of the Deputy Judge held that a Deputy Judge could not deal with any matter which was not a proceeding in the Court in the exercise of judicial power. The Judicial Committee held that this was exercise of judicial power. Then the preliminary objection was considered. The objection was that the Attorney General had no locus standi not being a 'person aggrieved'. This was overruled by the Judicial Committee.

17. Lord Denning referred to the definition of James L. J. in (1880) 14 Ch. D. 458 (supra) and said that if the definition were to be regarded as exhaustive and were held applicable, an 'aggrieved person' would be only a person who was a party to a lis, a controversy inter partes and had a decision given against him. The Attorney General would not come within this restricted definition as there was no suit between two parties when disciplinary proceedings were started ex mero motu by the Court or at the instance of the Attorney General or some one against a legal practitioner. But the definition of James L. J. was not exhaustive and the words 'person aggrieved' were of wide import and should not be subjected to a restricted interpretation. They included not a busy body but certainly one who had a genuine grievance because an order had been made which prejudicially affected his interests. Posing the question 'did the Attorney General have a sufficient interest', the Judicial Committee answered he had. The Attorney General in a Colony represented the Crown as the guardian of public interest and it was his duty to bring before the Judge a case of misconduct to warrant action. Then Lord Denning proceeded to distinguish two kinds of cases to determine if the Attorney General would be a 'person aggrieved'. The first was a case where the Judge acquitted the practitioner. In such a case no appeal was open to the Attorney General under the Supreme Court Ordinance, and Lord Denning added "He has done his duty and is not aggrieved". In other words, he did not come within the words of the 31st section of the Order in Council. The Attorney General could not, therefore, ask for special leave as a 'person aggrieved'. But the case was different if the Judge found the practitioner guilty and a Court of Appeal reversed the decision on a ground which went to the root of the jurisdiction of the Judge or was otherwise a point in which the public interest was involved. In that case the Attorney General was a 'person aggrieved'.

18. The observations of Lord Denning clearly meant that the Attorney General could not pose as a 'person aggrieved' to seek to bring a simple case of acquittal for reversal by the Judicial Committee under the 31st section of the Order in Council for he could not be regarded as a 'person aggrieved'. The remark was made perhaps to repel an argument that every case of acquittal would make the Attorney General an 'aggrieved person'. Lord Denning said that this was not the true position. The Attorney General could only move the Judge and there his duty ended. The law gave him no express right of appeal and he could not claim to be a 'person aggrieved'. He could only invoke the 31st section if he could make out his grievance and it was found to be as a person representing the Crown and the guardian of public interest seeking to get reversed a decision which struck at the root of the jurisdiction of the disciplinary Judge, by denying that the Deputy Judge was exercising judicial power under Section 7 of the Supreme Court Ordinance. The Crown was aggrieved by this decision and the Attorney General representing the Crown was an 'aggrieved person'.

19. The scheme of the law under which the disciplinary action was taken and the appeal to the Privy Council was brought gave the true connotation of the expression 'person aggrieved'. In those cases in which no question of public interest was involved the Attorney General even if he had moved the Judge and got an adverse decision could not be regarded as aggrieved but in a case in which, apart from the merits of the case against the practitioner, some grave question of public importance was involved, the Attorney General representing the Crown could be regarded as a 'person aggrieved'.

19A. It was presumably after reading this case and understanding it as I have done, that the Advocate-General set about making out a question of public importance. He did not seem only to get the decision overturned on facts. This is what he said:

"The appellant has filed this appeal as the Advocate-General of Maharashtra. Under the Advocates Act, 1961, (as under the Indian Bar Councils Act, 1926), the Advocate General represents the public interest in every disciplinary inquiry. Under Section 35 of the Advocates Act, 1961, the Advocate General is entitled to notice in respect of every disciplinary inquiry, is entitled to have an opportunity of being heard before the disciplinary committee passes any order. This appeal raises very important questions of principle as regards the effect of a conviction of an Indian Advocate of an offence recognised by all civilised countries as an offence involving moral turpitude. The question raised also related to the requirements of natural justice in a criminal Court, and the effect of the judgments of the Supreme Court on the subject. It raises the further question whether an Indian Advocate convicted of an offence involving moral turpitude by a Court outside India is immune from disciplinary action because of minor differences of procedure in such countries where such trial has been held in complete accord with principles of natural justice. The profession of an advocate is an honourable profession and the disciplinary provisions of the Advocate Act are designed to secure that persons guilty of offences involving moral turpitude are subject to appropriate disciplinary action".

20. It is obvious that the Advocate-General has attempted to use the observations of Lord Denning in the Gambia case and wishes to plead that he enjoys a special position in the Bar and under the Advocates Act and therefore is entitled to appeal as a 'person aggrieved'. This was the line adopted by Mr. M. C. Setalvad, counsel for the Bar Council of India. On the other hand, Mr. V. S. Desai appearing for the Advocate General argued that the Advocate-General having notice of disciplinary proceedings, in any event, must be treated as a 'person aggrieved' within Sections 35 and 38 of the Advocates' Act. I shall consider the narrow question presented by Mr. Setalvad later. I shall first take up for consideration the larger question and the more general application of the expression 'person aggrieved'.

21. In support of his contention Mr. V. S. Desai cited three cases from this Court, one from the Judicial Committee and one from the Bombay High Court. They all relate to disciplinary proceedings and I may begin by considering them.

22. The case of the Privy Council reported in Advocate General of Bombay v. Phiroz Rustamji Bharucha, 37 Bom LR 722 = (AIR 1935 PC 168) was next cited. It was an application for special leave by the Advocate General of Bombay in a proceeding relating to professional misconduct of an advocate. The standing of the Advocate General was questioned. The report in the Bombay Law Reporter Series, 37 Bom LR 722 = (AIR 1935 PC 168) reproduces more fully the arguments than the official report and we were referred to the arguments. The point was not debated and there does not appear to be a pronouncement on this point either during the course of argument or in the judgment since special leave was refused on another ground. Mr. Desai says that if the Judicial Committee had found substance in this objection they would have ruled out the Advocate General on this ground alone. There is no reason to think that the objection was considered at all. I cannot derive any assistance from this ruling because the prerogative of the Crown to grant special leave as of grace in any case was always there irrespective of the standing of the Advocate General. The Privy Council often granted special leave and even heard appeals on certificates wrongly granted. (See Sevak Jeranchod Bhogilal v. Dakore Temple Committee, AIR 1925 PC 155 and the cases collected in Halsbury Laws of England (3rd Edn) Vol. 9 p. 380 paragraph 886 note (h)). This prerogative the Judicial Committee has exercised on behalf of the Crown particularly in cases of general interest (see ibid p. 379 S. 885 note (s)). The provisions of the former Section 112 of the Code of Civil Procedure show the extent of the prerogative. Therefore because the Privy Council refused special leave on one ground rather than another cannot import a rejection of the objection as to the standing of the Advocate General.

23. Next we have an unreported decision of a Division Bench of this Court reported in B. M. Madani v. Commissioner of Workmen's Compensation Bombay, Civil Appeal No. 877 of 1968, D/- 8-10-1968 (SC). In that case the appeal was taken by the Commissioner for enhancement of penalties against the delinquent advocate and the penalty was in fact increased. This Court held that he was entitled to do so as a 'person aggrieved'. The particular misconduct was committed in relation to a claimant before the Commissioner. The Advocate had pocketed the travelling allowance granted by the Commissioner to the widow of a deceased workman. There may be some doubt whether the Commissioner was a 'person aggrieved' by the penalty imposed in the first instance but I do not pursue this matter. The case can be justified on the dictum in some cases that a party which moves the Court or a person brought before the Court to be bound by its order may be a 'person aggrieved'. See for example the case of the Official Receiver in Re Payne Ex. p. Castle Mail Packets Co., (1886) 18 QBD 154 and In Re Lamb Ex p. Board of Trade already considered by me. Madani's case, C. A. No. 877 of 1968, D/- 8-10-1968 (SC) does not help to resolve the dispute centering round the Advocate-General.

24. The next case is reported in Bhataraju Nageshwara Rao v. Hon'ble Judges of the Madras High Court, 1955-1 SCR 1055 = (AIR 1955 SC 223). That case arose under the Bar Councils Act, 1926 when the Judges exercised disciplinary power. In the case before the Supreme Court the Judges of the Madras High Court were shown as respondents. This Court observed at page 1064 (of SCR) = (at p. 227 of AIR) as follows:

"Before parting with this appeal we desire to say that it appears to us that it was wholly wrong and inappropriate for the appellant to have made the Honourable Judges of the Madras High Court respondents to this appeal. It appears that in some cases involving contempt of Court the Honourable Judges have been made parties. It is not necessary for us to express any opinion on this occasion as to the propriety of that procedure in contempt cases but we are clearly of the opinion that in an appeal arising out of a proceeding under the Bar Councils Act the appropriate parties should be the advocate concerned, the complainant, if any, the Bar Council or the secretary thereof and the Advocate-General of the State concerned to whom notices have to be issued under Section 12 (3) of the Indian Bar Councils Act".

This does not advance the case of the Advocate-General of Maharashtra any further.

25. The last case of this Court is Municipal Corporation of the City of Bombay v. Chandulal Shamaldas Patel, Civil Appeal No. 1716 of 1967, D/- 1-8-1970 (SC). In land acquisition cases started for the benefit of the Municipal Corporation certain notifications issued under the Land Acquisition Act were set aside by the High Court, and the Municipal Corporation sought to appeal. It was held not to be a 'person aggrieved'. This case, even if I were to accept it as correctly decided, does not assist us in relation to our Act passed with a different intent and purpose and using the words in another context.

26. The last case is from Bombay but it did not discuss the point and cannot be held to have laid down a precedent. It is useless to refer to it.

27. I now proceed to examine the larger question whether by reason of the provisions of the Advocates Act the Advocate-General of the State enjoys such position that he must necessarily be treated as a 'person aggrieved' entitling him to file an appeal. For this purpose we have to examine critically the provisions of the Act to discover if the claim can be entertained.

28. The Advocates Act was passed to amend and consolidate the law relating to legal practitioners and to provide for the constitution of Bar Councils and an All India Bar. It replaced the earlier Acts governing the legal profession particularly the Indian Bar Councils Act, 1926. Prior to the passing of the Advocates Act, the enrolment and discipline of legal practitioners was in the hands of the Courts and in the case of the advocates the High Court entertained and determined cases of misconduct against them. Now this jurisdiction is completely transferred to the Bar Councils of the States and the Bar Council of India. In the Bar Councils of the States (except Delhi) the Advocate-General of the State is an ex officio member. In Delhi the Additional Solicitor-General takes the place of the Advocate-General. Other members are elected. In the Bar Council of India, the Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General are ex officio members and the other members are elected one each by the State Bar Councils. In the Union Territory of Delhi the Additional Solicitor-General is ex officio member. The functions of the Advocate-General are not different from those of the other members in so far as the affairs of the Bar Council are concerned. The only matters where the Advocate-General, the Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General and the Additional Solicitor-General are mentioned are these. The Act gives a right of pre-audience over other advocates to the Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General, the Additional Solicitor-General and the Advocate-General. The right of pre-audience gives them a standing for hearing of cases but does not confer on them any other rights. The magniloquent phrases such as Leader of the Bar, Keeper of the Conscience of the Bar have no meaning neither now, nor before under the Bar Councils Act of 1926. They are just honorific titles given by courtesy but are not grounded on law. Indeed the Keepers of the Conscience of the Bar are the Bar Councils and the Leader of the Bar may be someone who may even have refused to accept Advocate-Generalship.

29. The functions of the Bar Councils of the States and the Bar Council of India throw some light on the remaining functions of the Advocate-General and may first be seen. Section 6 of the Act lays down the functions of the State Bar Council and

Section 7 those of the Bar Council of India. Apart from certain administrative functions which these councils, which are bodies corporate, perform, their functions in relation to the Bar are somewhat different. Both have their own rolls and they prepare and maintain the rolls. The State Bar Council entertains and determines cases of misconduct of advocates on its roll and safeguards the rights, privileges and interests of advocates on its roll. The Bar Council of India lays down the standards of professional conduct and etiquette of advocates, the procedure to be followed by its disciplinary committee and the disciplinary committee of each of the State Bar Councils. The Bar Council of India also safeguards the rights and privileges and interests of advocates and exercises general supervision and control over State Bar Councils. It also deals with and disposes of any matter arising under the Advocates Act which may be referred to it by a State Bar Council. There are other functions which relate to the education etc., of those who wish to join the legal profession. The Bar Council of India maintains a common roll of advocates. The Bar Councils also decide in relation to their rolls all questions of seniority. The State Bar Councils and the Bar Council of India constitute one or more disciplinary committees and under Chapter V questions of the conduct of advocates on their respective rolls are referred to them. The disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of India exercises superior powers inasmuch as it hears appeals from the orders of the disciplinary committees of the State Bar Councils and may even of its own motion withdraw for inquiry before itself for disposal, any proceedings for disciplinary action against an advocate pending before the disciplinary committee of any State Bar Council.

30. The disciplinary proceedings commence both before the State Bar Council and the Bar Council of India on a complaint or otherwise made respectively to the State Bar Council or the Bar Council of India. The Bar Councils in either case refer them for disposal to their respective disciplinary committees. The disciplinary committee in each case can reject the complaint summarily, but if it proceeds to hear the matter further it causes a notice thereof to be sent to the advocate concerned and to the Advocate-General of the State or the Attorney-General of India, as the case may be. The disciplinary committee after giving the advocate concerned and the Advocate-General or the Attorney-General, as the case may be, an opportunity to be heard, makes an order either dismissing the complaint or where the proceedings are found to be not fit for consideration and are started at the instance of the Bar Council, ordering that they may be filed. The committee may, if the advocate is found guilty, reprimand him or suspend him from practice for such period as it deems fit, or may remove him altogether from the roll of advocates. The Advocate-General or the Attorney-General, as the case may be, need not appear personally but may appear through an advocate.

31. From the decision of the disciplinary committee of the State Bar Council an appeal lies to the Bar Council of India which is heard by the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of India which may pass such orders thereon as it deems fit. From the decision of the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of India an appeal lies to this Court. The appeals can be taken by a 'person aggrieved' by the order of the disciplinary committee of the State Bar Council or the Bar Council of India, as the case may be. It is in this context that we have to determine whether the Advocate-General can be regarded as a 'person aggrieved.'

32. In view of the common roll maintained by the Bar Council of India it appears to me that if anybody represents the Bar it would be the Bar Council of India and in the case of the States, the Bar Council of the State. The Advocate-General has no right to speak on behalf of the body of the advocates as if he represented them and their interests. Neither is this privilege expressly conferred on him, nor can it be implied from any of the provisions of the Act. The question, therefore, arises: in what capacity does the Advocate General appear before a disciplinary committee? It is obvious that he is not a prosecutor on behalf of the Bar Council because if he was one, his presence would be more necessary at the stage at which the disciplinary committee considers in limine to decide whether the matter should be proceeded with at all. The next question is: why is he summoned at all? In my opinion, the Advocate-General is not noticed and brought before the court because he is a prosecutor or is to be bound by the order of the disciplinary committee. He represents no interest there and is heard merely because he is the chief counsel of the State and therefore his assistance at the hearing is useful. The fact that he need not appear by himself and may appear through an advocate renders his position a little weaker in the matter of his grievance. If he is to be treated as a 'person aggrieved' he must argue the case himself. The fact that he appears through a counsel shows that the intention is merely to have the opinion of a person who is neither siding with the complainant nor with the advocate and who will thus have unbiased and impartial approach to the case. The Advocate-General is generally a lawyer of some standing having made a mark in the profession and his contribution to the deliberations of the disciplinary committee is welcome because thus the disciplinary committee is helped to reach a proper conclusion.

33. If he is not a person summoned to be bound by the order but a person who is heard in a dispute between others merely to be of assistance in reaching the right conclusion he can hardly have a grievance. The Advocate-General must after he has done his duty leave the matter to the complainant and the advocate or the Bar Council to take the matter further if they choose. In no event the Advocate-General is in the nature of a party having independent rights which he can claim are injured by the decision. The decision does not deny him anything nor does it ask him to do anything. It is thus that Lord Denning says that in these disciplinary proceedings the Attorney-General is not a party as in a lis and after the decision, his duty ends. Lord Denning points this out clearly by saying that the Advocate-General in that case could not have been aggrieved by the order of the Deputy Judge if he had acquitted the delinquent advocate in that case. The Attorney-General's interest was found by Lord Denning in relation to the Crown and the Colony and that too for the special reason that appeal court had denied that the Deputy Judge possessed jurisdiction to hear the case. In our country the Advocate-General does not represent the Executive or the Legislature or the Judiciary in disciplinary proceedings before the disciplinary committee. His function is advisory and more akin to an amicus curiae. He is not to take sides except in so far his arguments lend weight to the case of the one side or that of the other. Beyond that he is not interested in the dispute either in his personal capacity or in his capacity as an Advocate-General. He does not represent the Government in these proceedings. If the Government was interested the notice would have gone to it. In other statutes, where the Central Government is vitally interested, as for example, in the Chartered Accountants' Act, the notice does not go to the Advocate-General but to Government and the government appears through the Advocate-General. The Advocate General under the Act finishes his duty when the hearing is over and he cannot be considered to be a party interested or a 'person aggrieved'. I do not find anything in the Act which indicates that the Advocate-General is to be treated as a 'person aggrieved' by a decision whether in favour of the advocate or against him. Indeed it would have been the easiest thing to give a right of appeal to the Advocate-General eo nomine without including him in the compendious phrase a 'person aggrieved'. If he is not noticed, the order would be held to deny him something which the law entitled him to. That is quite different. The larger proposition contended for by Mr. Desai is therefore not acceptable to me.

34. This brings me to the narrow ground on which Mr. Setalvad very properly rested the case of the Bar Council of India. That narrow ground is that in this case there were several points of general public interest which needed to be solved and therefore, if the decision of the disciplinary committee of the State Bar Council was wrong, the Advocate-General in the public interest could take the matter further. I do not think that I can subscribe to this approach either in this case. The Advocate-General presented his views that a conviction in England showed moral turpitude in the advocate. I do not think that this inference necessarily follows. The advocate explained that he was held guilty in a summary court and received a small fine because he was not in a position to prove his innocence before the Magistrate.

35. Now in disciplinary proceedings the advocate was not estopped from questioning the charge that he was guilty of corrupt practice. In a civil proceeding the decision of a criminal court is not res judicata. To give an example, if a person is involved in a traffic offence in which some one is injured he may in the criminal court receive a light sentence but if he is sued in a civil court for heavy damages he can plead and prove that he was not negligent or that accident was due to the contributory negligence of the defendant. The decision of the criminal court would not preclude him from raising this issue before the civil court.

36. The advocate here explained that he was held guilty before the Magistrate in the circumstances in which he was placed. The fact of his conviction, as well as his full statement bearing on his conduct were before the disciplinary committee of the State Bar Council. They had to choose between the two, that is to say, the result of a summary trial without going into merits and proof of the misconduct. Having examined the advocate and seen the record, the disciplinary committee of the State Bar Council chose to accept the plea of the advocate and held that he was not guilty. They were also satisfied that the summary proceedings in the criminal trial in England offended against the principles of natural justice. They were entitled to this view on which much can be said on both sides. If the Advocate-General's view of the case was not accepted by the disciplinary committee he could not have any grievance. He could not make this into his own cause or a cause on behalf of persons he did not represent. He had done his duty and the matter should have rested there. For this reason I am of the view that in this case the Advocate-General was not a 'person aggrieved' within the meaning of S. 37 of the Advocates' Act even on the narrow ground and the appeal filed by him before the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of India was incompetent.

37. The conclusion which I have reached does not mean that I have gone into the merits of the advocate's plea. Nor does it indicate that I, sitting as a Judge, would have accepted the plea of the advocate, if I were to decide the case on facts. That is a matter quite beside the point. I refer to the plea because it was raised and was accepted by his peers on the disciplinary committee.

38. I would, therefore, allow the appeal and set aside the order of the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of India.

MITTER, J.: — 39. (For himself and Shelat J.) On the basis of a news item in the Times of India of August 27, 1966 the Bar Council of Maharashtra in exercise of its powers under S. 35 of the Advocates Act, 1961 issued a notice to the appellant to face an inquiry into his conduct by its disciplinary committee. The said committee exonerated the appellant of the charge levelled against him and held that he was not guilty of any misconduct, professional or otherwise. Relying on the provisions of S. 37 of the said Act the Advocate-General of Maharashtra who had appeared before the said committee preferred an appeal to the Bar Council of India. The Disciplinary Committee of the Bar Council of India disagreed with the finding of the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of Maharashtra observing that the conduct of the appellant which was investigated into before the State Bar Council was quite undeserving of an advocate and directed his suspension from practice for a period of one year. The appellant has come up in appeal to this Court and has urged a preliminary point that the appeal by the Advocate-General to the Bar Council of India was incompetent and the finding and order of the disciplinary committee of the said body ought to be set aside on that ground alone without our going into the facts of the case.

40. Notice of this hearing was given to the Advocate-General and the Bar Councils of all the States as also the Attorney-General of India and we have had the benefit of arguments advanced before us not only on behalf of the Advocate-General for the State of Maharashtra but also on behalf of the Bar Council of India, the Attorney-General of India and some of the Advocates-General of the States.

41. The determination of this question depends on the interpretation of S. 37 of the Advocates Act, 1961 (hereinafter referred to as the 'Act'):

"(1) Any person aggrieved by an order of the disciplinary committee of a State Bar Council made under section 35 may, within sixty days of the date of the communication of the order to him, prefer an appeal to the Bar Council of India.

(2) Every such appeal shall be heard by the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of India which may pass such order thereon as it deems fit."

To put the matter in a nut-shell, the question is, "Is the Advocate-General of a State who appears before the disciplinary committee of a State Bar Council in pursuance of a notice given to him under S. 35 (2) of the Act 'a person aggrieved' within the meaning of the words used in S. 37?"

42. To decide this question we have to look into the Act to find out the role of the Advocate-General of a State in proceedings of this kind. The object of the Act is to amend and consolidate the law relating to legal practitioners and to provide for the constitution of Bar Councils and an All-India Bar. All the States and the Union territories are to be under the jurisdiction of named State Bar Councils and there is also to be a Bar Council of India for the territories to which the Act is extended. Generally speaking a State Bar Council is to consist of a number of members including the Advocate-General of the State ex officio, while the Attorney-General of India ex officio is to be a member of the Bar Council of India. The other members of the Bar Councils are to be elected in terms of the Act. Under S. 6 the functions of a State Bar Council are to be inter alia:

(a) to admit persons as advocates on its roll;

(b) to prepare and maintain such roll;

(c) to entertain and determine cases of misconduct against advocates on its roll.

Section 7 lays down the functions of the Bar Council of India which are to be inter alia:

(a) to prepare and maintain a common roll of advocates;

(b) to lay down standards of professional conduct and etiquette for advocates; and

(c) to lay down the procedure to be followed by its disciplinary committee and the disciplinary committee of each State Bar Council.

Under S. 9 a Bar Council has to constitute one or more disciplinary committees each of which is to consist of three persons of whom two are to be persons elected by the Council from amongst its members and the third is to be a person co-opted by the Council from amongst advocates possessing the qualifications specified in the proviso to sub-s. (2) of S. 3 but is not a member of the council. Section 15 empowers Bar Councils to make rules to carry out the purposes of the Act. Chap. III of the Act containing Ss. 16 to 28, provides for admission and enrolment of advocates, the determination of their seniority etc. The right of an advocate to practice is dealt with in Chapter IV. Chapter V which contains Sections 35 to 44 deals with the conduct of advocates. The relevant provisions thereof are set out as under—

"35 (1) Where on receipt of a complaint or otherwise a State Bar Council has reason to believe that any advocate on its roll has been guilty of professional or other misconduct, it shall refer the case for disposal to its disciplinary committee.

(2) The disciplinary committee of a State Bar Council, if it does not summarily reject the complaint, shall fix a date for the hearing of the case and shall cause a notice thereof to be given to the advocate concerned and to the Advocate-General of the State.

(3) The disciplinary committee of a State Bar Council after giving the advocate concerned and the Advocate-General an opportunity of being heard, may make any of the following orders, namely:—

(a) dismiss the complaint or, where the proceedings were initiated at the instance of the State Bar Council direct that the proceedings be filed;

(b) reprimand the advocate;

(c) suspend the advocate from practice for such period as it may deem fit;

(d) remove the name of the advocate from the State roll of advocates.

(4) x x x x

(5) Where any notice is issued to the Advocate-General under sub-section (2) the Advocate-General may appear before the disciplinary committee of the State Bar Council either in person or through any advocate appearing on his behalf.

37. supra.

38. Any person aggrieved by an order made by the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of India under section 36 or section 37 may, within sixty days of the date on which the order is communicated to him, prefer an appeal to the Supreme Court and the Supreme Court may pass such order thereon as it deems fit."

Section 42 gives the disciplinary committee of a Bar Council the same powers as are vested in a civil Court under the Code of Civil Procedure in respect of various matters including the summoning and enforcing the attendance of any person and examining him on oath, requiring discovery and production of documents etc. and under sub-section (2) all proceedings before a disciplinary committee of a Bar Council are to be deemed judicial proceedings within the meaning of sections 193 and 228 of the Indian Penal Code. Section 43 empowers the disciplinary committee of a Bar Council to make such order as to costs of any proceedings before it as it may deem fit. Section 44 gives the disciplinary committee power to review any order passed by it of its own motion or otherwise.

43. The above provisions of the Act make it clear that subject to a right of appeal to this Court under S. 38 the inquiry into charges of misconduct against an advocate is to be in the exclusive jurisdiction of the Bar Councils. Any complaint against the conduct of an advocate has to be preferred before a State Bar Council and when the council has reason to believe on the strength of such complaint that an advocate on its roll has been guilty of professional or other misconduct, it has to refer the case for disposal to its disciplinary committee. The council can take such a step of its own motion. Section 35 (1) shows that it is not obligatory on the State Bar Council to refer each and every complaint to the disciplinary committee. It has to be satisfied that there is a prima facie case for investigation. It can throw out a complaint if the same appears to be frivolous. Sub-s. (2) of S. 35 shows that it is not incumbent on the disciplinary committee of a State Bar Council to proceed further with the matter if it takes the view that the complaint is without substance. It is not obliged to call upon the advocate concerned to explain his conduct or to inform the Advocate-General that it has rejected the complaint summarily. It is only when the disciplinary committee is satisfied that the complaint ought not to be rejected out of hand that it has to fix a date for the hearing of the case and give notice thereof to the advocate concerned and to the Advocate-General of the State. It is mandatory on the disciplinary committee to give such a notice to both. Sub-sections (3) and (5) of Section 35 go to show that it is not incumbent on the Advocate-General to appear at the hearing and that it is within his discretion to appear either by himself or through another advocate of his choice and place his viewpoint before the disciplinary committee. He is not a party to the proceedings but he has a right to appear and to make submissions both on questions of fact and questions of law.

44. Section 37 does not in terms lay down who can prefer an appeal from the order of the disciplinary committee of the State Bar Council. There can be no doubt that the advocate against whom an order is made would be a person aggrieved. The State Bar Council cannot be such a person as the order is made by itself acting through its disciplinary committee. A member of the public may make a complaint to the State Bar Council against an advocate on the ground of loss or damage or any serious prejudice caused to him by the advocate, be it negligence or fraud e.g. collusion with the opponent or misappropriation of any moneys belonging to him and there does not seem to be any justifying cause for holding that he is not a person aggrieved by an order which dismisses his complaint.

45. The question arises as to whether the Advocate-General is a person aggrieved because the disciplinary committee does not take the same view of the matter as himself, be it for or against the advocate. To place the Advocate-General in the category of "persons aggrieved" one must be able to say that the disciplinary committee committed an error which it was his duty to attempt to set right because of some function attributable to him as the Advocate-General or some obligation cast upon him by the Act or the general law of the land to safeguard and maintain standards of conduct of advocates laid down by the Bar Council of India.

46. Generally speaking, a person can be said to be aggrieved by an order which is to his detriment, pecuniary or otherwise or causes him some prejudice in some form or other. A person who is not a party to a litigation has no right to appeal merely because the judgment or order contains some adverse remarks against him. But it has been held in a number of cases that a person who is not a party to suit may prefer an appeal with the leave of the appellate court and such leave would not be refused where the judgment would be binding on him under Explanation 6 to section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We find ourselves unable to take the view that because a person has been given notice of some proceedings wherein he is given a right to appear and make his submissions, he should without more have a right of appeal from an order rejecting his contentions or submissions. An appeal is a creature of statute and if a statute expressly gives a person a right to appeal, the matter rests there.

47. Innumerable statutes both in England and in India give the right of appeal to "a person aggrieved" by an order made and the provisions of such statutes have to be construed in each case to find out whether the person preferring an appeal falls within that expression. As was observed in (1881) 7 Q.B.D. 465 the words "person aggrieved" are "ordinary English words which are to have the ordinary meaning put upon them". According to Halsbury's Laws of England (Third Edn. Vol. 25) page. 293 foot-note "h", "the expression is nowhere defined and must be construed by reference to the context of the enactment in which it appears and all the circumstances."

Attempts have however from time to time been made to define the expression in various cases. In Ex parte Sidebotham; In re Sidebotham, (1880) 14 Ch D 458 at p. 465 it was observed by James, L. J.

"But the words "person aggrieved" do not really mean a man who is disappointed of a benefit which he might have received if some other order had been made. A "person aggrieved" must be a man who has suffered a legal grievance, a man against whom a decision has been pronounced which has wrongfully deprived him of something or wrongfully refused him something, or wrongfully affected his title to something."

48. The above definition of James, LJ was described by Esher M. R. in Ex parte Official Receiver; In Re Reed, Bowen & Co. (1887) 19 QBD 174 at p. 178 as not "an exhaustive definition". His Lordship added:

"It is an affirmative definition of a person who may appeal, and at all events it includes a person who has asked for a decision for which he had a right to ask, and has been wrongfully refused."

49. (1890) 25 QBD 357 at p. 361 was a case of an appeal by an informant against the judgment of a justice of the peace upon the hearing of an information or complaint by the vestry of the parish against a person for unlawfully and wilfully obstructing the free passage of a certain highway. The relevant section provided:

"If any person shall think himself aggrieved by . . . any order, conviction, judgment, or determination made, or by any matter or thing done by any justice or other person in pursuance of this Act . . . such person may appeal to quarter sessions." In holding that an informant had no right of appeal Lord Coleridge C. J. said:

"Is a person who cannot succeed in getting a conviction against another a person aggrieved?" He may be annoyed at finding that what he thought was a breach of law is not a breach of law; but is he "aggrieved" because some one is held not to have done wrong? It is difficult to see that the section meant anything of that kind."

In Rex v. London Quarter Sessions; Ex parte Westminster Corporation, (1951) 2 KB 508, a borough council whose cancellation of the registration of a street trader had been reversed by a Magistrate on appeal by the trader concerned under Section 25 of the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1947 was held not to be a person aggrieved by an order of a court of summary jurisdiction within the meaning of Section 64 of the Act. The argument advanced on behalf of the corporation was that it had a public administrative duty to perform in the regulation of the streets and having been interfered with in the execution of that duty by the decision of the Magistrate, they were persons aggrieved by his order. One of the grounds for refusal of the application by Lord Goddard, C. J. was that the order made did not directly affect the borough council in such a way as to make them "a person aggrieved" within the meaning of the section. According to the learned Chief Justice what the statute did was "to substitute the opinion of the Magistrate for the opinion of a borough council". It was said that the court of summary jurisdiction had to take into account the same matters as the borough council had to take into account, and if the court thinks that the cancellation of the licence is not justified, it can restore the licence to the street trader. If the court of summary jurisdiction refuses to grant a licence, then the street trader is a person aggrieved, because his livelihood is affected, or an order is made directly affecting him.

50. The case of (1929) 2 KB 440 at p. 444 was relied upon by counsel appearing for the Advocate-General of Maharashtra to support his argument that even a person who had not proprietary or pecuniary interest in the subject matter of the litigation might be a person aggrieved so as to give him a right to appeal. The statute in this case was however worded very differently from the statutes which came up for consideration in the cases noted earlier. Section 68 (1) of the Public Health Act, 1926 laid down that:

"Where for the purpose of relieving or preventing congestion of traffic it appears to the local authority to be necessary to provide within their district suitable parking places for vehicles"

then that authority may, subject to certain conditions, provide those parking places and might acquire land suitable for use as a parking place. The proviso to the section however laid down that no such order shall authorise the use of any part of a street so as unreasonably to prevent access to any premises adjoining the street, or the use of the street by any person entitled to the use thereof, or so as to be a nuisance, or be made in respect of any part of a street without the consent of the authority or person responsible for the maintenance of the street. Sub-section (2) of the section provided that where a local authority proposes to acquire land for the purpose of using it as a parking place they are to give notice of the proposal specifying the land and notify the date within which any objection is to be sent to them and the notice is to state that a right of appeal was conferred by the section. Sub-section (3) provided that before carrying into effect any proposal of which notice was required to be given the local authority shall consider any objection which was sent to them in writing. There was no limit there as to the kind of person making the objection or the kind of objection which might be raised. The respondent a rate-payer, duly gave notice under sub-section (3) on various grounds but he did not allege the infringement of any personal legal right and he objected in his capacity as a rate-payer and as a member of the public on grounds common to them all. The urban council considered the objection and informed him of their decision to proceed with the scheme. The respondent appealed to petty sessions which allowed his objection. The appellant appealed to quarter sessions and took the preliminary objection that the respondent was not a person aggrieved because he had alleged no infringement of any legal right personal to him.

51. Referring to the dicta of James, L. J., Esher M. R. and Lopes L. J. in the above cases Lord Hewart, C. J. observed:

"I think this respondent did ask for a decision for which he had a right to ask. He did give notice of an objection of which he was entitled to give notice, ... but the person making the objection is not to have an appeal unless he satisfies two conditions:

(1) that he is the author of the objection, and (2) that he is aggrieved by the refusal in the sense that he has a special and individual right infringed. It seems to me that upon the fair construction of this sub-section, which is by no means a common kind of statutory provision, what is meant is that a person may make an objection and is entitled to a decision upon it, and if the decision is adverse to him, he may, if he thinks fit and subject to the usual consequences, appeal from it to a petty sessional court, and so appealing, may, in consequence of other statutory provisions, appeal, if need be, to the court of quarter sessions." According to Avory J.:

"There is no limit there (in sub-section (3)) of the kind of person or the kind of objection which may be made. It proceeds that after so considering the objection, they are to give notice of their decision to the person by whom the objection was made, and any person who is aggrieved by such decision may appeal. I cannot help thinking that on the plain words of that statute it was intended to give a right of appeal to any person who has made an objection to the proposal and has received notice that that objection has been overruled."

52. In (1959) 1 QB 384 at p. 390, Lord Parker C. J. remarked that it was easier to say what will not constitute a person aggrieved than it was to say what "person aggrieved" included. He observed that a person was not aggrieved when being a public body it had been frustrated in the performance of one of its public duties. He amplified this by saying that:

"If costs have been awarded in a case against a local authority, it is clear on the authorities that the local authority would be an aggrieved person. Equally, if the result of the decision has been to put some legal burden on the public body concerned, that has been held to make it a person aggrieved."

According to Donovan J. in the same case—

"The word 'aggrieved' connotes some legal grievance, for example, a deprivation of something, an adverse effect on the title to something, and so on, and I cannot see that this is so here. The local planning authority has simply been told that it cannot enforce the discontinuance of the present use of this land by the appellant by means of an enforcement notice under Section 23."

53. If one is to be guided merely by the provisions of the Advocates Act it is difficult to see how the Advocate-General can be a person aggrieved because the State Bar Council takes the view, whatever be its reasoning, that an advocate on its roll has not been guilty of any misconduct. The entertaining of complaints, the inquiry into them and the punishment to be meted out to the advocate are all concerns of the Bar Council. The Advocate-General no doubt is entitled to a hearing if the complaint is not rejected summarily. The statute expects him to take a fair and impartial attitude. He has to render all assistance to the Bar Council so that a proper decision may be arrived at. His role is not that of a prosecutor nor is he a defence counsel on behalf of the advocate. He is not interested in getting the advocate punished any more than he is interested in seeing that the character of a fellow member of the Bar is cleared even if his conduct be unworthy of an advocate. The Act does not make it obligatory on him to take part in the proceedings where he thinks that the facts of the case are so plain that his assistance is not called for. It is only when he feels that a case requires a careful investigation and proper elucidation of the facts or the exposition of the law on the subject that he is called upon to render all assistance in the proceedings. When he chooses to do so he does his duty by appearing at the hearing and putting before the disciplinary committee the facts in their proper perspective and advancing the proper inference to be drawn therefrom. Once he does so there is an end of the matter so far as he is concerned. He cannot have any grievance because the decision of the Bar Council is against his submission or not to his liking.

54. The question then arises as to whether any duty is cast on the Advocate-General by reason of his position to question the decision of the Bar Council if he feels it in the general interest of the members of the Bar or a wider public to do so. Article 165 (2) of the Constitution epitomizes the functions and duties of the Advocate-General in the following words:

"It shall be the duty of the Advocate-General to give advice to the Government of the State upon such legal matters and to perform such other duties of a legal character, as may from time to time be referred or assigned to him by the Governor and to discharge the functions conferred upon him by or under the Constitution or any other law for the time being in force."

A notable instance of his statutory duties is furnished by Order XXVII-A of the Code of Civil Procedure. By the provisions of Section 91 of the Code of Civil Procedure no suit for a declaration and injunction in the case of a public nuisance can be instituted except by him or with his consent. Similar powers are given and duties cast on him by Section 92, C. P. C. in the case of trusts created for public purposes. Section 526-A of the Code of Criminal Procedure gives an Advocate-General power to apply to the court for the committal or transfer of a case to the High Court where any person subject to the Naval Discipline Act or to the Army Act or to the Air Force Act is accused of any of the offences specified therein. It is not open to the Advocate-General to intervene in any suit or legal proceeding apart from the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure because he thinks public interest is involved in the matter.

55. Treating the matter historically, it may be said that in many respects the position of an Advocate-General before 1950 was very similar to that of the Attorney-General in England. Sections 100 and 111 of a Statute of 1813, 53 George III, C. 155, enabled the Advocates-General to exhibit to the respective Supreme Courts of Judicature at any of the Presidencies or to the Recorder's Court at Bombay any information or informations for breaches of Revenue laws etc. as might be taken by the Attorney-General in the court of Exchequer in England or in the nature of action or actions at law or of a bill or bills in equity as occasion might require against any person or persons residing within such jurisdiction as His Majesty's Attorney-General for the time being was by law authorised to exhibit. The wording of Section 111 shows that its object was to dispel doubts which had arisen about the competency of the Advocate-General or Principal Law Officer of the East India Company to take such action. Section 114 of the Government of India Act, 1915 empowered the Advocate-General for any Presidency to take on behalf of His Majesty such proceedings as might be taken by His Majesty's Attorney-General in England. Section 65 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1935 laid down that it was the duty of the Advocate-General to give advice to the Provincial Government upon such legal matters and to perform such other duties of a legal character as may from time to time be referred or assigned to him by the Governor.

56. The position of the Attorney-General in England is stated by Hood Phillips on Constitutional and Administrative Law (Fourth Edition) at p. 315 to be as follows:

"The Law Officers consist of the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General for England, and the Lord Advocate and Solicitor-General for Scotland. They are regarded as the heads of the Bar in their respective countries, and as such are referees on points of professional etiquette."

The learned author goes on to note at p. 317:

"The Advocate-General represents the Crown in civil proceedings in which it is specially concerned. His consent is necessary for the prosecution of certain offences, e.g. under the Official Secrets Acts. In criminal proceedings he or the Solicitor-General or their deputies, prosecute in important cases. It is the practice for the Attorney-General to lead in treason and important constitutional cases. He may also file ex officio criminal informations, though this procedure is now rarely used. He may stop the trial of an indictment by entering a nolle prosequi. He may also take over certain proceedings on the relation of private individuals (relator actions) e.g. public nuisance etc. The Attorney-General's procedural privileges include the right to demand a trial at Bar (i.e. now, before a Divisional Court), and the right to choose the venue for any Civil or Criminal proceedings in which the Crown is concerned".

Anson in his treatise on Law and Custom of the Constitution Volume II, Part I (4th Edition, 1935) describes the Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General and the Lord Advocate and the Solicitor-General for Scotland as the chiefs of the legal profession in their respective countries and states that in England and Northern Ireland they represent the Bar when the Bar takes collective action. So far as England is concerned neither the Attorney-General nor the Solicitor-General appears to have had for a very long time any function to discharge or any duty to perform when the conduct of a barrister or a solicitor was called in question. The power of inquiry was delegated by the Judges to the Inns of Court so far as barristers are concerned and as regards solicitors the matter has for some time been delegated to the Law Society.

57. It may not also be out of place to note the history of the legislation in India with regard to enquiries against members of the legal profession prior to the Act of 1961. Under clause 10 of the Letters Patent of the High Court of Calcutta of the year 1865 the High Court was to have power to make rules for the qualification and admission of proper persons to be advocates, vakils and attorneys at law and was to be empowered to remove or suspend them from practice on reasonable cause. The Letters Patents of other High Courts contained provisions. (sic) The Legal Practitioners Act, 1879 appears to have been the earliest Indian Statute on the subject. Under S. 13 of this Act the High Court was empowered after such enquiry as it thought fit, to suspend or dismiss any pleader or muktyar who was guilty of fraudulent or grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty. The Bar Councils came into existence for the first time under the Bar Councils Act, 1926. But even under this Act the power to reprimand, suspend or remove from practice any advocate of the High Court charged with professional or other misconduct was left with the High Court under S. 10 (1). Section 10 (2) laid down the procedure to be adopted by the High Court when a complaint was made to it by any Court or by the Bar Council or by any other person that an advocate had been guilty of misconduct. The High Court could summarily reject the complaint or refer the case for enquiry to the Bar Council or after consultation with the Bar Council refer it to the Court of a District Judge and it also might of its own motion refer any case where it had reason to believe that any advocate had been so guilty. Under S. 11 it was the duty of a committee of the Bar Council to inquire into a complaint made under Section 10. Under Section 12 (2) of the Act the finding of a Tribunal on an inquiry referred to the Bar Council was to be forwarded to the High Court through the Bar Council and the finding of a District Court on such inquiry was to be forwarded to the High Court direct with a copy to the Bar Council. Section 12 (3) of the Act contained a provision somewhat similar to S. 35 (3) of the Act of 1961. The hearing was however to take place before the High Court, which had to give notice of the date fixed for the purpose to the advocate concerned, to the Bar Council and to the Advocate-General and to afford them an opportunity of being heard before orders were passed in the case. Under the Act of 1926 the Advocate-General appeared on the scene only after the Bar Council had recorded its finding. The significant departure in the Act of 1961 from the analogous provision of the Act of 1926 is that the Advocate-General is given notice of hearing of the case. By itself this cannot affect any change in his position as regards an inquiry into the conduct of an advocate. It would be reasonable to hold that while passing the Statutes of 1926 and 1961 the Legislature thought that the Advocate-General should be heard inasmuch as he occupied the position of a general referee on points of professional etiquette very much like the Attorney-General in England.

58. However that may be, once he does the duty enjoined upon him by the statute of making such submissions as he thinks proper at the hearing his functions qua the inquiry came to an end. As a referee he has no further interest in the matter. If the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council makes an order against the advocate which the Advocate-General considers harsh and unreasonable in the circumstances of the case, he is not called upon to file an appeal to protect the interests of the advocate. Neither is he interested in prosecuting the matter further if he takes the view that the punishment meted is not commensurate with the misconduct of the advocate.

59. Elaborate reference was made at the Bar to the decision of the Privy Council in 1961 AC 617 at p. 620. In that case the conduct of the respondent, a member of the English Bar admitted to practice as a barrister and solicitor of the Supreme Court of the Gambia was found to be dishonourable and as such an order striking his name off the roll of the court was made by the deputy Judge with a direction that it should be reported to the Masters of the Bench of the Inn to which he belonged. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the Gambia had criticised the conduct of the barrister severely in the course of a trial held before him and had sent a copy of his judgment to the Attorney-General of the Gambia. The Attorney-General served a notice of motion on the barrister for an enquiry to be made by the Chief Justice but as the Chief Justice was the only Judge of that Court he recommended that some one other than himself should be appointed as a deputy judge to hold the inquiry. The Deputy Judge ordered his name to be struck off the roll. His order was however set aside by the West African Court of Appeal not on merits but on the ground that a deputy judge had only jurisdiction to represent the Chief Justice in the exercise of his judicial powers and according to the Court of Appeal the power to strike the name of a legal practitioner off the roll was not a judicial power. The Attorney-General of the Gambia appealed to Her Majesty in Council. The question of the maintainability of the appeal was also canvassed before the Board. With regard to inquiries into the conduct of barristers and solicitors in the Crown colonies Lord Denning, who delivered the judgment of the Privy Council, said —

"by the common law of England the Judges have the right to determine who shall be admitted to practice as barristers and solicitors, and as incidental thereto the judges have the right to suspend or prohibit from practice. In England this power has for a very long time been delegated, so far as barristers are concerned, to the Inns of Court; and, for a much shorter time, so far as solicitors are concerned, to the Law Society. In the colonies the Judges have retained the power in their own hands, . . . " His Lordship went on to remark at p. 631:

"When the judges exercise this power to suspend or expel, they do not decide a suit between the parties. There is no prosecutor as in a criminal case, nor any plaintiff as in a civil suit. The judges usually act on their own initiative, ex mero motu, on information which has come to their notice, or to the notice of one or other of them in the course of their duties." Further,
